Who would not like to have in their possession the high and lofty one, whose name is Holy? Men may boast of a high position in life; the fashionable may enjoy themselves in a fine appearance, the young may sport themselves on fanciful pleasures, all of which are transient. There is nothing so real as the wisdom and the power of God. There is nothing like the possession of the Holy Spirit. If a good feeling can be attained, who can have it but the christian? is there any position in life any society or worldly pleasure or precious treasure, that can equal the greatness and the goodness of God? if there is any honor, if there is any happiness, any pleasure or real enjoyment, is it not with those who are of a contrite and humble spirit, where God worketh all in all?

MARY ROHRER.

TEMPER AND HEALTH.—Good temper, with the majority of mankind, is dependent upon good health; good health upon good digestion; good digestion upon wholesome, well-prepared food, eaten in peace and pleasantness. Ill-cooked, untidy meals, are a great cause of bad temper and many a moral wrong; and a person of sensitive physique may be nursed into settled hypochondria by living in close rooms, where the sweet, fresh air and sunshine are determinedly shut out, and the foul air as determinedly shut in.

Little faults become great, and even monstrous in our eyes, in proportion as the pure light of God increases in us; just as the sun, in rising, reveals the true dimension of objects which were dimly and confusedly discerned during the night.

What We should Do.

My dear brethren and sisters, I sincerely feel that it is good for us to meet together at the house of God. There it is that we can mingle our voices together in singing God's praises. None of us enter that house carelessly or unconcernedly ; but rather should come, each one with an offering, and all should pray in behalf of our ministering brethren, and lend our efforts to promote the good cause. We should pray for our dear friends, young and old, that are living strangers to God and his grace, and induce them to turn from their evil ways, and search the scriptures, for in them they find eternal life. We should not let disagreeable weather prevent attending at the house of the Lord : nothing but sickness should hinder us from going, for none of us feel what a great blessing we are deprived of until we are obliged, in consequence of affliction, to stay away from the place of worship, when it is impossible for us to get there. I can tell from experience that it is the greatest disappointment I ever realized, to be obliged to remain at home from meeting. Again, we should always be careful to examine ourselves very closely when we enter the house of the Lord, to ascertain whether we ourselves are right, before we examine our brethren and sisters. I am sorry to say that some of our brethren and sisters seem to examine each other in the church too closely ; and it has caused me some bitter tears. We should set ourselves in order first ; and when we see wherein they err, we should point out their faults to them privately, and admonish them. We should have a better motive in view. We should be thinking more about heavenly and divine things, than the faults of our brethren ; but rather pray God to give us grace to help each other, and never absent ourselves from meeting, to go visiting ; for if we are indolent and negligent, how can we expect our neighbors and young friends to attend worship. We should set the example for others to follow ; for there is nothing affords me greater pleasure than to see a large attendance at meeting, and I know it affords the ministering brethren great pleasure to address a large congregation. If I were to go to the house of the Lord and there were none to administer to the people, I would feel disappointed ; and I know that, when they are present, and not many people there, they feel sorry to see that people are so negligent. If we absent ourselves one Sunday, it will not be hard for us to stay away two ; and finally we would rather stay at home, or visit a friend, than go to meeting. Therefore let us resolve that nothing shall allow us to absent ourselves from meeting, save affliction, and surely goodness and mercy shall follow us all the days of our life. Brethren and sisters pray for me, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord forever. Always bear in mind that, when we are attending the house of the Lord, we are laying up treasures where neither moth nor rust can corrupt ; and then we will be ready to exclaim with the poet,

"Ever hail, blessed temple, abode of my Lord !
I will turn to thee often, to hear from his word.
I will walk to thine altar, with those that I love ;
And rejoice in the prospects revealed from above."

Why is It ?

Although inconsistent with the word of God, yet I hear, or hear of, brethren making use of the worldly appellation, Mr., when saluting or speaking of certain brethren.

Now permit me, to say, as a well-wisher of your future welfare, this thing "ought not so to be." We have no scripture evidence in favor of such a term. I claim we have no scripture within the lids of the New Testament that justifies us in applying the term even to those outside of the church. We are commanded to not conform to the world, (Rom 12), and in another place, to keep ourselves "unspotted from the world" (James 1 : 2) ; and I would like to know how we can keep ourselves "unspotted from the world" when we utter something that we can not support by divine truth Paul says, Heb. 2 : 11, "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one ; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." Can it be that we are ashamed to call them brethren ? Brethren, I am persuaded better things of you. I think a little instruction given by those who know better will avail much. As for my part, I think it is tolerated for want of instruction. Hence the great importance of instructing them.

One more point and then I am done. John in the third epistle and eleventh verse says, "Greet the brethren by name."

Here is an imperative command that we must call them by name.

For example, suppose I approach a brother by the name of John, it is my duty to call him John, or brother John, and not to say Mr. John.

Remember when we Mr. a brother we are doing something that Christ through Paul did not command us to do. Therefore I will ask the question, did Paul, when speaking to, or speaking of brethren, ever use any term but the name, or brother, or brethren ? I would like the brethren give their views on the above subject.

Why is It ?

Why is it that the Brethren do not hold more meetings ? why do they only have general meeting every two weeks, and then keep up so long that the mind has too much to keep, and all is forgotten long before another meeting ? Why not a little at a time, and oftener ? which the mind can much easier keep. Why don't the ministers change from place to place more than they do, and give the people a desire to come to meeting and hear what that strange preacher is going to say ? Why is it that the church's don't have (or elect) more ministers than they do, and have them "trained," so that when one has a special call he can go, or soon send one in his place, that a funeral may be attended, that an applicant may be baptized, that an appointment may be filled, that the whole congregation may not be disappointed because the minister has failed to come. Why is it, that member's come together at a place of worship, and instead of singing praises, and offering thanks and adoration unto God for the blessings and privileges they enjoy, they rather prefer talking about worldly affairs until time to take up meeting ? for which is the most acceptable in the sight of God ?

Scraps of History.

It is frequently asserted that baptism was, according to the historical accounts given, performed by an immersion of the whole body in water. But there are, what are called a single and a tripple action in baptism, or one action in three names, or an action to each one of the three names. The latter is what the Brethren practice, knowing, however, that it is repeatedly said, and consequently by many believed, that we have no church historians, nor church fathers, that say anything in favor of our mode of baptizing. I have a few scraps to offer to my brethren which I hope and pray may prove useful to them. These were gathered from books written by our single immersionist friends. I shall commence with the seventeenth century, and then travel up the stream as far as my research will allow me to go; and then let some other brother trace it still farther back.

Chamber's Cyclopedia, or Dictionary of Arts and Sciences; London, 1786: "Baptism, in Theology; formed from the Greek baptizo of bapto—I dip or plunge; a rite or ceremony by which persons are initiated into the profession of the Christian religion. The practice of the western church is, to sprinkle the water on the head or face of the person to be baptized, except in the Church of Milan, in whose ritual it is ordered that the head of the infant be plunged three times into the water; the minister at the same time pronouncing the words, 'I baptize thee in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost'—importing that by this ceremony the person baptized is received among the professors of that religion, which God, the Father of all, revealed to mankind by the ministry of his Son, and confirmed by the miracles of his Spirit. A tripple immersion was first used, and continued for a long time: this was to signify either the three days that our Savior lay in the grave, or the three persons in the Trinity. But it was afterwards laid aside, because the Arians used it: it was thought proper to plunge but once." "In the work of John Floyer, on Cold Bathing, page 50, it is mentioned that the English church practiced immersion down to the beginning of the seventeenth century; when a change to the method of sprinkling gradually took place. As a confirmation of this, it may be mentioned that the first liturgy, in 1547, enjoins a trine immersion, in case the child is not sickly: Augusti, ut sup., page 229.

James Sadolet, a learned writer, of Italy, who was created Cardinal of the Roman Catholic church in 1536, and whom Erasmus very justly styled, "a notable ornament of his age," in his comment on Rom. 7: 4—8, says: "Our trine immersion in water at baptism, and our trine emersion, denote that we are buried with Christ in the faith of the true Trinity, and that we rise again with Christ in the same belief."

The Manuale ad usum Savum, printed 1530, the 21st of Henry VIII., orders, "Let the priest baptize him (the candidate) by dipping in the water thrice."

So decrees the Common Prayer Book of Edward VI., 1549: "The Priest shall dip it in the water thrice."

Watson, a Papist Bishop, in 1558, the last of the Queen's reign, published a volume on the sacraments, in which he says, "Though the old ancient tradition of the church hath been from the beginning to dip the child three times, it is sufficient."

Muraton, the celebrated Italian antiquarian, says: "In a very ancient antiphonary of the metropolitan library at Mediolanum, written about the year 1150, which formerly belonged to the canon-law of the Valley of Travalia, the ceremonies of baptism on the holy Sabbath are recited, from which I have gathered these few;" and, after giving some extracts relating to the services which precede the rite itself, he adds: "Then, in describing baptism, trine immersion is prescribed."

Photius, Patriarch of Constantinople, A. D. 880, who was by far the greatest man of that age, from whom, indeed, it has been commonly styled "Seculum Photianum"—the Photian age, says: "And he (the apostle) beautifully said, not, 'we are planted together in death,' but, 'in the likeness of death.' For it is a likeness of death we have in baptism, not bodily death. For the three immersions and emersions of baptism, signify death and resurrection.—Oecumen, vol. 1, p. 276, Paris ed., 1630.

Flaccus Alcuinus, an eminent scholar, and, according to the English historian, William of Malmesbury, "the best English divine after Bede and Adhelme," and who was the confidant instructor and advisor of Charlemagne, wrote a brief book in the latter part of the eighth century, in which he says: "The priest shall baptize the candidate by trine immersion, with only one invocation of the holy Trinity, saying thus: I baptize thee in the name of the Father; (immersing him once), and of the Son, (immersing again), and of the Holy Ghost, (immersing a third time). Alcuini Lib, Divin, Offic.

John Damascenus, a Greek writer, celebrated for his talents and learning, and an illustrious father of the church in the first part of the eighth century, says: "For by the three immersions, baptism signifies the three days of the Lord's burial."

Leo I., surnamed the Great, who was at the head of the Roman church in A. D. 440, says: "In the regular administration of baptism, death also takes place in the destruction of sin, and the trine immersion resembles the three days' burial, and the rising up from the water is an image of one coming forth from the sepulchre."

Leo. Mag. Epist. IV, (Nood Edit. XVI.) cap. 3. The Abyssinian Ritual, which was composed as late as the fourth or fifth century, and used for many centurios, contains the following direction: "The priest takes them and immerses them three times, saying: I baptize thee, &c."

The Dragon in Wrath.

Upwards of 600 years the primitive Church struggled against innovations, until the Bishop of Rome got the ascendency over all others, by the Secular power being added to his ecclesiastical, about the year A. D. 606. Then the Church had to flee into the "wilderness," i. e. hide herself as best she could. The flood which the Serpent cast, can be nothing more or less than his pernicious doctrine, which the earthly-minded swallowed, and consequently did not reach "the woman," The true Christians were still the peaceable, unassuming men and women; and constituted that class who were non-comforming, non-resistant, truthful, truth-loving people. And those who drank of the blood which the Serpent cast; carried their christianity with fire and sword into all the world. Here starts the "Beast" which John saw, Rev. 13. His adherents are called Christians, and he is called the Vicar of Christ.

The second beast may be none other than the spirit in the Reformation which seemed to have led the Reformer into the same eror, though it may have seemed that it gave a deadly wound, yet it was soon healed; for persecution, intoleration, creeds and disciplines were added to the word of the Lord, till a mist of delusion covered the pure light of the Gospel. And when men's opinions were made a test of fellowship, all that would not yield thereto fared, under the second no better than under the first. And to this day there are those who make immages like unto the first beast, by setting up their man-made doctrine, and making men worship the same.

But the power of the first beast came to an end at the expiration of 42 months, which is equal to "a time, times, and half time," or "a thousand two hundred and three score-days." Thus adding 606 to 1260 shows the year 1866 as the time of the "Woman's flight into the wilderness; consequently the power of the first beast to persecute hath ceased and the "Woman" is out of the wilderness; and if I may be so presumtuous without offence to claim this to be the Church of which it is now universally said: "It not only teaches, but carries out the simple doctrine of the gospel, both in the letter and the spirit; and which is sought for and inquired after, everywhere through our wide spread land." Will it be wrong, then, for me, in humble simplicity, to this "Woman," Go forth in thy might Go forth in thy womanly beauty. Take thy robe of righteousness; go and clothe the naked, not with figleaves, the work of thy own hands, but with the coat of skins, which the Lord God himself by slaying His own dear son. O woman! thou wast not made to destroy life, but thou art the mother of all living. Life is what thou art to impart. Then send thy servants forth to the lands and hedges and bring them into the highway of holiness and into the sunshine of the Gospel from their hiding places. The sons and daughters of Adam are anxious to be enlightened everywhere. Go carry the lamp of life to the blind and the oil of gladness to the disconsolate. Let all the children of that godly family unite to do the great work of the Lord. Why do you stand idle? Go into the vinyeard. Work, work! it is the eleventh hour; it will soon be midnight. He that is to come, will come and will not tarry. And oh! ye servants of the Lord, and ye children of the one family, quit your hair splitting; quit your quarrelling about who shall be the greatest. For if ever the Dragon was wroth with the "Woman," he is now; for he sees her in travail. Sons and daughters are born unto her by the score. Though he has not the power to persecute and to kill her sons and her daughters, yet he can raise a mutiny in the family, dividing the house against itself. Hear ye watchmen on the walls of Zion, if ye se the enemy approaching, and ye are not my people, and they are slain, their blood will I require at your hands. And ye shepherds of my flock that muddy my water, that my flock can not drink, and trample under foot my sweet pastures of love that my lambs can not become strong, but yet turn them out because their fleece does not please you; if the wolf shall catch and destroy them, I will hold you to account Hear me, my servants, and all! Why do you not make the fat weathers of my flock divide of their superabundance with the less favored? Why do you not take the tender lambs in your arms and bear them along over the rugged hills of temptation? But nay, you slay them at the tender age of six months or a year, because they skip and play a little, and do not look as morose as their dams or their sires. I have said to some of old, "you lay heavy burdens upon others, but you yourself will not touch them with one finger; yea, you have the key of the kingdom of heaven, but yourselves will not enter in, and prevent others from entering." Is not this warning enough? Will you still tempt the Lord? "Thou hypocrite, cast out the bean from thine own eye, then shalt thou see clearly to take the mote out of thy brother's eye."

If ever there was a time for the true professor of the doctrine of Jesus Christ to look about, and to disentangle himself from all that is of man, and to adhere strictly to the pure and simple teachings of the Master, it is now. Nothing more nor less will keep the body together. People that were deluded with the inventions of men, want to throw off their shackles, and nothing less nor anything more will be accepted by those that are in earnest.

Lawful Interest.

In the C. F. C., Vol. 8, No. 18, we have an article headed "Lawful Interest," written by brother M. Hady, in which article he is very presumptive. I would just say here, that with reluctance I write at this time. When I sent my answer to brother N. Blough's query, I entertained no idea that I should ever have to say anything in defence of the same; but as I have been misrepresented by brother Hady, I feel it my duty to defend myself against all unwarranted allegations or misrepresentations.

Brother Hady introduces his article by saying, "brother E. J. Meyers' answer does not meet brother Noah B, Blough's query." Let us see. If I understood the query it was this: "Is it right to take more than lawful interest from poor brethren?" My answer was, that it was not right to take more than lawful interest from rich brethren, much less from poor ones. Now whether the answer does or does not meet the query, I am willing that the readers of the C. F. C. shall decide, and not brother H.

Brother Hady then says, "Brother M., as well as we all, knows, it would be an impossibility to compel a rich brother to pay more than legal interest." This presumption is an idea that I never entertained, and don't think I ever shall, unless brother H. will prove it, for the reason that I know of a good many rich brethren and can cite you to them if necessary, who pay more than six per cent. interest.

But says brother H., "Brother M., and those who concur with him, may say, The law says what two parties agree upon is lawful." Now then, if the law says, what two parties agree upon is lawful, then it cannot possibly be unlawful. Now whether any brethren concur with me or not, I cannot tell; and how brother H., got the idea I do not know; for I never expressed myself pro or con. The readers will recollect that all I asked of brother H., in my answer to brother Blough's query, was, that he should give us the law on the subject, and all the balance of his article was uncalled for.

Brother Hady wants me to answer the following questions: "Why is it that the most sincere, most pious brethren in our state, are opposed to taking more than six per cent." How do you know this to be the case. The allegation stands without proof, and therefore I do not accept of it.

Again he says, "While on the other hand, we have those who seem to build all their hope of eternal salvation on outward appearances, such as a certain shape or pattern of dress, cut off hair, or just because they are called brother, who take all they can, lawful or unlawful." This I think is another unwarranted allegation, and is scarcely worthy of our notice. I never thought that the "pattern of dress or the cut of hair," had anything to do with interest, whether lawful or unlawful; but let me here just say, if I should ever get so circumstanced that I should have to borrow money, I would prefer borrowing from those very brethren who have the pattern of dress and cut of hair in preference to those who, like brother H. and I, have no claims on the pattern of dress or cut of hear, "but like to be called brother," I for one do not believe we have a brother in the brotherhood, "who would take all he can get unlawfully."

And now in conclusion I would just say in brother Hady's own language, that, if there are any brethren, "who give the world cause to blackmail the holy church of Jesus, and at the same time bring blush to his followers," it must be by just such brethren as have no claims on the pattern of dress or cut of hair, but perhaps in our walk and conversation, (if not in these, surely in writing such articles as these, and having them published and sent forth throughout these UnitedStates, and perhaps farther, to the Brethren and to the world. If this does not give the world cause to say, "these Dunkard's are the most inconsistent people," I should like to know what does. Here I shall leave brother Hady without noticing him any farther on the subject.

Conrad Beissel.

From what has already passed through the columns of the COMPANION, some, perhaps, would infer that the above named person, was the real and legitimate founder of the Seventh-Day Baptists; but such was not the case, as we find churches of these people in England and Germany, in the beginning of the sixteenth century, 200 years before the rise of a similar order in Lancaster county, Pa., under the control of Conrad Beissel. In November, 1671, 54 years before the rise of the latter, we find another similar class, separating from the First-Day Baptists, at Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, and forming themselves into a distinct society; and it is from this period that the Seventh-Day Baptists date their rise and organization in America; although many societies of them existed in the east more than 100 years before.

Conrad Beissel, who appears to have formerly been a Presbyterian, was a native of Germany and a member of the "Dunkard church." Like Stephen Mumford, (who was the founder of the Seventh-Day Baptist society at Newport in 1671), he brought with him across the ocean, these peculiar views, which from the leading religious belief of his followers, and in the year 1725 published a work on the subject of his belief, which produced no little excitement among the Brethren at that time This, however, resulted in some of our members joining his standard, and in 1728 they adopted the seventh day as their day of worship. About four years afterwards they established a Monastic society at Ephrata, and are best known in history as the Ephrata Society of Seventh-Day Baptists.

Some historians have committed a remarkable error, in supposing Beissel to have been the founder of the "Dunkard" church, when he did not become a member of it till sometime after it was established in Germany in the year 1708. The first emigration of brethren to America was in 1719, and it appears that Conrad Beissel either came with these or another colony that arrived in 1722, and soon effected a division in the church, resulting in his monastic established in Lancaster county, Pa.

A few Thoughts.

We are all sinners by nature since Adam's transgression.

First, we are born in sins. The Psalmist saith, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." Psa. 51 : 5. Also Gal. 3 : 22, "The scripture hath concluded all under sin."

Second, we were made sinners by the law of God through our own transgressions, where God saith, "Thou shalt not covet." Rom. 7 : 7. That law we have all more or less violated by following after the desires of our flesh.

But now we are commanded to repent for our past transgressions, and believe on Jesus Christ, (faith in Jesus means obey him), and our sins shall all be blotted out; we are new creatures; "all things are passed away, behold all things are become new." 2 Cor. 10 : 22. We are free now after the inner man; our desires and affections are changed; we are new-born babes in Christ Jesus. We make a solemn vow with God to keep all his commandments as long as we live. The apostle saith, "Have we a natural, so have we also a spiritual body." Our flesh and blood is not changed. Therefore Paul saith, "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal bodies, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." Rom. 6 : 12. And further, Paul to Rom. 7 : 20, "Now if I do that I would not it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me," &c. Read to the end of said chapter. Therefore he saith, 1 Cor. 9 : 32, "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection," &c. We also read we shall become kings and priests, not rulers over our fellow-beings, but rulers over our passions and bad habits, and make them servants like the Israelites made their enemies serve as wood choppers and water carriers.

Reflections.

Spring has appeared again; and as we look out over the fields, we see the beautiful green grass, and the fruit tress which are blossoming for fruit. The flowers of the garden are bursting forth in all their loveliness and beauty. All these are the blessings of God strewn around us. We cannot thank him enough for his goodness, which he has bestowed upon us. We are yet amongst the living, enjoying the blessings which he places before us while we are upon the earth; and oh! should we not prepare ourselves for the eternal world, that we may enjoy the things which God has prepared for us in heaven? for we know that the time will soon come when we will have to leave this world. Then how necessary that we prepare for death; for to-day we may live, and to-morrow be laid under the clods of the valley. To-day let us hear the voice which calls us to enter and labor in the vineyard of the Lord. How thankful we ought to be for the goodness of God, in this, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life.

Feet-Washing a Twofold Command.

The Savior enjoins, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done unto you." John 13: 14, 16.

The first part of this double command is that his disciples or followers wash one another's feet; the second that they do it according to his example. Now if obedience to the first part is a duty, the same is true of the second; because the language used in both is equally emphatic. Then if we wash one another's feet, but do it not according to his example, the plain and unavoidable conclusion is, that we are in part disobedient. It will not do to say, "If we perform the ordinance in the right spirit, it will answer, even if the letter is not so strictly followed." With equal propriety might we assert, that sprinkling or pouring will answer for immersion, if done in the proper spirit; but this is not the way in which the Brethren generally teach. Feet-washing, or rather the difference that exists in the mode of its performance, has for some time been a subject of discussion throughout the Brotherhood; and the eldership of the whole church have been convoked to endeavor to settle the matter, "as the peace and prosperity of the fraternity may require." The writer believes improvement is possible, and ought to be made even in the practice of the single mode of this ordinance. Many members have died without ever performing it; although they may have had it frequently administered to themselves: either because they had no opportunity, or were backward to avail themselves of it. This may be said with equal truth of the practice of both modes, and it is a dereliction that should and can be obviated. The great Teacher did not intend this rite to be performed in such a way that it could be possible for any of his people to have their feet washed time after time, and not wash others in turn; for he commands us to "wash one another's feet."

A plan, which is not new, has been revolving in my mind, which if put in practice would not permit a member to participate in a single communion without administering the ordinance in question. This plan if adopted while being a compromise between those who advocate the single mode, and those who contend for the double, would not compromise the word of God, being an emphatic and literal obedience of this double command. It is as follows: Let there be two, three or more benches, with as many basins and towels, provided for each sex. Let as many members take seats on these benches as convenience may dictate. For the sake of explanation, we will designate those on each bench, beginning at one end, by the letters A, B, C, D, &c. All being in readiness, let the administration commence by A on each bench rising and girding him or herself with a towel, and washing and wiping B's feet. Then while B is re-clothing his feet, let A be engaged in unclothing his; after which let A take off the towel and hand it to B, who rising, girds himself, and administers the ordinance to A, handing the basin and towel to C, who in the same way performs the rite reciprocally with D; meanwhile A and B take their seats at the table, two others assuming the places on the benches just vacated by them; and so proceed until all are washed. If there should be an odd number of either sex, or of both; let him or her, who is left unwashed, call on some one who has already performed, to come to his or her aid. A repetition will do no harm, and will enable all to wash one another's feet.

My impression is, that a "towel," which is a long and narrow strip of linen or muslin, would be more convenient than an "apron," because after girding it might be tied in front of the body, in a single or double loose knot, as the case might require, to shorten the ends and prevent them from drabbling in the basin. For the consideration of the brethren who can read German, I will give the 4th and 5th verses of the 13th chapter of John, according to the translation of Leander Van Erz. This corroborates all the English versions, some four or five, which I have examined on this point, in representing Christ as using a towel, and not an apron, to wipe the disciples' feet:

"Er ſtand vom Abendeſſen auf, legte ſein Oberkleid ab, nahm ein Tuch und band es ſich um; goß dann Waſſer in ein Waſchbecken, und fieng an den Jünger die Füſe zu waſchen, und ſie mit dem umgebundenen Tuche abzutrocknen."

The above plan and hints are submitted for the examination of my dear brethren. If they are worth nothing, let them go for what they are worth. If they should prove a peace-offering, of which I have but slight hopes, my highest wish will be attained.

True courage teaches us, in the midst of life's great comforts to be willing to die, and in the midst of its greatest crosses to be willing to live.

To flatter persons adroitly one must know three things—what they are, what they think they are, and what they want other people to think they are.

Fight hard against a hasty temper. Anger will come, but resist it. A spark may set a house on fire; a fit of passion may give you cause to be sorry all your life.

Wisdom and Truth, the offspring of the sky, are immortal; but cunning and deception, the meteors of the earth, after glittering for a moment, must pass away.

Honest and courageous people have very little to say about either courage or honesty. The sun has no need to boast of his brightness nor the moon of her effulgence.—Hosea Ballou.

The avaricious man is like the barren sandy ground of the desert, which sucks all the rain and dews with greediness, but yields no fruitful herbs or plants for the benefit of others.—Zeno.

Sanctification.

For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy, 1 Cor. 7 : 14.

We have every reason to believe that all of Paul's answers, contained in this chapter, grew out of a number of questions, that had been propounded by the brethren. In the 6th of Romans, Paul warns them to flee fornication, and says, "That every sin that a man doeth, is without the body, but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body," hence, the apostle says, "The body of a believer is pure, a fit temple for the Holy Ghost; believers are said to be sanctified, by the blood and spirit of Christ. Peter says, "Through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. Paul shows the relation between Christ and the church, by the relation between husband and wife, and says, that he also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it, with the washing of water by the word. Many more testimonies might be given, but we hope that the above will suffice to prove that sanctification of the members of the church, is of God, and not of man.

The sanctification spoken of in 1 Cor. 7 : 14 is said to be the work of the believing man or woman, and consists in good works, kind words, and holy influences, chaste conversation and prayer. The Apostle says, "What knowest thou, O wife whether thou shalt save thy husband, or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife." Assuming that the first and full meaning of sanctification is not seen in the subject, we must view it from a different stand-point. Webster defines sanctify, to purify, to make holy, to separate, or set apart. It seems to me the Apostle in 1 Cor. 7 : is endeavoring to enlighten the Brethren, concerning the responsibilities of believers, and to cause them to refrain from adultery and fornication. These evils seemed to have existed to an alarming degree. There is another idea connected with our subject, that obtained among the people of God, in the days of the Apostles; namely, that it was unlawful for the believing husband or wife, to abide with the unbelieving wife or husband. Under the law they, the Israelites, were strictly forbidden to marry strangers, or the uncircumcised. Such a marriage, disqualified them for the holy service of God, and sin was entailed upon them, to the third and fourth generations. But the Apostle tells them, there is no necessity for them to separate, for their marriage is legal, and their children holy.

The Apostle reasons, that if it would defile the believing party, to dwell with the unbelieving party; or if sanctification of the blood of Christ, was not sufficient to set you at liberty from sin, without the co-operation of the faith of your wife or husband, the law which is the strength of sin, yet has power over the believer, and your children are unclean, but now are they clean, because your marriage is legal, your children are pure; purchased with a price, and cleansed by the blood of Christ. But Paul does not tell us that they will remain pure; but when they commit sin they will be held responsible. Christ while on the earth blessed little children, and said suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

The Setting Sun.

As the close of day approaches, the great luminary of heaven is seen to descend in the distant west. And as he persues his journey, fulfilling the design of his Creator, he soon becomes invisible to us, and no trace of his brightness and beauty is left to us, save the lingering rays of light which may be seen on the distant horizon. But lost as he appears to be, he will rise in the morning amidst glowing clouds, with renewed brightness and splendor, to illuminate the earth and revive Nature, in all her various departments, for the duties which she must perform in obedience to the command of her allwise Creator.

View the beautiful order of all created nature. One portion, or one created object, subserves or supplies the wants of another. Thus it is with man as with the setting sun. In the close of life, when his days are spent and the evening of life is come, he must give up the things of time, meet the cold and chilly damps of the conquering monster Death. He (his body) must take up his abode in the cold and dismal grave, but not to remain there forever; for, as the sun will rise in the morning, so man will rise in the resurrection, at the sound of Gabriel's trumpet, when it will reverberate through the air, causing all nature to shudder and tremble. Then man must come forth, for the sound of the trumpet will be as animating to all the sons of men as that voice was, "Lazarus, come forth, and he that was dead came forth." Oh, what joy unspeakable, to be raised, clad in angelic purity, prepared to dwell with angels and the redeemed of earth in heaven! But how dreadful will it be for those who have not made the necessary preparation for death! They also must come forth, not to spend an eternity of bliss and happiness with angels in heaven, but to sink beneath the black wave of despair, where joy and happiness are strangers; where the bright star of hope never shines, but instead thereof despair, with all its attendants, reigns in impenetrable gloom and darkness: there to dwell, where black, conglomerated vapors and mists will curl down heavily upon them, and the zigzag lightnings of Almighty wrath will play above, beneath, and all around them; yea, amidst the thundrous roar of smoke and fire they shall dwell! Let us bring this terrible scene to a close.

Pause, ye unreclaimed, and consider your past life: review your past conduct, and see if you have not cause to fear the impending wrath of an insulted God. If so, flee to the outstretched arms of bleeding mercy. In secret plead for pardon and reconciliation, and that humble Savior that expired on Calvary's cross, will join with you in your lamentations for sin. He now sitteth on the mediatorial throne, and he will plead with the Father for you. Be obedient to all his precepts and examples, and when the trumpet shall call you from your grave, you shall rest where sin and sorrow are unknown, and where clouds of darkness will never hide the Sun of Righteousness from your view.

Why is This?

In another column of this week's issue, will be found an article under the above heading, having reference to the use of the term Mister. While it is not particularly objectionable so far as it relates to brethren, we cannot endorse it as regards outsiders, and hence feel like making the following remarks:

Mr. is pronounced Mister, and is an abbreviation of Master. The primary meaning of Master is, "One who has servants or other persons in subjection; one who has any rule or direction over others." It is thus used in the scriptures: "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh." Eph. 6: 5. This epistle is addressed "To the saints, * * *—to the faithful in Christ Jesus." There are those, therefore, whom the saints—the faithful in Christ, can and should recognize as masters, but "according to the flesh"—in their temporal relationship. In this sense, too, "the saints and faithful brethren in Christ," (Col. 4: 1), are called masters. But in a spiritual sense we call no man master; for one is our Master, even Christ. Matth. 23: 10. So we have fathers according to the flesh, (Col. 3: 21), but we recognize no man as a spiritual father; "for one is our Father, which is in heaven." Matth. 23: 9.

But the abbreviation Mr., as ordinarily used, "is only a compellation of civility." Would any person assume that we have no right to use terms of civility and respect, according to the flesh? If this is sinful, the inspired writers of the New Testament certainly criminated themselves. Luke addressed his gospel to the "most excellent Theophilus." Luke 1: 3. Paul also addressed his defence to the "most noble Festus. The term Sir is "the word of respect in compellation to man, in common conversation." Christ used this term in his teachings. (Matth. 13: 27; 21: 30). The woman of Samaria, at Jacob's well, said to Christ, "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with." Did he reprimand her for using this term of respect or civility? He did not; and she used it thrice during their conversation. The infirm man at Bethesda said to Jesus, "Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool." Did Jesus censure him for his expression of respect in calling him Sir? No; but he had compassion on him and healed him. Certain Greeks, on one occasion, said to Philip, "Sir, we would see Jesus." Did Philip tell them that Jesus had taught him not to allow himself to be sirred? No information of the kind. Weeping Mary, after the resurrection of Jesus, seeing him and supposing him to be the gardener, said tremulously, "Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away." Did he teach her not to use this term of respect and civility? Nothing of that nature was hinted. The Revelator addressed one of the elders, saying, "Sir, thou knowest." Did he commit sin in calling an elder sir?

Moses once said to two of his brethren, "Sirs, ye are brethren." Paul and Barnabas said to the priest of Jupiter and to those with him, who were about offering sacrifices to them, "Sirs, why do ye these things?" What right had Paul and Barnabas to use this compellation of respect when addressing an idolatrous priest and his deluded followers? Was it sinful for them to do so? Paul, long afterward, on his dangerous voyage to Rome, was thrice guilty of this same act of civility and respect. Acts 27: 10, 21, 25.

We have thus enlarged on this subject to demonstrate that the Lord's people, even the apostles, did use terms of respect and civility; and we assume that there is not a sentence in the New Testament, which, if faithfully interpreted, either forbids or discourages it. The compellation Mr. is used in a similar manner, for precisely the same purpose, and hence we see neither propriety nor consistency in opposing its use on suitable occasions. The same may be said of Mrs. (Mistress), Miss. These are all used as compellations of respect and civility in courteous address. We are exhorted to be courteous, (1 Pet. 3: 8), and we understand the admonition to refer to conversation as well as to conduct. Who will say that we dare not, or should not, follow the example of holy men and women in this respect? The text that forbids conformity to the world is so accommodating that we may apply it to a hundred things that the Holy Spirit did not refer to; and this conscientiousness in regard to using courteous, respectful language is one of them. This is the well established use of these words, and there can be no more harm in using them than to use any other words for the same purpose. These words are constituent parts of the English language, and there is no more sin in using them as terms of respect or civility; neither is there any more conformity to the world in using them, than there is in using the English language at all. The English language is a camel, while these words are mere gnats; and it is too Pharisaical to strain at these while we swallow that almost entire.

In conclusion we will say that, in our religious salutations, it would certainly be imprudent to use these terms; for religion is love, and we should use the more endearing compellations of brother and sister, which express our true relation to each other, as members of the same family. But in our ordinary and necessary worldly association and transactions, there can be no sin in using these terms, whenever the occasion calls for courteous address.

Earthquakes in Two Hemispheres.

In No. 16, current volume, we gave a brief notice of a destructive earthquake in California. The cable brings intelligence of a far greater calamity of a similar character at the famous old city of Antioch, in Syria, by which nearly fifteen hundred of her six thousand inhabitants were instantly killed, while thousands were injured, and nearly all were deprived of their homes. Founded about the year 300 B. C., the city has been five times prostrated by earthquakes before the present visitation, which has laid about half of it in ruins. In the year 115, it was entirely destroyed by an earthquake, and in the years 448, 587, it was again ruined by the same terrible agency. In the convulsion in the last mentioned year, according to Gibbon, 250,000 of the population perished. It recovered in a great measure from these disasters, but in 1822 another earthquake leveled it to the ground, and since that date its population has never reached beyond six thousand. It was here that the followers of the Savior were first given the name of Christians. Unfortunately, the cable does not give us the date of this last earthquake, but following so immediately after the shocks along the Pacific coast, one is apt to connect them, particularly as Antioch is situated between parallels 36 and 37, which is precisely the latitude of Owen's lake, Visalia and other places in California where the shock of the 26th of March was severest. The coincidence of two such phenomena, one the most serious earthquake that has occurred in California since 1812, and the other the most destructive that has befallen Antioch in centuries, happening only a few days apart and on the same belt of latitude—along the center of what has been called the earthquake zone—seems to indicate a connection between the two. Simultaneously with the accounts of the California earthquake came the report that the volcano of Colima, in Mexico, was in a violent state of agitation, and now the cable brings intelligence that Mo unt Vesuvius is also in a violent state of eruption. A column of flame shoots several hundred feet above the crater, and stones, ashes and cinders fall in dense showers around the summit.

Is this a fulfillment of our Savior's prediction, that there shall be "earthquakes in divers places?" We hear of wars and rumors of wars—nation rising against nation and kingdom against kingdom—of famine and pestilence—of earthquakes in divers places; and there are signs in the heavens and wonders on the earth—blood, fire, vapor of smoke. The gospel sun is darkened, and the civil moon is clothed in blood; and how soon the heavenly luminaries shall dress themselves in their corresponding, symbolic vesture, the Allwise knows. Be watchful, be faithful, be ready; for our redemption draweth nigh. J. W. B.

Patent Paint Brush.

We have had the opportunity of examining a Patent Paint Brush, which we regard as a valuable invention. It consists of a metallic socket or a cone shaped socket, which screws into a sectional nut, which is placed inside of the bristles to expand and hold them in their proper place. The novelty of this improvement is, that when one set of bristles is worn out they can very easily be replaced, which will be a saving of 50 per cent. to the painter. Any man can replace them very readily. For particulars address

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

Written by John Conrad Beissel, (By'sel) to Peter Baker. Ephrata the 20th of the 3d month, 1756.

Since there appears to be no hope, that we again each others shall see, so I will yet have this said: my spirit embraces you and your beloved ——— with and into the whole church of God, and the general awakening in Germany, as which spirits children we are. N. B.

But this is to be observed; the church of God has its twelve tribes under the new dispensation, as well as under the old. Now the tribes in Germany could not well from the barren Rachel come to birth. on account of the rage of the dragon and the fleshly antichrist: wherefore only the servant number multiplied, and when it came so far, so Leahbrought Judah forth, as from whence Jesus Christ comes according to the flesh. During the time Rachel remained barren, and though from the tribe of Judah many a beautiful branch grew forth, under the regency of the kings, yet was it only at one tribe, at which the fruitfulness of the new world closed remained, because the barren one had that seed to bring forth.

In the mean time God remembered Rachel, and caused the church to wander towards the setting of the sun. It must go short, for I could well write a book of this matter. It has at length come to pass that, Rachel in these lands has given birth to a son, named Joseph, or God will add thereto; (which is implied by the name.) This son indeed was quite a different one to the rest of the sons of Jacob, and yet they were all sons of Jacob, after the same manner as with the twelve apostles and disciples of Jesus, only one leaned upon his breast, and yet were all apostles.

The above is, to say the least, a very stiff translation from German into English. Nevertheless to save labor we give it as presented to us by friend Snowberger.

Feet-washing.

Brother Holsinger: I hope you will give my views concerning this ordinance, as herein elucidated, a place in your paper.

The place of observing this ordinance, whether at Jerusalem or in this country, in an upper room, or where not, neither the number that engage in it on the same occasion, has anything to do with the example as set forth in the language of Jesus, when he says, "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you," John 13: 15. Here I understand the example to be to each one individually; that, as he had washed each one of their feet, they each should wash feet as he had done to each of them; for "the servant is not greater than his Lord." (Verse 16). "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (Verse 17).

In verse 14th he says, "If I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." From these passages it seems clear, that he intended for each one to do as he had done to them; and it follows that, as the example is to individuals, each ought to wash another's feet. Further, he washed and wiped; therefore I understand each should wash and wipe. We all clearly understand the apostle when he commands us to salute one another with a kiss; and again, he says, exhort one another. Now why not understand the phrase one another in the command to wash feet as we do in other commands.

Brother Henry: After hearing so many requests for ministers in the far West, through the C. F. C., I for one have concluded to try, in my weakness, God being my helper, to fill some vacancy in the far West, as soon as I can make the arrangements; and therefore offer my little farm for sale. I have 61 acres of land, which lies in the edge of the timber, two and a half miles from Oakley, a station on the Great Western R. R., about three-fourths of a mile from good grist and saw mills, (water power), 9 miles from Dacatur, the county-seat of Macon county, Illinois, and two and a half miles from our meeting-house. This district of the church is in a flourishing condition; with seven speakers, three ordained, and four in the second degree of office. Any brother that wishes to aid in the spread of the Gospel, and has got the means and wishes to settle here, will please to call. I will sell at a fair price.

Brethren Editors:—You see by the above caption, that I am quite a distance from the place from which I last addressed you. Landed here on the 26th of the April, and will have to wait on steamer till the 5th inst. I passed over the longest line of R. R. in the world, 1920 miles, and over the greatest waste of land on the continent. With exception of a few fertile places, all the land from Nebraska till you get into California, is fit for nothing, except the few mines, wild beasts, and some renenegade Indians, who are but little better than brutes. I am not in favor of war with them; but if our government could find some nation that would trade coffee or anything else that would be beneficial to us for them I would glory in the trade; for whoever has dealings with them, can testify what a terrible nuisance they are to any nation of civilized people. Many of the peace commissioners are no doubt doing their best for the Indians; but others again are a stumbling block; for they will give them cause to rebel, and then they call a council and make a treaty with them, and Uncle Sam sends out a lot of goods to be given to the Indians, which pacifies them until some white men steal their goods, and then another rupture and treaty. And so it keeps moving on; for the fact of it is, some men are making immense fortunes out of these treaties, or rather out of the Indians. I think, by late accounts, that the settlers of Arizona and New Mexico will not leave many of them for any one to make treaties with; for they are at war now, and are unceremoniously following a barbarous custom by scalping. This they say is the only method of solving the problem, but really it is a horrible one, and one that I have no desire to engage in; for I have an inherent dread of a live Indian.

The mines are being worked on a larger scale than for two years past. Plenty of snow in the mountains, and rain, made the miners very active, and they are now putting forth their best endeavors to get as much of the shining dust as possible. Is it not curious how people will work for gold, silver and paper money. It seems there are but few exempt from the infection. I have known the best individuals in America, (school teachers), to grieve for more money; and even editors want it, and (privately) they usually complain of hard times; but where is the individual (except myself) but what has more or less to say about hard times?

I think I'll never get rich by digging gold or silver. I don't believe in creeping away down into the earth, and under mountains, for a little yellow dirt. I have an affinity for the surface of it. But many men here are wearing away their lives, and some losing them, for the sake of that which perishes with all other material.

The scenery, in passing through the mountains, is grand and awful; and as we passed through gorges, canons, tunnels and along precipitous places, I thought, what a small space on the earth is enough for man, and how little and puny an object he is in creation; and yet the mighty work that he here accomplished seems almost beyond comprehension; delving into the mountains; cutting adamantine rocks; bridging awful abysses, and performing all these herculeian tasks in so short a time. I was led to ask, what can not man do. It seems there really is nothing too hard for him to accomplish. But if half the energy and study of the mind were exerted in entering public and private improvements were applied to the preparation for a long eternity, many more would be on their way to a better world. But many spend the better part of the their days and energy in sin; and if they do come to the Savior, give him only the spent and down grade of life.

I visited the Laurel Hill cemetry this morning and truly it is a "City of the dead." Countless numbers slumber here in the silent tomb, from different nations and climes besides our own, like in the days of our Savior's visit on earth so now are the tombs of the dead garnished and made white. And as I wondered round the vast "city" I thought that even all the architectural skill used to decorate the tombs of the rich will yet have no effect from keeping them from being dust of the earth; and like the lowly and poor, all will at one time be called to appear before the great Judge, who will not enquire whether their tombs were decked with gold and monuments of spotless white marble, but whether they did their duty to their fellow-man and God. And how much more wise would it be to labor as earnestly for that other world as to make the tombs of the dead appear so grand.

San Francisco is one the first American cities, but is one of great commercial and manufacturing importance. Here can be seen vessels from all the maratime powers (of any note) in the world; and here, on the mart are exposed for sale the products of every clime. Here can be seen the natives of the different nations in their original dress and customs. It has all kinds of worships that the most fastidious could desire. Some three hundred churches, twenty theatres, and many places called "dance houses;" besides nearly evey fifth door on the principal streets, and even in some of the alleys is a saloon, decked out in all the invitation tapestry of gold letters, showy rooms, and quantities of liquors which are advertised to be Simon pure. It is nothing uncommon to hear of murders, suicides, robbing and stealing every day, and still they call it a very moral, well regulated city. Well that may be but I can't comprehend it "why it is so," but in a few days the ship from here will sail and I'll be glad, for I want to get out of Sodom, Have as yet met with none of the brethren. Expect to see some soon in Oregon. You will hear from me again in a few weeks.

Farewell.

The Punishment of the Wicked.

Dear Brother Holsinger: In the 18th number of the C. F. C., brother Daniel Longanecker writes a query in regard to the punishment of the wicked, and desires an answer. I, with brother Daniel, think that more is needed on this subject, by the great body of the brotherhood; and, I am fully persuaded, the ministering brethren do not feel that interest in, or importance of, the subject, to give it that prayerful and scrutinizing examination which it deserves at their hands, to enable them to promulgate it from the sacred desk, as they should. I know that a knowledge of the extent or degree of punishment of the wicked, in the Spirit World, or the amount of happiness of those who shall be so fortunate as to be numbered with the blood-washed throng in the Glory-Land, is not imperatively necessary, to constitute as christians; yet a proper knowledge of the attributes of the Great Jehovah, will be calculated to increase our love and adoration, of his wisdom, justice, mercy, and goodness.

To be considered Orthodox in the faith, now-a-days, a person must be heterodox. And why? Simply because certain individuals have formed themselves into congregations, and, claiming to be the Church of Christ, place their interpretation on God's word, and condemn all who differ with them, as heretics. This does not apply alone to the Roman Catholic denomination, but to all those sects that have man-made creeds, which are enforced on the faith and practice of their members, even though they conflict with God's holy word.

I do not coincide with the opinion of either of the four faiths named in the query. The second class comes nearer to the truth, as I understand it, than either of the other three. I cannot reconcile the eternal punishment, in material hell-fire, of all those who die out of the pale of the Church of Christ. It is true, I was rocked in the cradle of Methodism for thirty three years, and blindly swallowed every dogma of the church, either sweet or bitter. But having been made free, by the Holy Spirit, I have eschewed the commandments and doctrines of men for those of the Lord Jesus Christ. I do not now look upon God with that slavish fear which I once felt. And why not? Because my views of his attributes, or nature, have been changed. I now believe that punishment was instituted, not for any pleasure it rendered God, for Jesus wept over sinful Jerusalem; but his justice demanded the penality for sin to be enforced.

In the first place, I cannot believe that hell is a lake of literal liquid fire; because God is a Spirit, the soul to be punished, is a Spirit, and it will require a spiritual punishment to answer the end to be accomplished. God has certain laws, which he will not change; and I believe one of them to be, that the spiritual and immortal part of man will be punished in the world to come, until every vestige of sin, or rebellion against his authority, shall be obliterated.

In the second place, I believe that God is no tyrant—that he does not punish his creatures for the love of inflicting pain; but it is to prevent them from sinning, and after having sinned, to cause them to repent of having rebelled against his just and holy commands. As I think short communications most profitable, I defer my conclusion for another article, if the matter meets your approbation. Yours in Christ,

L. J. Grove.

Admonitory.

Brother Henry: I thought I would write a few lines for the Companion. It is such a good paper, there is so much good news in it. It tells us of the prosperity of the Brethren in different parts of the States; how they are getting along And we still find them contending for the faith, once delivered to the saints; and of others, who are made willing to forsake their evil ways, to turn in with the overtures of bleeding mercy; to own God as their heavenly Father, and Jesus Christ as their Savior; he who died and gave himself for us. It seems that man had degraded himself, had sinned against God, till there was no remedy to be found in heaven above, or on the earth beneath, whereby man could be restored to the favor and friendship of God our heavenly Father, but by giving his only Son. He sent him into a sinful world; he became poor that we through his poverty might be made rich. The blessed Savior did so much for us, and yet we see so many of our friends and neighbors, and those who are near and dear to us, by the ties of nature, who are declaring by their words and action, that they will not have Christ Jesus to rule and to reign over them. I have often thought, if they could only behold, with an eye of faith, the Savior extended between heaven and earth suffering, groaning, and dying, while, amidst all his suffering, he could yet look down on his enemies with love, and could pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," I think they would stop sinning. But brethren and sisters I sometimes fear, that we have not the love we should have. We are commanded to love our enemies I fear sometimes we brethren, or some, at least, come short in this duty; and instead of trying to build them up, look down on them with derision, talking about them, and that even to those who are outside of the church. Oh, have we forgot the time that we were convinced that we were sinners, and called with the mighty call from above; when we were, as it seemed, willing to go unto death for his sake; and the vows we made? Matth. 18: 15 tells us what we there promised. Brethren if any of us have failed, and have not done as we should have done, for God's sake, and for the salvation of our poor souls, let us remember our vows, and let us try and keep them sacred; knowing, brethren, without holiness, no man can see the Lord in peace. In Romans 12: 10, the apostle says, "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, in honour prefering one another." According to the language of the apostle, we should have love for our brethren as for ourselves. What we wish for ourselves we should wish for our brethren. Then, brethren, let us examine ourselves, and see whether we have that love in us. If we have not, it is high time that we should wake out of our sleep; for the time is coming when we all shall stand before the great I AM, there to render account for the deeds done in the body. None will be permitted to enter into rest, but those that have kept the faith.

Yours in love,

G. M. Noah.

Explanation Desired.

Dear Brother Holsinger:—Whilst sitting by my writing table with the Bible in my hand, and reading the beautiful lessons penned by Paul upon the principles of forbearance towards one another, and for the word of God, I concluded to write a few lines for the Companion, in reference to his language to the Galatian brethren, where he says, "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." Now, dear brethren, please to give us the true meaning of the word restoration. In case a Bishop makes a misstep, and the Church takes the ministry from him, and afterwards disowns him ; if he then returns to the church, and after a lapse of three or four months some of the members propose to restore his office, would the restoration spoken of meet the cause? Please give some information as to what position such a brother could be placed in to fulfil the instructions of Paul to the Galatian brethren. 6 : 1—3.

S. S. MURRY.

Niles, Mich.

REMARKS—The word restore, in the text cited, means to bring back to his former condition, to reinstate, to replace ; and it may apply to all members, whatever their standing, whether official or non-official. The case instanced is one that demands great caution. If there is cause sufficient to silence and excommunicate an Elder, in nearly all cases it would be advisable to restore him by degrees ; and he should in no case be restored to his full office before he fills the qualifications of a bishop, given in 1st Tim. 3rd chapter. As a general rule a bishop can be silenced only by the voice of the church and the assistance of bishops, and in no case should such be restored to their former standing without the voice of the church and the aid of bishops. But the context plainly shows, that it is the duty of the faithful—of those that are spiritual to make an effort in meekness to win back the member who is overtaken in a fault to restore him.

In Keedysville, Wash., Co., M. D., May 3rd CLARA A. daughter of brother John A. Grossnickle, aged, 9 years 5 months and 27 days. We all loved our little girl, for her bright intellect, sweet disposition, obedience, and all those charms that make good little girls. Truly she was the sunshine, joy and comfort of that now sad house. It was not for her that we sadly wept, but for ourselves. She is happier than we, but we will try to imitate her example, and be more holy, pure, kind and good, to be able to sing with her in Heavenly Choirs. Funeral services by Elder David Long and Daniel Stouffer.

"They which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Sister SUSAN DOUGLASS was born at Germantown, May 18th, 1790, and died in Philadelphia, March 10th, 1873, in the 82nd year of her age.

Early in life she embraced "the faith once delivered to the saints." Truly a loving and faithful mother in Israel has gone from our midst a vacant place never to be filled, yet "we mourn not as those having no hope." A long and useful life was hers ; a life well spent in doing good to those around her. Naturally gifted with a bright and cheerful disposition, her society was enjoyed by old and young. To the young she was especially endeared by the kindness and love. Most patient during a long and tedious sickness of nine months, her mind being perfectly clear, she was conscious till almost the last moment of life. When the final summons came, it found our dear sister ready, and "Having a desire to depart, and be with Christ which is far better." She was interred in the Brethren's bury ing ground at Germantown. Funeral ser vices by brother Christian Custer.

Silas Thomas.

In the Limestone church, Washington Co., Tenns., our muchbeloved brother, DANIEL BOLTON, on the 12th day of May, aged 73 years 6 months and 6 days. He leaves a large circle of friends and neighbors to mourn their loss ; but we have the hope that our loss is his great gain. Funeral services by brother Isaac Crosswhite, from 1st Thess. 4 : 13—18, to a large and attentive congregation.

Solomon G, Arnold.

Visitor please copy.

Shoal Creek congregation, brother PHILLIP DICE, departed this life on the 12th day of April, age 60 years 11 months and 15 days. Was a son of Peter Dice ; born in Perry Co,, Pa., 1811. He was a worthy brother ; united with the church in 1850 ; was elected deacon in 1851 ; served seven years and then was forwarded to the ministry ; served fourteen years. He left a wife and six children. The widow and four children are members. Their loss is his gain. Disease, heart dropsy ; being afflicted with the disease for eleven years. Though his suffering was terrible, he bore it with patience; often remarked that his suffering would be confined to his bed eight weeks. After he was taken sick he was annointed by the Elders. His funeral text was 2nd Timothy 4 : 5—8 This text was selected by the deceased himself, a few days before his departure, and carried out by the undersigned. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of neighbors and friends. His preaching in this new country created a sympathy and admiration which will long be remembered.

Elder Daniel Hendricks.

Newtonia, Mo.

In the Beaver Creek church, Dayton, Ohio, May 8th, LIZZIE L. FRICK, daughter of brother Wesley R. and sister Elizabeth, aged one year 5 months and 4 days. Funeral services by the brethren, from 2 Samuel, 14 : 14.

B. F. Daret.

In the Howard church, Howard Co., Ind., May 4th, of heart disease and dropsy, brother ISRAEL BRUBAKER, aged 42 years 11 months and 28 days. He leaves a widow and 6 children.

George Brubaker.

In the Bear Creek congregation, M. D., April 28th brother DAVID BOWMAN, aged 63 years 3 months 23 days. Funeral services by Jacob N. Thomas and Josiah Beeghly, from John 5 : 25. The subject of this notice was laid helpless with apoplexy nearly seven months; but bore his sufferings with Christian resignation.

Jeremiah Beeghly.

In Middle Creek church, Somerset Co., Pa., March 27th HARRISON PENROD son of Harrison and sister Annie Penrod, aged 5 years and 2 days. Occasion improved by the writer from Matth., 18 : 1—4.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

THE
Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Be Careful What and How you Read.

When we look for a moment at the mass of fictitious reading that is flung broadcast over the world, can we wonder that the young so early wander away in the paths of vice, or that the vile dens of our cities, are seething in impurity, are peopled with wretched manhood and fallen womanhood. We look in astonishment at the evidences of blighted intellect, lost virtue, and ruined lives; and yet how many of these learned their first lessons at home, over the pages of some impure novel. In how many of our homes does the Bible lie untouched for years, till the lids are covered with dust; while dime novels, and other light literature are constantly and continually read. And we have witnessed where even parents excused themselves from the house of worship to read their light literature, while they ought to be directing their thoughts heavenward. The young gain almost all their education from novels, and such like; while the Bible is not taught in our common schools any more. Then they pore over the unchaste pages, and shed fountains of tears over some luckless heroine that never lived, and whose counterpart never will live; but they have no sympathy for the sorrows of a beggared widow or orphan, and their hearts are unmoved at the sight of actual human suffering. Can it be that he to whom God has given ten talents, will waste them all in wrecking humanity? Shall they be willing for dollars and cents to send young souls to perdition? The young, have a desire to read funny pieces, and among such, are a good many fables, and idle tales; sometimes profane language is used; all which have a tendency to lead young souls to ruin. We do not say that reading novels, should be dispensed with altogether, but to take, or devote all our time to reading stories, and novels, is wasting our time; reading history is a more productive way of passing our leisure hours. God has wisely created man for some noble purpose and has granted him time, place and opportunity, to cultivate his mind, and to be of use, both temporal and spiritual. If the reading of light literature would be beneficial, then you would find an excuse for reading it; as it is not, we would say to you, young reader, do not trifle away your time with it. Let your motto be, to read good books, read much, and ponder well what you do read. Many a thoughtless youth is whirled through the world without meditating over what he has pursued. To read, and to think, is what we all ought to put in practice a little more; and God will smile on our persevering efforts of gaining knowledge for the world terrestrial, and hereafter for a world celestial.

Scraps of History.

St. Augustine, an illustrious father of the Church, and Bishop of Hippo, at the close of the fourth century, whose authority was, according to Petavius, so great that, "the fathers and doctors who came after him, and even the popes shemselves, and the councils of other bishops, have all of them been of opinion that it was a sufficient proof of the truth of any opinion, that St. Augustine had taught it," says, "After that ye promised to believe, we three times immersed your heads in the sacred font."—Sermo De Myst. Bap.

St. Basil, surnamed the Great, successor of Eusebius as bishop of Caesarea, in 370, and, according to the learned Basnage, "a man of the utmost sincerity and candor, even in the minutest affairs, which shine forth, no less than his erudition, in the numerous works he has left," says, "For the bodies of those baptized are as if buried in the water." * * * * "In three immersions, therefore, and an equal number of invocations, the great mystery of baptism is completed."—Lib. De Spir. Sanct. cap. 15.

Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, about the middle of the fourth century, in addressing the baptized in general says: "After these things ye were led to the sacred pool of divine baptism, as Christ was taken from the cross to the prepared tomb. And each was asked if he believed in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. And ye compressed the saving confession, and sank down three times into the water, and again emerged; and hereby a figure covertly representing the three days burial of Christ. For as our Savior spent three days and three nights in the bowels of the earth, so ye also in the emersion imitate the first day of Christ in the earth, and in the immersion, the night."—Catech. 20, Mystag ii, § 4.

Basil, A. D. 360, "By three immersions, the great mystery of baptism is accomplished."

Ambrose A. D. 374: "Thou wast asked, dost thou believe in God the Father, Almighty? Thou saidst, I do believe, and wast immersed; that is thou wast buried, (mersisti, hoc est, sepultuses.) Thou wast again asked, "Dost Thou believe on our Lord Jesus Christ and his crucifixion?, Thou saidst, I believe, and so wast buried with Christ."

Mr. Reeves: "The ancients carefully observed trine-immersion, insomuch that, by the Canons Apostolical, either bishop or presbyter who baptized without it was deposed from the ministry.

Sir P. Ricaut, "Thrice dipping or plunging, this church (Greek) holds to be as necessary to the form of baptism, as water to the matter."—In Taed, Exam. Vol. 1. P. 268.

The latter version of the forty-ninth Apostolical canon, as made in the sixth century, by Dionysius Exiguus, who was, according to Casiodorus, "a good Latin writer, and well acquainted with the Greek language, from which he translated much," This canon reads as follows: "If any Bishop or Presbyter shall celebrate not three immersions, (original, tria Baptismate, rendered by Dionysius triaum mersionem,) but one immersion, (original hen Baptismer, rendered by Dionysius, senel mergat in Baptismate,) given in the Lord's death, let him be deposed.

Chrysostom, who flourished in the fourth century, says, "The three immersions used by the ancients in the performance of the rite are called tria baptismata, three baptisms; that is, three immersions, for it could not be three purifications: it was only one purification. I am well aware that the three immersions may be called also one baptism. My philosophy can account for this. When there are said to be three baptisms, the word is used in reference to the act of immersion; when they are called one baptism, the word is used in reference to the rite in its appropriated sense. The three immersions are, in the estimation of those who used them, only one rite, which was designated by the name "baptism."—Carson on baptism, Am. Ed., Page 491–492.

Tertullian, a distinguished Christian father, who flourished at the close of the second century, "understood the word in reference to the ordinance as signifying immersion. He translates it by tingo Mr. Beecher thinks he has silenced this testimony, by translating the word by purify. But the disproof of this is as certain as it is short What Tertullian designates by tingo, he designates by mergito. And if he says ter mergitamur, he says also, ter tingimur,—we are thrice dipped. It was only one purification, though it was performed by three immersions."—Carson on Baptism, Am. Ed., Page 489.

The Pantalogia, under the article "Greek Church," thus explains, 'That part of the Christian church which was first established in Greece, and is now spread over a larger extent of country than any other established church. It comprehends in its bosom a considerable part of Greece, the Grecian Isles, Wallachid, Moldaira, Egypt, Abyssinia, Nubia, Lybia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Syria, Cilicia, Palestine. It may be observed, that amid all their trifling rites, they practice trine immersion, which is unquostionably the primitive manner." In connection with the above we have the following foot note: "Trine immersion, or immersing the person three times, once in the name of each of the Divine persons, was in use in the beginning of the third century. It was practiced in England till the sixteenth century; and is still rigidly observed in the eastern churches."—Scripture Guide to Baptism, by R. Pengily, from the London edition, Page 73.

I shall leave the matter with you, brethren and friends, hoping, however, some one may be benefitted by the fragments that I have gathered together on this much disputed subject. It surely cannot, in justice, be said, that we are alone in the idea of a triple action in baptism, for the most profound in church literature are with us. Why then should we doubt? And again, these "Scraps of History" that I have laid before you, I have gathered from works written and published by our single immersionist friends.

WICKED POLLY.

"Take Warning by Me."

Young people, who delight in sin,
I'll tell you what has lately been:—
A woman who was young and fair,
Has died in sin and sad despair.

She'd go to frolics, dance and play,
In spite of all her friends could say:
"I'll turn to God when I get old,
And he will then receive my soul."

On Friday morning she took sick:
Her stubborn heart began to break:
"Alas, alas! my days are spent!
Good God! too late now to repent!"

She called her mother to her bed:
Her eyes were rolling in her head:—
"When I am dead, remember well,
Your wicked Polly screams in hell!"

Young people, lest this be your case,
Return to God and seek his face;
Upon your knees for mercy cry,
Lest you in sin, like Polly, die.

"The tears are lost you shed for me;
My soul is lost, I plainly see.
O mother, mother, fare you well;
My soul will soon be doomed to hell!

"My earthly father, fare you well;
My soul will soon be doomed to hell!
The flaming wrath begins to roll;
I am a lost and ruined soul!"

She gnawed her tongue; before she died,
She loudly groaned, she screamed, and cried,
"Oh! must I burn forevermore,
When thousand, thousand years are o'er?"

At length the monster, Death, prevailed;
Her nails turned blue, her language failed;
She closed her eyes and left the world;
For down to hell she soon was hurl'd.

It almost broke her mother's heart,
To see her child to hell depart:—
"My Polly, oh, my Polly 's dead,
Her soul is gone—her spirit fled."

Good God, how did her parents mourn,
To think their child was dead and gone!
"Oh! is our Polly gone to hell?
Our grief 's so great no tongue can tell!"

Young people, try to serve the Lord;
Return to him, and read his word;
Don't trifle all your days in pride,
And die in sin like Polly died.

Remember well your dying day,
And seek salvation while you may;
Forsake your sins, and follies too,
Or they will prove your overthrow.

A Mother's Words.

A youth of eighteen or nineteen years sat at an open window, with a look of painful perplexity on his face, caused, apparently, by a letter he held in his hand. After sitting thus for some minutes, he muttered to himself, "yes I must go; if I don't, Brown and Smith will be laughing at me, and calling me righteous over-much, and, after all, there's no great harm in it; for I'll go to church in the morning, and it's only to be a sail down the river, and spend a day in the country." Still, he pressed his hand on his forehead for an instant, then rising hastily, he said, "There is no use bothering about it; I must go."

As he rose, his eye lighted on the setting sun, and, as he did so, his whole expression changed: a sweet, yet half sad look played on his face,—his thoughts were elsewhere,—another scene was before his eyes. The dark street had disappeared, and in its stead a neat country cottage had risen. In thought he was there: once more he saw the hills that rose near that cottage home; once more the blue waters of the distant lake glistened before him; once more he sat in the cottage garden with his widowed mother, and watch the setting sun. Once more that mother's words sounded in his ears,—"John, don't forget your God, and he'll not forget you. 'Remember his Sabbath day to keep it holy.' 'Though sinners entice thee to break it, consent thou not! Oh, when you're tempted to do wrong, don't forget to pray! Never let the sun go down on a prayerless day. May the God of the Fatherless guide you, may the Lord Jesus be your Savior.'"

Yes, six months had passed since he heard these words, and yet they seemed to sound in his ears. Tears filled his eyes; and rising he folded his hands in prayer; then taking his up his pen, he wrote thus:—

"'Thanks, Brown for your invitation; but I cannot accept it. My duty to God is to obey his commands; and he hath said, 'Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.' Spending the day in idle pleasure, is not doing this; and I wish you would think over the subject, and not go yourself.'"

How great is the influence of a pious mother's words! How wonderful the answers to her earnest prayers!—Selected.

What For?

A gentleman came into our Sunday-school not long ago, and said to the children: "There are two questions I want to ask you. One of them you can all answer. The other, I do not know whether you can or not. Will you try?"

"The first question is Who made you?"

When the gentleman asked this, the chidren looked at him, and round at each other, as they answered, "God," as if they hardly knew how to answer such an easy question,or why he should ask it.

What do you think his second question was? "What for?" Could you have told? Do you know why God made you?

The children did not seem to know what to say, so they said nothing. But there was one little boy, named Gurney, up in the gallery, whom his mother had taken there because she thought he was not old enough to be down with rest; but it seems he was really bigger than some of the others, for he gave a very nice answer to this second question. I wish you could have heard his sweet little voice, saying, "to be good, and do good."

Do you not think that Gurney was right? If God made us to be good, and do good, how sorry he must be to see us, instead of this, "being wrong, and doing wrong!"

Now, the only help for us in our dear Lord Jesus Christ. He can, and will, if we ask him, make us over again by his Holy Spirit, so that he will not only forgive our past sins, but help us grow more and more like himself.

So, we shall please God, so, we shall be what he made us for; and so only can we be happy in this world, or in another.—Child's Paper.

Be still prepared for death; and death or life
Shall thereby be the sweeter.—Shakespear.

For the COMPANION.

To Noah Harper, Pastor of the Missionary Baptist Church, Bunker Hill, Ind.

He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him ; 1st John 11 : 4.

As there has been so much said concerning me for withdrawing from your Church, I will try to give my reason for so doing. First allow me to say, I had never searched the word of God to learn what is really demanded of man : of self-denial, subjection, the carnal mind, suffering, patience, humbleness, and meekness, I knew nothing—mere by what had been taught me from my youth, that all sects and creeds were of Christ ; in fact, believed that Christ was divided, and Paul was crucified, and Cephas was the name in which to be baptized. Now you cannot help but feel that you and others have falsely accused me ; but it seemed necessary that you should make false accusations, for true ones you could not find. For you know that in every respect I was willing for all duty, far surpassing the most of the young members ; and you begin to see that the service of the Lord was first and foremost with me. As to my reason for leaving your highly exalted Church they are :

I. You told me to search the scriptures. This I did, and came to the 3rd chapter of John where it says, "you must be born of water and of the Spirit." Here was contradiction to what you had taught me. "Born of the Spirit and of water," you would have it. But where do you get it ? Does the Scripture teach you one thing, and me another ? What a false teaching it must be ! But thanks to our Creator, it is not so ; for it is so plain that a way-faring man,(though a fool), need not err therein.

Then came what you call the Lord's Supper. Now if you would tell any rational man to come to supper at 12 o'clock or noon, he would surely think that you lost the run of the time of day, just as I saw you were loosing the run of the Scriptures. You cannot deny that the Supper Communion, and feet-washing were instituted on the same night. Who gave you leave to lay any of them aside, or change the time ? "What God has joined together let no man put asunder." Did not Christ join those together ? No one has a right to put them asunder. "If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you :" Remember I told you, the servant is not greater than his Master. If, then, the Master has given us this example ; why not obey ? Would you set at naught the word of God, and bring in railing and slanderous reports against those who would keep the word of the Lord ? Do you not know our Lord Jesus, who ascended to the celestial courts of heaven, shall in like manner descend in flaming fire taking vengeance on them who obey not the gospel ? He said, "heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away ;" for his word liveth and abideth forever, and shall judge men in the last day. Therefore examine yourselves , and see if you be in the one body, having the one faith, guided by one Spirit, for Christ is not divided ; neither is his body divided, for the gates of hell shall not prevail against it ; for it is founded on a rock, and must stand—the rock the builders rejected, which was cut out of the mountain without hands.

Now what would you have me do ? Would you have me eat and drink with you, and rise to play at your foolish celebrations, and help make the house of the Lord a place for sport with such things as Christmas trees, concerts, &c. ?

Let us reason a little : "Christ said if ye love me you will keep my commandments." Therefore we ought to give more earnest heed to the things we have heard ; for the time has come that they will not endure sound doctrine. Therefore it behooves us to try the spirits and see whether they are of Christ. Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of man, and of this world ? God does not command us to follow in Christ's footsteps, and then tell us it is non-essential. When he gave the command by his apostles to salute one another, he wanted to see if in us dwelt the simplicity that was in Christ, or trying to become as little children. Here are love, union, meekness, and loveliness all combined. This is where the Lord wished us to be ; and I am thankful he called me to serve him where I am. In conclusion I would say, if you cannot yet see why I left your church, I will give a number of scriptural reasons. If I left the church for such reasons as you say, why then did the other five leave ? I hold no harsh feelings or envious thoughts against you, but love you the same as when first acquainted. Now let me say with one of old, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the City."

I remain your friend.

For the Companion.

Is there Salvation outside of the Church ?

We often hear it said, that there are as good people out of the church as there are in it. We do not think so ; we believe there are members in the church, who are better than any one can be, out of the church. At the same time we believe there are some out of the church, as good, if not better, than some in it. That there are unfaithful and bad members in the church we believe ; but that a person cannot arrive at, and attain unto, a higher degree of perfection and holiness, and be more acceptable to God, than one out of the church, we do not believe. What God in his great mercy, and unsearchable goodness and wisdom, may do or provide for some way of escape for those who have not the light of Gospel revelation, we do not pretend to know. But the Gospel only promises salvation to those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ ; "Them that are without, God judgeth." This apostolic principle, should prevent us from condemning too soon or hastily, such as have not had the light of the Gospel, or never have had the Gospel preached to them. Now on the same principle, we argue that the gospel salvation is only promised to those who are in the church which Christ established, against which he said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail. And all to whom the gospel is preached must become members of his church, when it is clearly made known to them, when they can do so, or be excluded from the favor of God.

Now we read in Paul's letter to the Col. 1 : 24, "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the church." There we see the church is represented as the body of Christ, and in Eph. 1 : 22, 23, Paul, speaking of the exaltation of Christ, says, "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." Here we see the same idea conveyed to our minds, representing the church as the body of Christ. So we plainly discover, that all men who are not members of the church, are no part of Christ's body, but are separated from the body of Christ; and the Savior declares, "if a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned," John 15 : 6. Now we understand from this that for those who are not members of the church of Christ, or who are separated from Christ, that there is no life for such; but that they become as withered branches. Now we argue, it is not merely because a man does not belong to or have a membership in the church, which exposes him to the danger of failing to enjoying salvation, (for we believe many, have a membership in the church who will fail to enjoy salvation). But because they have not that union or connection with Christ which is secured to them, in being a lawful and faithful member in the church of Christ, being out of the church they do not partake of that divine power which is absolutely necessary to qualify and fit, all for heaven and immortal glory.

Paul, in speaking of the church, and the great love Christ had for it, reveals to us the holy character, and divine mission of the glorious church of the living God, says, "Husbands love your wives even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." This represents Christ as having given himself for the church only, and we think Paul means that only those who are legally initiated into and lawfully connected with the church, who will derive all the advantages from Christ's mediatorial work, which that work imparts. No doubt, our Savior saw there was a necessity for the church, and for its ordinances, or he would not have organized the church, and given ordinances or means of grace, to the church for the use of its members. Now if we do not possess a membership in the church, and neglect using the means of grace that the church affords to its members, and then say we are or can be as good without these as with them, is charging our Lord with doing what was not necessary, and make ourselves wiser than our Savior. But a little while before our Lord and Savior ascended to heaven, he commissioned the apostles, as we read in Matth. 28 : 19, and in that commission we read, "Teach them (those who have been baptized, and are members of the church,) to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you." Here we see members in the church do or observe the commandments of our Lord, while those who are not members of the church do not. Then if those out of the church can be as good as those in it, the disobedient can be as good as the obedient, but this no one can admit, without rejecting the Bible. In reading the holy Scriptures, we find many glorious promises made to them who enter in by the door into the fold, (the church) and are faithful in observing the commandments of the Lord, "Bearing the burden and heat of the day." These promises are made to them who are grafted into the true vine—connected with Christ—and members of his body, which is the church, and which is the great agent through which Christ accomplished his purposes of mercy, and in spreading his truth. Those who faithfully co-operate with Christ in this way, may claim the promises of the gospel. But those who refuse to co-operate with him in this way and take or prefer their own way; we think they do not respect the authority of Christ as they should and cannot claim the promises or have it justly said to them, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

Christ is responsible for the following facts, stated in the story of the rich man and Lazarus, any one of which proven to be true must establish the correctness of all the rest: 1st, That Lazarus and the rich man both lived and died; 2nd, that Lazarus was at death carried by angels to Abraham's bosom, and in the embrace of the old father of the faithful was comforted; 3rd, that the rich man died, was buried, and in hell lifted up his eyes in torment, and saw Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom, and entered into conversation with him, confessing himself tormented in flame; 4th, that Abraham corroborated the fact of his torment, and Lazarus's comfort, but refused him any help or consolation; 5th, that the rich man sought warning for his five living brethren, who did not believe in a hell of torment after death, lest they also should come to that place of torment; 6th, that Abraham alleged, firstly, that there was no need of sending Lazarus to testify on the subject of this hell of torment and flame, because Moses and the prophets whom they had for their instruction had sufficiently testified in reference to it; and, secondly, that if the living did not hear them, if one rose from the dead and went to them, they would not repent.

Is it true? Did Moses and the prophets teach a hell of fire, and pain, and sorrow, for the wicked after death? If they did, the narrative of Christ is confirmed; if not, it is proved incorrect, or a fable. If they do, then the doctrine of a state of conscious existence after death is true; if they do not teach it, then the doctrine is baseless. Will materialists abide the decision? I will now proceed to show, that what Christ (and, as he declared, Abraham also) said of a hell of fire is true.

The Hebrew word is Sheol: the Greek word, Hades: the English translation, hell, grave, pit underworld. It will be seen that I admit the definition grave; and I also admit that, when it is used for the grave, it signifies a place where there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge. If this were its only use there would be no propriety in Christ's use of it in Luke 16; for there he represents one in hell in perfect consciousness. Therefore he could not mean the grave where the man was buried. For he declared that in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment. Nor is this to be sneered away by asking if a disembodied spirit has eyes. Of course it has, or Christ would never have affirmed it. Remember, reader, Christ is the responsible person in the case.

But what did Moses and the prophets teach? Moses taught, or God through him, (Deut. 32 : 22), "A fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn to the lowest hell : it shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." The fact of such a fire, burning deep down and setting the foundations of the mountains on fire, and the consumption of the earth's increase by its volcanic overflow, is well known. This God calls Sheol. It is not the grave. If Sheol is a place of sorrow and pain, (Psalm 18 : 3) : "The sorrows of hell compassed me about ;" (116 : 3), "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell got hold upon me : I found trouble and sorrow." Sheol, then, is a place of fire, sorrow, and pain, according to Moses and the prophet David.

It is the place of the soul in contra-distinction to the flesh : "My flesh also shall rest in hope, for thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (Sheol) neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Ps. 15 : 9, 10. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, made application of this to Christ, and said, "His soul was not left in hell, neither did his flesh see corruption." Then it is in David the place of the soul not the flesh. But Ps. 9 : 17, testifies, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." If it were the grave, which is meant, then the righteous and wicked both go there. Hence it does not mean the grave.

Again, Isaiah (chapters 13th and 14th) in predicting the destruction of Babylon by the Medes, and the deliverance and restoration of Israel, foretells also the death of the king of Babylon, that he was cast out among those slain with the sword, with no burial—cast out of his grave as an abominable branch, and covered with worms. But he went down to hell, to the sides of the pit, where all the mighty ones who had preceeded him rose up to meet and reproach him with his former tyranny and terrible fall, till he had become as weak as they, and like them.

This hell is not a place of unconsciousness. It does not therefore mean the grave. Christ and Abraham therefore did tell the truth, when they affirmed that Moses and the prophets did speak of a hell, such as Jesus described as the abode of the rich man. Having proven one point in the narrative to be true beyond the possibility of successful contradiction, it remains for the materialist's fraternity to prove one point in Christ's statement to be false or unfounded, or to abandon their doctrine of the total unconsciousness of the dead, or give up their claim to conscientious honesty in its maintainance, if in the face of this argument they continue to advocate it. In this view of the subject the question of the parabolic nature of the naratives is entirely superceded, by the fact that Moses and the prophets taught the doctrine.

Personal Acquaintance of John the Baptist and Christ.

It seems sister Williams is not satisfied yet with the above subject ; therefore I will offer one more article in its defence, and then I am done. It seemed a little strange, while I only incidently made the remark, that the sister entered into the controversy ; but on my part it shall be in a friendly way, and that will do no harm ; on your part it has been the same thus far, and thoughts have been brought home to me that are valuable indeed, such as these, "Am I as intimately acquainted with Christ as I ought to be ?" This is a question that might be asked of every reader of the COMPANION, and every reader might answer ; but I fear many would be obliged to say, "I am not as well acquainted as I should be ;" and others must say in truth, "I know him not all, I have never been endowed with the Holy Spirit ?" O sinner, think before you die. If you do not form an acquaintance with him in this life, in the day of judgment you will have to come before him to hear your final sentence, which will be, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." I hope this will absorb the the thoughts of all who may read this article ; not on account of our controversy, but seeing there are other important things connected, which have been drawn in by the sister, that are of more value to know than all the world—"To know the true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

The Question before us is, Were John and Christ personally, or intimately, acquainted ? John himself says, "I knew him not." Will we refuse to take his word, when given to us by the inspired evangelist ? I am willing to accept it as true. But says sister Williams, "He did not know him as Christ, but as his relative or friend." By what authority do you say this ? Is not the language emphatic ? and should it not be taken in its broadest sense ?

Now let us reason together on other subjects, and see what the result will be of such reasoning. It is said, John's voice was heard in the wilderness : "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his path straight." He preached "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Where did he go to perform the work ? In the river of Jordan. This is the key that unlocks the mystery : the veil is lifted away, and we behold the glory of God. What does supposition say at the present day ? "The work may be performed in a house." As an evidence we will cite you to the case of Paul. When Ananias said to Paul, "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins," he was in a house. Another says, "We suppose the Jailor was baptized in the house, and there was no river in the Jail." Then comes another and says, "Children ought also be baptized ; for Lydia and her household were baptized, and there must have been children among them." This way of reasoning is not only intended to destroy the idea of going into the river to be baptized, but to destroy the idea of immersion, and substitute sprinkling in its stead ; which they have done. And what a confusion it has brought about ?

Again, we assert there was something about the appearance of Christ, which would lead John to make the remark he did. History gives us the key to his personal appearance. It says, "The hair of his head was the color of a well-ripened hazel-nut, and parted in the middle ; his beard was of the same color, and his face was without spot or wrinkle. Showing the perfection of his material system, for which we have good reason to conclude that John saw in him the perfection of human nature. While God who gave him his commission, he said there was one to follow him that was greater than he. Naturally he would be on the look-out for him. One of the evangelists only (if memory serves me right) says, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" which is an intimation that he might have known him, while another comes up and says emphatically, "I knew him not," which is stranger than an intimation.

You say, "We ought always to accept the scripture in its most simple and natural sense." Truly, with all my heart will I receive such doctrine; for it is given in itself, in simple language, so the lowly may understand, and brings it within reach of all, so none have an excuse.

Then, in the first place, John says, "I knew him not." That is plain, and simple, and easily understood, is it not? Yes, positive. Now, if we can bring up some circumstantial evidence, pointing in the same direction, it will strengthen the idea. Luke 1: 80, "He was in the wilderness, till the day of his showing unto Israel." In the 3rd chapter, 2nd verse, "The word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness. And he came into the country about Jordan, preaching," &c. Now a glance at the map will show that Hebron lies south of Jerusalem, perhaps thirty or forty miles; and one of the places that John baptized at was Aenon, near to Salem, which is nearly north of Jerusalem, considerably farther from that city, and we are told by history, that Jesus walked seventy miles to the place where John was baptizing, to perform that work of righteousness imposed on him; which was south from Nazareth, which would make a great distance from Hebron to Galilee. And they did not have rail-roads to travel on. The Savior himself says, "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." He was very poor and had to go on foot. Much more might be said, but I will forbear. If we were as willing to perform the work of righteousness as was the Savior we would walk one mile willingly for the privilege, would we not? Then who will be the first one? GEORGE WORST.

This World is not Our Home.

O when shall it be, that we shall be separated from this world of sorrow. This world is not our home. No, by no means. We do not wish to stay here in this world always, for there is no lasting pleasure, peace or comfort, that can be obtained from it. Those pleasures that it affords are only for a season, and they soon fade away. Yes, those sinful pleasures which the wicked enjoy to-day, they may not enjoy them forever; for we do not know what to-morrow may bring forth. It may bring forth death; and then the pleasure, that earth can afford has disappeared and fled from us. We cannot take them with us into eternity; we will have to leave them behind. And hence, it would be well for us to turn our backs to the world now and set our faces Zionward, and run with patience the road that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; and believing that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. But some will say, I cannot leave the pleasures of this world; for my youthful friends and companions will not love me any more, and they will point "the finger of scorn at me," and say why is it, one so young should forsake the pleasures which the young so well enjoy. Oh listen not, to such delusive insinuations. This world is not our home. Heaven is the christian's home. How sweet the words, "a home in heaven." A few years ago my dear father was called away from this world, without an hour's warning. We miss him in the family circle; his seat is vacant in the church. But we feel assured that he fills a place in that upper and better world, where sickness and death cannot enter. There we hope was a seat prepared for him at the throne of God. Let me tell you what I know, by experience. I enjoyed myself as well as any one of you dear young friends. But of late, troubles and trials have visited me, and I shall never enjoy myself in this world. But I hope and pray for a world to come where joy never ends. Oh my dear young friends, why is it so hard for us to give up this world with its sinful pleasure; we cannot stay here long, and when we die our souls will wing their way to the home of God. But if we are not prepared, we will sink down into everlasting misery. Oh, let us try to be faithful in the discharge of our duty. My dear young sisters in Christ, we sought him but lately, but let us try to rest quietly in his bosom. We have many trials to undergo while traveling through this wilderness. But oh let us strive to meet where pleasures unceasingly bloom, where hunger and thirst are driven away. Let us try to be faithful, that when the time comes for us to leave this unfriendly and troublesome world, we may go to meet all the saints on high. How sweet and comforting is this thought. No dear brothers and sisters, troubles never last forever, the darkest day will pass away.

Your affectionate sister in the Lord,

Tiffin, O.

Girls, Read This.

Take my advice and don't depend too much upon the boys doing your work. Be kind to your brother. If he need a button sewed on his shirt, sew it on; don't tell him he ought to know how to do it himself, and not bother you. Do even more than that; if he needs a pair of pants, coat, or vest, make it for him. Set him a good example, and he will never refuse sisters anything they may ask in reason. Good, kind, affectionate sisters make good brothers. Study the interest of your brothers, and nine times out of ten they will do the same with you; by doing this we make good wives and husbands. More devolves upon a wife to make home happy than a husband. She has all the household affairs to attend to, and there are many little comforts she might think of during the day to make home cheerful and happy for her husband on his return from business in the evening.

True Friendship

It is one of the severest tests of friendship to tell your friend of his faults. If you are angry with a man, or hate him, it is not hard to go to him and stab him with words; but so to love a man that you cannot bear to see the stain of sin upon him, and to speak painful truth through loving words—that is friendship. But few have such friends; our enemies usually teach us what we are at the point of the sword. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but kisses of an enemy are deceitful."

Food for the Soul.

BY J. C. TAYLOR.

If the naturalist who vouch for it are not mistaken, the leaves of a certain tree are exceedingly offensive to venomous serpents. A traveler relates that, seeing a bird exhibit great alarm, on watching its movements he saw it fly to such a tree, pluck a leaf, and returning deposit it carefully in its nest. Having thus wrought for awhile, the mother-bird then purched on a branch overlooking her young, and watched the progress of a large serpent, which, coiling around the tree, slowly asceded until, with glistening eye and open mouth, its head was lifted above the edge of the nest. As it came in contact with the leaves with which the bird had covered her young, the snake droped from the tree as suddenly as though pierced through the head with a bullet.

However filled with the Holy Spirit with solicitude for the young nestlings of the class, the teacher can do no beter than to place them in Jesus' hand, and there shelter them as effectually as possible under the covering of his word. Teachers themselves can have no other protection against the destroyer of souls. With the aid of the concordance and reference Bible, a prayerful weighing of the lesson, along parallel and related passages, is far better calculated to give teachers faith, confidence, and zeal in the direct line of their work than all other helps combined. It is the method for rendering devout minds "mighty in the Scriptures." Among such one can hardly go amiss for good Sunday-school teachers.

Having thorougly prepared themselves as already indicated, we know of no private exercise which will better enable teachers to so wield the lesson as to accomplish the greatest amount of teaching in a limited time, than the careful writing out of a list of questions. These ought not to be taken into the class, but let the teacher by all means make the question-book which is to be carried there.

One cannot practice this exercise without learning some of the indispensable requisites of good teaching, i. e., 1. So to question as not to reveal the answer in doing it. 2. To put no questions which can be answered by yes or no. 3. Whether one can answer one's own question. 4. What the object is in putting any given question. 5. What kind of qustions should come first, what sort should follow next, and what last, for the purpose of application.

By thus ascertaining what and how extensive the ground which is to be traversed with questions, and also what questions will march connectedly over the gronnd, the teacher on coming to the class starts boldly out, holds tenaciously to the central idea, from incidental digressions returns without dificulty to take up the leading thread of thought and follow it to its legitimate conclusion and application.

But the teacher is to be especially warned against such as, for the sake of illustration, we will call swivel questions. A lazy minister is siaid to have accumulated a stock of sermons, which he called swivel sermons, because they wold go equally well with a large number of texts, and so called be brought into play the oftener. To drone over successive lessons with about the same questions in about the same order is dullness itself. —S. S. Workman.

To the Young.

Youthful reader, give your early years to God. There is especial promise for you. Those that seek me early shall find me; Perhaps you think, "I am too young to be religious yet; let me enjoy the world a little longer; I have plenty of time before me." Too young to be religious? But you are not too young to sin, nor too young to die, nor too young to be cast into hell. You may not live to reach manhood, much less old age. Multitudes die as young as you. If you enter the burial ground, how many of the graves are those of young people. Death may be even now preparing to strike you. Oh then come at once to Jesus. You greatly err if you think that religion will make you gloomy. It alone can render you truly happy. Many young people have tried it who will all tell you that the pleasures of piety are far better than the delights of sin and vanity. You will find that this is true, if you come to Jesus. Is it likely he will let his followers be less happy than the servants of the world? How can you live a day longer respecting him? He commands us to believe and obey him. Every day we put off repentance we commit a fresh act of rebellion, and treasure up wrath against the day of wrath. You say you will repent when you are old. But we need the Spirit of God to help us to repent. And if you say, while I am young I will serve Satan and not till I am near death will I turn to God," do you think God will give you his Holy Spirit at all? Is not this to quench thep Sirit? May you not become quite careless, and be disposed to repent? Very few are converted when old. If you come not to Jesus when young, it is likely you will not come at all. While you wait Satn works. Come to Jesus, come now; say from this moment, "Father thou art the giude of my youth."

Kind Wishes.

If, as we walked the street, we had prayers, winged desires, that we could fit to every man we met, we should very soon feel a difference in our habit of looking upon men. This has sometimes been carried to a ludicrous extent, as where Cotton Mather says: " 'When I see a tall man I say, 'God grant that he may be tall in grace.' 'God grant that his faults may be as short as his stature.' " You may carry it to the extreme, and spoil the thought; but it would be a gracious thing if we could clothe men in some such way with kindwishes —Beecher.

Be Kind.

Little children, bright and fair,
Blessed with every needful care,
Always bear this thing in mind:
God commands us to be kind—
Kind not only to our friends,
They on whom our care depends—
Kind not only to the poor,
They who poverty endure;
But, in spite of form or feature,
Kind to every living creature.
Never pain or anguish bring
Even to the smallest thing,
For, remember that the fly,
Just as much as you or I,
Is the work of that great Hand
That has made the sea and land;
Therefore, children, bear in mind,
Ever, ever to "bo kind."

Editorial Correspondence.

We expect to close this correspondence on the morning of the 20th, and mail it. We are writing at the house of brother E. L. Yoder. He is not at home, but the sister has kindly entertained us. Brother P. J. Brown is with us. Brother Yoder has gone to the Tabernacle, word having been received that the tent erected for holding the council, and for boarding, had been destroyed on Saturday night, or early on Sunday morning, by a storm, and an effort was intended to be made to repair it. Some farther particulars may be given of the circumstance at the close of this letter.

We left home on Thursday morning May 16th, in company with brother Urias Beachly, familiarly called Dr. Beachly; (and we want it understood that he is a brother), and several sisters. At Pittsburgh we were joined by a number of brethren and sisters from other parts, none of whom, however, of our acquaintance, except brother Henry Clapper, of Bedford county Pa.

We arrived at Wooster, Ohio, at 8 : 12, in the evening, and were met by brother P. J. Brown, and conducted to the house of brother Simon Winters, residing about a mile from town, where we were entertained for the night, as the brethren are in the habit of entertaining their brethren.

Next morning we called at the house of brother Jonathan Kurtz, but did not find him at home. Thence we went to town, Wooster, to visit our brother editor, Mr. A. S. McClure, of the Republican. We found him courteous and agreeable, and his office in a flourishing condition. He is an active politician, and a prominent Attorney at Law.

Thence brother Brown conveyed us direct to his home at Congress, where we arrived at about noon. Had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of his wife and two sons which constitute the family, with the mother-in-law in charge, who is quite aged, and has been rendered an imbecile by frequent attacks of spasms. Here we made our head-quarters for several days, and had a very pleasant sojourn. Brother B. is a man that will "wear" as he brings his good nature from home. In the evening we attended an Advent meeting in a hall, and were agreeably suprised to find our old friend Judson, whose acquaintance we had made at Tyrone, several years ago, occupying the desk: his text was: "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life," &c. We soon discovered that we were destined to listen to a regular "Soul Sleeper" discourse. We attribute to our friend a great degree of candor and fairness of reasoning, but his views nevertheless appear to us to be very erroneous. And then to make a hobby of mysterious unrevealed, that concern no one's salvation, it seems to us betrays a weekness.

We also visited sister Eliza Garver, a sister in the flesh to Elder E. K. Buechly, of Iowa, whom we also met at her house, on a visit. We found the sister somewhat afflicted, and considerably dejected on account of not being able to attend meetings, to which she had been looking with a longing desire. In the evening we tried to preach at the Mohicon meeting-house. On Sunday forenoon at Killbuck meeting-house, where we also had the pleasure of addressing the Sunday School. In the afternoon we visited brother George Flack's one of the ministers of this congregation. After a pleasant interview we set out for place of Annual Meeting, and here we have lodged for the night.

LATER.

Monday, 9 : 30 A. M. We are now on the ground, and have interviewed the Tabernacle. It had been almost an entire wreck. The tents was 80x220 feet. 80x100 was intended for the eating department, and the balance for council chamber. The whole had been covered with muslin. The storm uncovered it, tore the muslin, and ropes, and uprooted the posts, playing general havoc with the timbers. One great mistake had been made by having the structure too high. It is now being lowered by ten feet. It is hoped to have it in readiness in time for dinner.

Ecumenical council has been called to order in a small meeting-house. It is to be a private council. None but Elders to be included; but the door is open, and we see through the windows those who are no more Elders than your unworthy servant And there they sit and don't offer to go out, although it has been announced that the council is only for Elders.

More, perhaps, to-morrow.

And now the great first episcopal council among the Brethren is among the things that were. We did not hear a word of its proceedings, first-handed; but we had the honor of eating supper with a member of that body, who is of a communicative disposition. From him we learned that the printers were not forgotten, and especially those who had the audacity to agitate the subject of Feetwashing since last Annual Meeting. But no bill was found against us.

There was a fair attendance of the elders. Among them were Henry Kurtz, Peter Nead, B. F. Moomaw, D. P. Saylor, H. D. Davy, J. Quinter, J. K. Umstead, Jacob Riner, D. B. Sturgis, Cadwalader, and other worthies of the Brotherhood. Considerable discussion was elicited, and participated in by a number of persons. Both Nead and Kurtz made speeches, but we could not obtain so much as a synopsis of their contents. Saylor read a lengthy report, as a member of the committee appointed by last Annual meeting. It consisted, we are told, in arguments in favor of the double mode of washing feet, more than of historical facts in regard to the early practice. Brother Riner also reported. It appears that brother Saylor had been appointed as the radical double-mode member of the committee, brother Riner as the radical single-mode defender, and brother Quinter as the conservative member. In accordance with this appointment brother Q. had acted well the part of a conservative, and gave himself no concern about the matter. The other two brethren were so far apart in their views and interests, that they did not get together at all, hence the two reports.

But you want the decision. Well, we are told, that several propositions were offered, forbidding any change in the churches now established, or those to be established; but that form was thought to be too radical. So it was modified so as to say no change shall be made from the double to the single mode. This decision is to be an answer or proposition to be submitted to the general council, nothing more. This decision is received with much satisfaction. The labors of today are looked for with much anticipation. The attendance is not very large, but quite large enough to be interesting.

Yesterday was showery, and the uncovered tent is very little better than no tent at all. But it is being repaired, and it is hoped it will be completed in time for council to-day. If not we will labor under great inconvenince.

All day yesterday there was preaching at different places on the ground. Some of it we unhesitatingly pronounce unedifying. So much about the Little Sister, the Wise Virgins the Bride, &c., to the neglect of the "weightier matters of the law," do not sound to us like preaching Jesus. But perhaps we don't know.

H. R. H.

Visitors.

On Thursday, the 16th inst., we were agreeably surprised, by an unexpected call from Eld. D. P. Saylor and brother Pfoutz (a deacon) both from Maryland. It was soon decided to have preaching in the Brethren's meeting-house at this place in the evening. There was a good attendance, considering the short notice. We had the pleasure of hearing brother Saylor for the first time. He preached an able sermon from the text, "But God be thanked that ye were the the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." Rom. 6 : 17–18. The congregation was not only entertained, but richly and heartily admonished, and we fondly trust the good seed sown may not be lost.

On the 24 inst. a number of brethren stopped with us on their return way from Annual Meeting, among whom were brethren B. F. Moomaw. C. Wertz, S. A. Fike, and Naff, from Virginia, and D. Hays, from W. Va. We had meeting in the Brethren's meeting-house in the evening. There was a fair attendance, and commendable attention. Bro.. Neff was the principal speaker. He delivered an interesting discourse from the words: "And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be save, and thy house." Acts 16 : 30– 31.

Our Love-feast was on the 25th inst. The brethren named in the foregoing paragraph, with a number of others from different parts, were present, and did good service. The meeting was largely attended, both by members and spectators. The order observed, and the attention given to the word preached, were commendable, and we hope the truth preached may have its designed effect on the hearts and lives of the hearers; and we pray the Lord to bless our brethren who labored so heartily for our spiritual welfare.

Editor's Absence.

The editor started on his way to Annual Meeting on the morning of the 16th inst. He may be absent for several weeks, laboring for the good cause in different parts of the West. We invite special attention to the Editorial Correspondence, which we expect to publish regularly during his journey. We hope he may be prospered on his mission, and that he may enjoy himself well; and also that his labors in the Lord's vineyard may be crowned with abundant success.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Bible.

The poor man may know nothing of history, or science, or philosophy; he may have read scarcely any book but the Bible; he may be totally unable to vanquish the skeptic in the arena of public debate, but he is nevertheless surrounded by a panoply which the shafts of infidelity can never pierce. You may go to the home of the poor cottager whose heart is deeply imbued with the spirit of vital christianity; you may see him gather his little family around him; he expounds to them the wholesome doctrines and principles of the Bible, and if they want to know the evidence upon which he rests his faith of the divine origin of his religion, he can tell them, upon reading the book which teaches Christianity, he finds not only a perfectly true discription of his own natural character, but, in the provisions of this religion, a perfect adoption to all his needs. It is a religion by which to live, and by which to die—a religion which cheers in darkness, relieves in perplexity, supports in adversity, keeps steadfast in prosperity, and guides the inquirer to that blessed land where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. We entreat you therefore to give the Bible a welcome, a cordial reception; obey its precepts, trust its promises, and rely implicitly upon that Redeemer whose religion brings glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will to men. Thus will you fulfil the noble end of your existence, and the great God of the universe will be your Father and your Friend; and when the last mighty convulsion shall shake the earth, and the sea, and the sky, and the fragments of a thousand barks richly freighted with intellect and learning are scattered on the shores of error and delusion, your vessel shall in safety outride the storms and enter in triumph the heaven of eternal rest. G. B. SHIVELY.

Designed for All.

The sun shines for all, and the pure air of heaven is God's gift to all. To deprive men of either the sunlight or the vivifying air is to rob them of life. As truly does God design that His gospel, which declares salvation for all men, shall be the inalienable right and inheritance of all intelligent creatures. And having this gospel, and knowing its power, to withhold it from those who have it not, is to keep back from precious souls the saving rays of the sun of righteousness, and to deprive the dying of that which alone can give them life.

Do we misinterpret God's design in providing a Savior and making Him known? Surely with God's word in our hand and Christ's commission sounding in our ears, the question is not one for discussion. God is no respecter of persons. He will have all men to be saved. Heaven is to be filled with the redeemed ones gathered from the four corners of the earth—from every clime and nation. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Men everywhere are in darkness, and need light. They are in sin, and need deliverance. They are in bondage, and cannot redeem themselves. The gospel alone can give the light they need. The Gospel alone delivers from sin. The gospel alone reveals the Redeemer. All men need the Gospel. It is adapted to their necessities. God designed it for them. They ought to have it; they must have it, or they will perish eternally

To give the gospel to all men everywhere is the WORK OF MISSIONS.

Ecclesiastical View of Hats.

An American lady, the other day, in London went to church in a hat, not knowing the English prejudice concerning that article being worn in the sanctuary. All her friends looked at her very gravely, and spoke coldly. She could not imagine what was the matter, and asked her husband if there was anything wrong about her head. He scrutinized her, and told her no, but still she could see that it was the object of attention, and that many looked at her askance. Glad when Church was out, and not satisfied that something was not out of place or awry, she stopped in at a friend's who had lived lately in London, and told her of her embarrassment.

"Why," said her friend, "it is that hat."

"The hat! What is the matter with the hat?" said the young wife, taking it off her head. "My bonnet did not come from Paris, and the hat is a real beauty."

"So it is," was the reply, "but it is a highly improper head covering to be worn in church,—an abomination to Englishwomen. Your wearing it was a serious misdemeanor,—the veriest miss is not allowed to wear a hat to service. Seeing that your hat was wrong, people supposed something was wrong with you. You can wear a hat almost anywhere else, but if you want to go to church in England and be thought respectable, you must put on a bonnet."—Capital.

God Says Repent.

God says "Repent." The sinner answers, "I mean to. "Believe." "Yes, I intend to." "Prepare to meet our God." "Such is my purpose."—"Turn ye for why will you die?" "I intend to before the hour of death." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." "Yes, I believe that is the best way, and I intend to be zealous for God some time." "To-day is the day of salvation." "No, not to-day; I must attend to other concerns to-day." "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteouness." "But tomorow will do as well, or next month, or next year." "To-day if ye hear His voice, harden not your hearts" "Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season I will call for thee."

Thus does God invite, beseech and command, and thus do men hesitate, temporize and delay, till all is lost.

Here is the fatal error. Men perish because they will not have salvation to-day. They are doomed and damned because they defer that which they dare not reject.

They postpone, they wait, they neglect so great a salvation? Reader, you want salvation, you intend to have it. I have one question for you to consider, and that is—when? —Christian.

Wife, Lady, Mistress.

Who marries for love, takes a wife; who marries for fortune, takes a mistress; who marries for position, takes a lady. You are loved by your wife, regarded by your mistress, tolerated by your lady. You have a wife for yourself, a mistress for your house and friends, a lady for the world and society. Your wife will agree with you, your mistress will rule you, your lady will manage you. Your wife will take care of your household, your mistress of your house, your lady of appearances. If you are sick your wife nurses you, your mistress will visit you, your lady will inquire after your health. You take a walk with your wife, a ride with your mistress, and go to a party with your lady. Your wife will share your grief, your mistress your money, your lady your debts. If you are dead, your wife will weep, your mistress lament, and your lady wear mourning. Which will you have?

The Kingdom of God Yet in the Future.

Dear brother Henry Spicher, in looking over the COMPANION, Nov. 28, 1871, I notice an article written by you on the prayer the Lord taught his disciples. You remark, that you thought there was a mistranslation where it says, "Thy kingdom come." In your remark you say, "His kingdom has already come, eighteen hundred years ago;" and you ask for correction, if you are mistaken. This, I really think, is a wide mistake, if the language of the Savior be true. If the kingdom of heaven had been in existence at that time, I cannot see the necessity of praying for it when it was already established. I am well aware that it is proclaimed by all the different denominations of the Protestant church of the nineteenth century, who do not discern the glorious things that God has held in reserve for all that love his appearing and kingdom. I am aware that the doctrine is taught that the church is the kingdom referred to in Daniel 2: 44, where he says, in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. I will now endeavor to show from God's word, as he has taught us through his dear Son, and them that heard him, that the church is not the kingdom; and hence, the kingdom is yet in the future. In the first place I will call your attention to the testimony found in Acts 9: 13. Saul is here represented as having done much evil to the saints; and the saints here are none other than the followers of Christ, those who are represented as being in the church of God. In 1st Cor., 14: 33, we have the following language, "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." This testimony settles the fact, that the saints are now in the church. From Daniel 7: 27, we learn, that "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, "shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." The kingdom then is to be given to the saints, to those who are in the church; and if the kingdom is to be given to the saints, the church cannot be the kingdom. In James 2: 5, we find the following language, "Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heir of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" Instead of being in the kingdom, as some argue; according to James, the best of authority, they are only heirs. But when will they receive the inheritance, namely, the kingdom? Answer, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep." Then shall the king say to them on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matth. 25, 31—34. When the Savior comes again, the saints will inherit the kingdom. If then the saints are heirs of the kingdom, and they are to receive it at the second coming of Christ, the church cannot possibly be the kingdom for which the Savior commanded his disciples to pray. It will not be denied by any, that men and women, are composed of flesh and blood, and are mortal, and not immortal, as taught in this present age. Paul says, 1 Tim 6: 6, God only hath immortality. And we Christians are commanded to seek for glory, honor and immortality, Rom. 2: 7. Then if the body of the church is composed of flesh and blood, it cannot inherit in this condition the kingdom of Christ and of God. 1 Cor., 15: 50. Another reason may be argued. That the church is not the kingdom, is learned from the language of the Savior, when he says, "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven," but we see it is a very easy matter for a rich man to enter into the church, much easier than for the poor man. Hence we see clearly that the church is not the kingdom.

Again, Acts 14: 24, which was sometime after the day of Pentecost, we here learn that the apostles were confirming the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, telling them, including themselves with the disciples, that we must through much tribulation, enter the kingdom of God. They certainly were in the church, or the apostles would not have called them disciple's and exhorted them to continue in the faith; they must have had observed the first principle which is baptism. Then if they were in the church, and were to go through tribulation before they could enter the kingdom; the church cannot be the kingdom. Again, 2 Peter 1: 2, "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, through the knowledge of God. According as his divine power has given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of him who has called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these, ye might be made partakers of the divine nature. And besides give all dilligence, add to your faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, and so on. Then he says for if these things abound in you, they make you, that ye be, neither barren nor unfruitful, in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." The apostle here enumerates the graces that are to adorn the Christian life, and his language applies only to those who are in the church of God. In the 10th and 11th verses, he addresses the people of God, as follows, "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so, an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ." Now if one must be in the church, in order to possess the christian grace and obtain an entrance into the kingdom, it intuitively follows that the church is not the kingdom. Again, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. When you shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom; and you yourselves thrust out. They are not in the church that we know, and none will dare to admit they are, but they are gathered to their fathers, and their fathers in their graves, until Jesus will come the second time, then their graves will be opened, and they will come forth. So if they are not in the church, as we can clearly see, and are to enter and inherit the kingdom, the church cannot be the kingdom.

Again John 3 : 4, Jesus said unto Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. He also said, that which is born of flesh, is flesh, and that which is born of spirit, is spirit," Paul says, there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body, it is sown a natural body, and raised a spiritual body, 1 Cor. 15 : 44. Paul said to the Phillipian brethren, he looked for the Lord Jesus to come from heaven ; "Who should change the vile bodies, that it might be fashioned like unto his glorious body," Philip, 3 : 21, and 1st John 3 : 2. So it is clearly seen that the birth of the spirit in John 3 : 5,—refers to the resurrection ; and a man must be born of the spirit before he can enter into the Kingdom. Therefore the church cannot be the kingdom. Again let us look at Daniel 2 : 44—he says, in the days of these kings : What kings ? We see the different parts of the image represented as different kingdoms ; four universal ones ; the fourth, which was the feet ; "he says, whereas thou sawest the feet and toes," part of potters clay, and part of iron The Kingdom shall be divided, and it is a historical fact, that Rome was divided into ten kingdoms, corresponding with the ten toes. In about the 5th century, in the days of those kings, this being a plural noun, meaning, more than one king must exist, when God sets up his kingdom, so if the 4th universal kingdom was not divided until the 5th century it is manifest that the kingdom was not set up in the days of the apostle. My dear brother, I humbly conceive that I have given testimony sufficient to establish the fact that the church is not the kingdom of Christ and of God And that was not set up in the days of the apostle's, and that they looked for it to be set up when the king comes to reign in it. Then what an important matter it is that we should pray for his kingdom to come ; while we do not see his will done here, on this earth, in the days of the king ; but seeing kingdoms and churches destroying each other. But the kingdom of God shall never be destroyed. May we all labor for an admittance into the kingdom, is the humble prayer of your brother in the glorious hope of immortality.

Report of Travel.

Dear Companion : I will give you a brief report of travel. I left home on the 11th of April for Indiana. Arrived at Bourbon on the morning of the 12th. Found Salem College all alive, and the students of my acquaintance all doing well. 13th, went to Plymouth, where I met my uncle, Samuel Bieler, who took me to his home and cared for me until Monday morning, the 15th. We enjoyed three interesting meetings with the brethren and sisters of the Union congregation at this place, near Plymouth. Brother John Kniseley is the Elder.

Here the Brethren have a very interesting Sunday School. I had the great pleasure of being with them on Sunday afternoon. The school is just in its infancy ; but it is certainly a very large interesting "infant," bidding fair for future usefulness. It was organized two weeks before I was there. The attendance was large for a country school. The attendance on the day I was present was 112 ; on Sunday previous, 137, a funeral having kept some away when I was there. Chapters reported read through the week 879 ; chapters read in three weeks 2397. The members are alive and working here ; and if they can keep the enemy at bay, no doubt will prosper. May God help them. There was an addition to the church here on Sunday.

April 15th, started to South Bend, Ind. ; but being storm-stayed. A heavy snow-storm in the afternoon, prevented me from reaching South Bend until the 16th. Remained, visiting members in the Bend until the afternoon of the 17th, when I was taken to the Whitmore meeting-house, in the evening, and lodged with my brother David Miller.

The next morning I was taken to the D. M., of the Northern District of Indiana. Had a pleasant meeting. As there was some difference of understanding among the brethren concerning "Salem College," at Bourbon, that question commanded some interest. It was finally decided that the school at Bourbon called Salem College, is the property of the church of the Brethren, or German Baptists, of the Northern District of Indiana. Brethren and others can rely upon that institution as belonging to the Nortnern District of Indiana. After the District Meeting closed, I was taken to Bourbon, and the next day visited our esteemed old brother Eld George Shively and the sister, his wife. They were both feeble. They are living in the house with their son Eld. David Shively. Attended meeting next day and evening. And at 9:26 P. M. took the train homeward-bound, and arrived the 22nd ; found all well. Thank God.

Yours as ever.

From the Bethel Church.

Brother Holsinger : I have often thought of writing for the Companion, and as often as I thought of writing, that often I felt myself unqualified for the work And this rainy Sabbath morning, I have ventured for the first time, to take my pen in hand for that purpose ; whether I will be able to write anything that may be deemed fit for the press, I know not. First, I would say, that by the mercies and goodness of God, all the brethren and sisters in this arm of the church are in their usual bodily health, and also alive in the good cause of Christ. Second, I would say that we had our Annual Council on the 13th of this month ; all worked in union and love. We held an election for a speaker. The lot fell on our beloved brother Joseph Glick. May God grant him wisdom and grace, so that he may be able to bear up under the cross that is put upon him ; and may he walk and conduct himself in such a manner, that his light may shine as a city that is set upon a hill ; that he may be able, by the help of God, to bring many precious souls to Christ. And may he walk so as to lay a good example for the younger brethren and sisters. He has a faithful old soldier to stand by him. In conclusion, I would say to the rest of the brethren and sisters, let us all try to live faithful in the good cause ; let us fight the good fight of faith, so that we may obtain the crown. To those who are yet young, or might say babes in Christ, be faithful unto death and you shall obtain a crown of righteousness. You have just made a start. You have just turned your backs to the world, and may expect troubles and trials in your journey through life ; but do not be discouraged for you have a friend that is always near, and ever ready to help in time of need So I would say to the young, if you meet with temptations, if you see that the world frowns at you, and points "the finger of scorn" at you, because you are trying to serve God, then cast your cares on Jesus, and don't forget to pray. Now I shall close, brethren pray for me, so that I may live faithful in my calling.

From your weak and unworthy brother, JOEL GLICK.

Forest City, Holt Co., Missouri.

Answer to Brother J. Y. Heckler.

Dear Brother: In justice to myself, I will try, in love, to make some reply. You say, it seems a little strange for a brother to ask an explanation of a portion of scripture that is so plain as John 12: 14, and that likely the person asking is a stranger, and does not know that the Brethren practice Feetwashing.

Well, I have seen Feetwashing among the Brethren for 50 years, and have helped the Brethren wash feet for 40 years, and hope to help while I live in this world of trouble and temptation.

Again you say, "Should the querist be a brother, I cannot see what his object is in asking for an explanation of what reads so plainly as this, 'If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought to wash one another's feet.'"

Now let us turn to Hebrews 10: 25, which reads thus: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Now compare these two verses, John 12: 19 and Heb. 10: 25. Christ said, "Wash one another's feet." The Brethren say, "We must change often, and not wash too many, or it will not be washing one another." Paul says, "Exhorting one another." Now this is the query: If, in John 13: 24, "one another" means "change often," what do the same words mean in Heb. 10: 25? Please give an answer to the query.

As regards your explanation on Heb. 10: 25, we cannot see alike. Paul speaks of "the day approaching," and not of the day in which he lived. See 2 Thess. 1: 4—10; 2 Tim. 4: 8, and you will see that that day is yet in the future, but may soon come, whether we be prepared or not; therefore we ought to exhort "one another", and so much more as we see the day approaching," so that we may receive the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give us at that day, if we hold out faithful.

Yours in brotherly love,
J. G. NEHER.

Brother Henry:—You will please make the following corrections in my article in C. F. C. No. 20. 1st column "that flows in its superabundant character the loving efficacy," should read, saving efficacies. Sixth line, 2nd column, should read we are living under the spiritual law of grace. Further down in the 2nd column, he has tendered you his saving efficacies, instead of "loving efficacies."

Brother Holsinger:—Will you please correct a mistake in the article I wrote on page 253 No. 16? In place of "plenty pine timber," plenty pine lumber shipped, as I do not wish to have anything misrepresented.

In Huntingdon county, Pa., May 14th, JOHN T. QUINN. He was buried at Ennisville, same county. Funeral services by a Methodist minister.

At Tyrone, Blair Co., Pa., JAMES QUINN, born September 24th, 1835, died March 13, aged 36 years 5 months and 20 days. Funeral services by a M. E. minister.

Wm. H. Quinn.

Dayton, Montgomery Co., Ohio, May, the 8, of fever, and whooping cough, LIZZIE FRICK youngest daughter of Wesley R. and Elizabeth W. Frick, aged 1 year 6 months and 4 days. Funeral services by brethren Malsbee and Brower, from 2nd Samuel 14—14.

In the Rock River branch, after a short illness, of typhoid pneumonia, JOHN E. LICHTY, son of brother Levi and sister Annie Lichty, age 15 years 9 months and 11 days. His remains rest by the side of his younger brother, Daniel, and two baby sisters, Annie Susan and Mary Belle, whose obituaries have been noticed previously; while two other dear little ones rest in a quiet little grave-yard near Somerset, Pa. Death, with its ruthless hand has cut six blooming roses from one family; leaving their parents and four children to mourn their irreparable loss, and to prepare to follow them. "Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O death!" Daniel Lichty.

Died near Gilead, Miami County Ind., on March 6th, 1872, sister ESTHER MOREHART, aged 81 years, 2 months and 20 days, after suffering all that flesh is heir to, yet not a murmer passed her lips, but with perfect resignation she bore all, setting an example for her numerous relatives and friends which is truly worthy their imitation, and greatly admonishes them to first seek the kingdom of God. She was truly a veteran in the great cause of Christ, and was ever faithful. She joind the Church near Ashland, Ohio, together with her late husband, John Morehart, 16 years ago. Her husband's remains lie in what is called Dickey's Burying Ground, near Ashland, O., and she lies at Gilead, Ind., yet we believe their spirits have joined each other in the better world. The funeral discourse was delivered by David Bechtelheimer, from the words, "And I heard a voice from heaven saying write," &c. Though she is dead, yet her ever kind voice speaks to us with all the solemnity of a faithful Christian, bidding us to be watchful.

Mary Thomas.

Died, in Knox County, Ill., SOLOMON FINK. He was born in Fredric Co., Maryland, and Emigrated to the West in 1846. He died March 18th, 1872, aged 69 years, 8 months and 4 days. Friend Fink was a warm friend to the Brethren, and expected to join them, but like many put off too long. Funeral services by the writer.

Samuel Tennis.

Died, in the Green Mount Congregation, Rockingham County, Valley of Virginia, April 9th, 1872, Elder BENJAMIN BOWMAN, aged 86 years, 9 months and 11 days. Our old brother has been in the ministry upwards of 52 years, and has proved faithful to his calling until disabled by old age. The family as well as the Church has lost a good father, but we trust our loss is his great gain.

Funeral services by the brethren, Solomon Garber and others, from Phil., 1: 21, according to the feeling of the old brother before he died. He wished for the day of his departure.

Eld. Jacob Miller.

In the Otter Creek congregation, Macoupin Co., Ill., April 27th, of consumption, JONATHAN BRUBAKER Sen., aged 74 years 10 months and 16 days. He had been an exemplary father in Israel. He was assiduous in his ministration, being a deacon for many years, and untiring in his efforts to spread the gospel. He raised a family of ten children. They all became members of the church, four of whom he followed to their graves, leaving a wife and six children, with a goodly number of grand children, to mourn his loss; though we believe their loss is his eternal gain. His sufferings were intense though he bore it with patience and christian fortitude. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Henry Brubaker and C. C. Gibson, from 2nd Timothy 4: 6—8, to a large concourse of people.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Lord's Prayer!

Our childhood prayer, when lisping taught
Father, Creator, God of all the earth!
Who gives us life, denies us naught,
Art good in all by blessing from our birth!
In thee, omnipotent o'er all creation,
Heaven and earth acknowledge to Thy sway!
Hallowed we are in Thy subjection,
Be our duty to ever bless and pray.
Thy will is law, none dare deny the truth,
Name the created things that dare dispute
Thy omniscient eye will flash in sooth.
Kingdom in heaven, we bow us to the sway!
Come, heavenly dove, spread thy transplendent wings—
Thy mighty goodness, spread it all around,
Will us a place where Thy archangel sings.
Be it our duty—in wavering not be found!
Done be Thy will—from each created soul,
On earth let joy and gladness spring—
Earth bears no fruit, but takes us to thy goal;
As angels we come—as angels let us wing!
'Tis in the knowledge of thy bounteous grace
In knowledge, too, of Thy benignant smile,
Heaven and heavenly thoughts in thee we trace,
Give us a gracious life, and to us reconcile
Us on earth, and us in heaven, bless us evermore;
This goodness show and make us clean,
Day by day we'll ask it o'er and o'er.
Our Father in heaven! 'tis on Thee we lean,
Daily bestow Thy glorious grace on earth;
Bread of Salvation, bounteous pour around,
Forgive us for our sins, and bless us from our birth.
Us, we ask for blessings we do not well deserve—
Our lives are full of sin, but grant us pardon Lord!
Trespass commit we daily, our lives should not preserve
As we are wicked sinners, oh! pardon by thy word.
We stand convicted heavens before Thine awful throne—
Forgive us while in life, and take us to thy home.
Those blessings we were born with around us shone
Who falls from mercy's seat, 'tis action all His own!
Trespass we daily, Lord, against Thy holy laws—
Against the very tables Thou gavest us to obey—
Us iniquitous did plunge in sin's wide-open jaws.
Lead us to renounce the hell-born sinner's way!
Us the way was shown, the path so bright and narrow,
Not leading to perdition, but brighter than the day,
Into the gates of heaven, where never enters sorrow.
Temptation did beguile us: Thy mercy bids us hope.
But we are evil always, when most we should be good—
Deliver us from evil, with hell we dare not cope,
Us sinners here below are cleansed with Jesus' blood.
From vice to virtue fly—such is Thy kind command;
Evil is ever on us when we forget who made us.
For we are led by folly, and wickedness demands—
Thine awful care alone can make us truly righteous.
Is the path to heaven a road that's plainly pointed?
The path that leads to life and glory every mortal—
Kingdom on high oh! Sovereign Lord anointed
The way to glory show the weary, foolish prodigal!
Power supreme!—great God of heaven
And earth, and all created life—
The God alike of saints and heathen,
Glory is Thine, forever all the world despite!
Forever, yes—ten millions' angels praise,
And still forever and forever bless—
Forever sing, forever chant Thy lays;
Amen, oh Lord! and give us rest!

Music.

Music is divided into instrumental and vocal. Instrumental is but an imitation of vocal music; but the best instruments imitate but very imperfectly the human voice. The best music made by art is no comparison to that made by a well cultivated voice.

Music is harmonious. Sound is produced by vibrations of the molecules of the air. If the vibrations are regular they produce musical sound. Vocal music is produced by vibrations of the vocal cords. The difference between the speaking and the singing tones is due to the difference of the vocal vibrations. The rapid ones produce the singing tones.

Music has a great influence over the mind. It inspires the soldier to deeds of valor. No doubt many persons are induced by martial music to go to the battle field. National songs inspire the soul with love of home and country. Music has an influence over man in any situation. The despondent heart of the traveler in dreary lands, is cheered by the sweet notes of song. The savage delights in his war-whoop; the bacchanals in connivial songs; the patriot in national; and the christian sings praises to the Lord, to whom all things is due.

There is a great power in music. It will force the soul to bow down and worship God. It will wring adoration from the soul, and compel the heart to yield its treasures of love. Every emotion it holds subject to its imperative will. Music is a great source of pleasure which all can enjoy. All should engage in delightful song. The songs of childhood, especially our school songs, are not soon forgotten and their influence may be felt through life. The teacher should require his pupils to sing; for we believe all can sing if properly trained. He should be careful in the selection of music for the school-room.

Base and low songs should never be known, especially among those professing the christian faith. Such songs tend to engross the mind. Pure and holy music purifies the thoughts, and tends to keep our baser passions under foot. Let us then sing such songs as tend to elevate our condition; that create in us nobler thoughts; that are acceptable to the Lord. Sing of a Savior's love for the sinner. It will comfort the afflicted.

If music has so great an influence over the mind; if, as the poet says, it is very important to give due attention to it; to cultivate it well. It is a faculty that is capable of the highest culture, and an all-wise Creator no doubt intended that it should be cultivated. To neglect its culture would be wrong. Not only should music be taught in school and church, but in every family should be cheerful music. In nothing else do children take such delight as in music; they should then have an opportunity to sing as much as they please.

> "The man that hath no music in his soul,
> Is fit for treason, strategy and spoil,"

But powerful as music is for good, it is equally so for evil. If it can be employed to elevate the soul and enkindle the purer feelings of our nature, it will excite the worst passions. The greatest care should be taken in the selection of music, especially of vocal music. It is better to have no music than in a perverted state. It is, to the sorrow of all good christians, used in an improper manner, but let us guard against its abuse. How much better would it be for society if we had never known anything of sinful songs. Let us eschew such songs and like David of old "Sing unto the Lord; play skillfully with a loud noise."

How to spend Sundays.

We propose to give some practical suggestions, that will interfere with no man's liberty, as to how to get rid of a dull Sunday.

By law, every citizen in the state has the privilege of not doing on sunday what he is obliged to do on other days. The very practical question meets him, What can do that will make this Sunday privilege a profit or delight? Nobody is compelled to go to meeting, or to sing psalms or to read sermons, to fill up his time Every one can pick out some new and laborious employment; and, if he knows how, can have sixteen free and happy hours on one day in seven. It is of no use to object to Sunday as a Puritan sunday; for the law makes it a free day, and forbids work, so that it shall be free.

It is a somewhat singular fact, that, with this chance of a free day, so many can find nothing better to do than to do business, and just as on other days, as if we did not all work hard enough from Monday morning to Saturday evening. It is also something of a commentary on the capacity of many people for improvement and enjoyment, that, after a little extra scribbling and dressing on Sunday morning, they don't know what to do with themselves for the rest of the day, and only consent to go to church because it is a little less stupid than to sit at home and gape at their own dullness instead of a preacher's. Some try a cigar and a novel; others, a big dinner and a nap; others, sitting around a big stove, and spitting at it. But after all these resources have failed, the only thing left is to wish for Monday and go to bed early. Happy are those who in such emergency have young ladies on whom they can call.

I wish to suggest some things which can be done to add interest to the Sunday of those who find its freedom dull.

On Sunday morning sit down alone, and think what you have done during the past week; and agitate the question whether you have done just as you really think it is best and mean to keep on doing. Have you told any lies the past week? Count them on your fingers, if you can, and seriously consider whether you always mean to be a liar. Did you get drunk the past week, or come near it? Did you help to get others drunk? Did you talk temperance and visit the cupboard and to take those new "bitters?" Did you sell any poisonous liquor for good, or any poor home wine at a fancy price under a foreign brand? Was it well? Do you always expect to do such things? and when will you stop? Have you abused your neighbor, run down your competitor in other stores, slandered other politician's reputation the past week? These things are unspeakably mean; you know they are. God be thanked I havn't done them! But somebody does them. I ask that somebody whether he always intends to be a mean fellow.

Have you gambled or slunk into infamous dens, the past week? Nobody is obliged to tell me; but many do go to vile places every week, Sunday's included. It is a very good plan to keep on! What will twenty years of such practices make of a man?

Have you cheated any body in the last ten days? Have you decided any employer or kept back the just pay from any of your workman? Have you advertised deceptions of any kind? Does any money stick to you that belongs to anybody else? Are you going to make a cheat of yourself? What's to hinder if you are cheating now? Did you swear last week? Don't you swear more than you used to, when your mother taught you? Is there any particular benefit in it? Let us see if you can stop it in a week. Are you not smoking too many cigars—running up debts which you don't know how to pay; making a larger swell than your capital justifies—and getting ready for a smashup and a run? We hope not. But all these things happen, if any one is overdoing himself in these days, ought he not to know it and settle whether his course is best? It strikes me, that an hour on Sunday, of cool, healthy consideration of the actual status and doing of our week-day lives, would be an interesting employment, whether satisfactory or not.

Take another hour on Sunday to do somebody some good, for which you havn't the time on any other day. Write a letter to your mother, brother, or sister, whom you have forgotten for a long time. Hunt out a friend who has disappeared from your interest, and renew a cordial acquaintance. Go to see the folks who would be glad to see you, but whom you are not always glad to see. Visit the families of those who are working hard. Help to put some kind of a home feeling into everybody who is homeless. There are plenty of good acts, which are not—and on Sunday you want to do something uncommon. That is what the day is made for. I'm talking to people who find Sunday dull and the church unmeaning, and do not want to pay religion much attention. I do not want to drive you where you do not want to go. But we all ought to make of Sunday a finer day than any other, because we have the chance. Our daily toil makes us dull. Sunday ought to wake us up. Our temptations make us deceitful, hard and selfish. The daily life of men is burdened with sin and ugliness—streaked with deceit fouled with an appetite. It deserves to be improved. Sunday is improvement time. I believe that when any one begins to improve their time, he will soon see what a church Sunday will do. Friends, try my advice a little while.

Intimacy with Christ.

It is the wisdom of life, as well as its joy, to be always feeling this great need of Jesus. A true Christian feels that he could no more live for an hour without Jesus than he could live an hour without air or under the water. There is something delightful in this sense of utter dependence upon Jesus. It is our only rest, our only liberty in the world. It is the bondage of our imperfection that we cannot be directly and actually thinking of Jesus all day and night, yet it is astonishing how near we may come to this. Our very sleep at last becomes subject to the thought of Jesus, and saturated with it. It is part of the gladness of growing older, not only that we are thereby drawing nearer to our first sight of him, but that we feel our dependence upon him more and more. We have learned more about him. We have had a longer and more varied experience of him. Our love for him has become more of a passion, which, by a little effort, promises at some not very distant day to be dominant and supreme. The love of Jesus never can be ungrowing. In our physical life, as we grow older, we become more sensible to cold and wind, to change of place, and to alternations of the weather. So as we grow older in our spiritual life, we become more sensitive to the presence of Jesus, to the necessity of him, and to his indispensable sweetness. A constantly increasing sensible love of our dearest Lord is the safest mark of our growth in holiness and the most tranquilizing prophecy of our, final perseverance.—Faber.

Education is a better safeguard of liberty than a standing army. If we retrench the wages of the schoolmaster, we must raise those of the recruiting sergeant.—Edward Everett.

Cheap Sales.

There is something appalling in human slavery. It has been called by an eminent writer, "the sum of all villainies." There is implanted in the hearts of all men an opposition to slavery. No race will willingly submit to being sold as bondmen. In all ages of the world's history the enslaved have opposed their condition, and insurrections and desertions are common to the history of bondmen. If the question were submitted to us whether we would choose slavery or death, I doubt not but that we would say, "Give me death, rather than slavery." Men love liberty as they love life; hence, it is not strange that they oppose every measure looking to their enslavement. But while it is not strange that men dislike physical slavery, it is strange, that they have no dread of spiritual slavery. They do not only not object to being sold, but they sell themselves—and for naught! This was a charge brought against the people in olden times. It is a charge brought against many persons now. God says of many, "Ye have sold yourselves for naught." I will notice for what some people sell themselves.

1. Some sell themselves for money. Men have done this in all ages. Men are doing this now. Men will do this in the future. Strange as this may appear, man—noble man, God-like man, the noblest work of God, the master-piece of creation—sells himself for money. Judas sold himself for money, and a small sum of money too. For thirty pieces of silver he fell from his apostleship; and for just such a price men have been selling themselves ever since. I have known men who as long as they were poor were pious, but as soon as riches increased they set their hearts on them and fell from grace. And now let us see how cheaply that man sells himself who does so for money. Suppose the case of a young man who concentrates in early life to getting rich. He devotes all his time to making money. He is abundantly successful. He lives to old age. When he comes to close up life he casts up his estate and finds he is worth a ton of gold. He is then worth just that much of earth—for gold is earth. If I were to say he is worth a ton of limestone, or marble, or clay, you would be ready to say at once that he sold himself cheaply; and yet if he sold himself for a ton of gold he sold himself just as cheaply; for a ton of gold in itself is worth no more than a ton of any other part of earth. And that man who sells himself for money will realize some time that he sold himself very cheaply indeed

2. Some person sell themselves for the fashions of life. How many young persons are there now in the world who were once converted to God, who bade fair for a crown of life, but who fell by the way on account of some useless, foolish fashion! There is no price the devil uses so successfully for the purchase of souls as the fashions of the day. The devil gets volunteers by the thousands for whom he offers no other bounty than the world's foolish and often burdensome fashions. This number is not only counted by those who were once hopefully converted and have fallen from grace, but by the thousands who are kept from becoming Christians on this account. What multitudes all over the land would have become Christians long ago, but for some foolish fashion that they were unwilling to give up! How many persons are there who attend our revival meetings whose hearts are broken up, who can not conceal their convictions, but who are unwilling to yield because of their love of fashion! The struggle is between religion and fashion; and at last they fall on the side of fashion, and settle down in hardness of heart. The fashions of life are damning more souls than we have any idea of. I heard once of a young lady who embraced religion, whose mother was very gay and irreligious. She was opposed very much in religion by her mother, who, failing by eternity, resolved on this plan: "I wil plunge her in the whirl of fashion." She purchased a dress for her, had it made in the most fashionable manner, and, against her will, made her wear it. She sent her out in gay society; and in a very short time, as could be expected, she gave up her profession of religion. She soon took sick, and when told by her physician that she must die she requested her mother to bring that dress. It was brought. and, with a look of despair, she pointed to it and said, "Mother, that is the price of my soul." Cheap sale, indeed; and yet thousands of persons are doing this same thing every day. For ribbons and feathers and jewelry and style, men and women are selling their souls. And if not now, they will realize some time that they sold themselves for naught.

3. Some persons sell themselves for fame. Ambition is their God. They have none other. They want none other. A great name haunts them in their sleep, and in their waking hours. If they could but send their fame into all lands, then they would be content. And it is remarkable to what degree an ambitious man will go. He knows no bonds. The world is full of heroes in this respect. And yet how really worthless fame is! The passage from the tailor's bench to the presidential chair is short,—and it is about the same distance back again. How transient fame is! To-day the world may applaud; to-morrow it may deride. The multitude sung sweet words of approbation in the Savior's ears. "Hosannah! blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest!" In a few days the same multitude shouted these bitter words, "Away with him. Crucify him!" When Paul was shipwrecked on Malta, and the serpent fastened on his hand, the inhabitants called him a murderer. In a very short time they called him a god. And that man who sells himself for that which is so transient, sells himself for naught.

4. Some porsons sell themselves for pleasure. They give loose reins to all their appetites. They discard the idea of self-denial. Their motto is, "Eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." The question with them is, "How or where can I enjoy myself the most?" They never think of results. Where will this course end, or that course, is no question with them. They take no thought for to-morrow. They are men of the present. The drunkard is such a man. The sensualist is such a man. The glutton is such a man. Surely such persons sell themselves cheaply enough. There is this objection to such a course, that even here it recoils and brings disgust and hatred; and then it is bartering eternal bliss for momentary pleasure—it is selling eternity for time.

5. Some persons sell themselves for friendship—the friendship of the world. They formed worldly associations which they are unwilling to break. There is no telling how many persons are standing aloof from religion because of some worldly connection. When Pilate would have released the Savior, he was deterred by his fear of what the result might be among his friends; and when many persons would become religious they are deterred by the same motives. When that young man was almost persuaded to be a Christian, the thought came, "What will my companins think of such a course?" and that consideration kept him from becoming religious.

In a word, no matter at what price a man sells himself, he will be cheated. Persons who sell themselves will realize that they have sold themslves for naught.

Lawful Interest---Infallibility.

REPLY TO BROTHER E. J. MEYERS.

The Church of Rome believe in the infallibility of the Pope: his decisions are final. We, the brethren, as a Church, do not believe in the infallibility of any of our brethren; neither do we believe in the infallibility of the churches: we are in no danger in this respect. But notwithstanding all this, we yet believe that there is danger. We may not believe in the infallibility of the Pope or in that of the church, but we may get so far as to believe ourselves infallible: we may think that, just because God has gifted us in some way more than some of our brethren, we therefore must be their judges—that they must entertain the same ideas as we—that whenever we choose to answer a question that comes before the church with a no, without giving our reason for our decision, others have no right to say anything against it. Brethren, be careful. Although we may be able to rule whole churches, still we ought not to esteem ourselves too highly, or we may fall some day. We have come to an age when we want a reason for all decisions, from the exalted as well as from the humble, from the rich as well as from the poor; and we, who give our views on subjects before us, should remember this, and should not, if others entertain different ideas, denounce them as making untruthful and unwarranted allegations, misrepresentations,&c., &c. Let us all remember that we claim to be brethren. Now whether this comes under our heading I allow the reader of the C. F. C. to judge.

In regard to lawful interest, I will only say here, that I am very well pleased so far with our side of the question; not that I delight in the triumph over any of my brethren, but that what we have written on the subject is in harmony with the Spirit of the gospel. As far as I am concerned, this much I can say, that I have not written anything with the purpose of hurting the feelings of any of our faithful brethren. It is true, I might as others, have written to gratify the minds of some personal friend, but I believe rather in right than in might.

Now to brother Meyers's scrutinizing reply, I will only say, I feel very sorry that brethren do not agree on such a question; and were it not that brother Meyers's article is before the readers of the COMPANION, I should not say another word on the subject through the medium of the pen; as it is, I will answer.

Brother M. tells that he did not think he would have to say anything in proof or in defence of what he had said on the query. Be this as it may, I was told by different brethren that he entertained different ideas on the subject and would watch me closely. And other reasons I have to believe that brother M. was on the war path; consequently he ought not to think hard of me when I have my own opinion.

I say again, the query was asked for the benefit of the poor brethren, and not for the rich, and if brother M. wants an answer in their favor, then let him first ask a question; as the query is, so let the answer be. I have a good reason to believe, if I had not given my views on the subject brother M. would never have answered. But perhaps this is a presumption again.

It is not poverty which compels rich brethren to pay more than lawful interest; if they choose to speculate on money, we cannot help it they have to pay more.

It is claimed, by some, that what two parties agree on is lawful. But the law does not say so. The law of our state makes 6 per cent. lawful interest. A contract for a higher rate is not binding.

"How brother H. got the idea, I do not know." Brother M. should remember that he expressed himself to brethren on the subject; and if necessary, I will tell him to whom he did express himself.

"All the balance of his article was uncalled for." Yes, we hear sometimes what we don't call for, and more than we like to hear.

"How do you know this to be the case?" "Art thou a master in Israel and knowest not this?" But we will prove our allegation: "By their works ye shall know them." I have made it my business of late to talk to our brethren here at home; and find that I am correct in what I said. But more than this, whom do we send as delegates to our Annual Meeting? Do we not try to send the most sincere brethren? Does not brother Meyers, as well as I, know that all the elders are and should be among the most pious and sincere brethren? If we doubt their religious sincerity, why do we send them to decide those questions for the Church? But I know brother M. (if even he has no claim to the "pattern of dress or cut of hair"), will agree with me when I say that, if we want to find pious and sincere brethren, we will find them among the elders of the church. And what do these brethren say to us on the subject? Let brother M. read their decisions, and he will no longer say that I made an allegation without proof. But should he doubt their piety and sincerity, then I can not help it: I have good faith in their integrity.

"I, for one, do not believe that we have a brother in the brotherhood who will take all he can get unlawfully." I wish it were so. I would rejoice to have it proclaimed to all that such were the case. Wonder whether brother M. really believes so. Our money borrowing people can testify to the contrary. Brother Meyers's faith is certainly a dead one; it has no works. I could cite to a number of brethren to prove what I said on this point.

But we give the world cause to blackmail the Church of Jesus, by writing such articles. I doubt this. It is Satan and his angels who tremble when their works and machineries are exposed. We have not been sworn into any secret society, that we must keep secret all evil deeds which come to our notice. Perhaps some think so. Already we hear some whisper, that the writers of such articles shou'd be punished. They do not remember that they are the men. Brethren, you who claim to be governed by God's word only, you who profess obedience to it, you who would judge others and at the same time disobey the spirit of the gospel and the plain decisions of the Annual Council of the church, stop, consider before you strike; do not think yourselves infallible,

In conclusion I will only add, that, although brother M. has made use of some bitter language, I still feel nothing but love toward all. Hope the time may come when we will be brethren not only in name but in reality. Let us observe the golden rule, "What you would that others should do to you, do ye even so to them," so that, when our pilgrimage is ended here below, we may be acknowledged as brethren in Christ, is my sincere prayer.

M. HADY.

Watching and Waiting

One of the fatal consequences of not watching, is distinctly stated, "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief in the night, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come." The consequence of not watching, will be ignorance of time. What will be the consequence of watching? The inference is unavoidable that it will be a knowledge of the time. In answer to the agonizing prayer of the Son of God, "Glorify thy name," there came a voice from heaven, saying, "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." The disciples understood the words from heaven, while the people who stood by, said it thundered So will the waiting, watching disciples of Christ understand the voice of God when he shall speak from on high. But the unbelieving world will not understand his voice. "The wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand: but the wise shall understand." In comparing Noah's days and ours, the Lord continues: "In the days before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark; they knew not until the flood came upon them. So shall also the coming of the Son of man be." A picture of the present condition of the mass of mankind is here drawn. How dark the features! The people of the last generation will be as those before the flood. While the ark was being prepared, Noah preached and warned them of the flood; and they mocked him. He built the ark; they scoffed and jeered him. But he was a preacher of righteousness; his works were calculated to give knowledge. Every righteous sermon and blow struck in building the ark, condemned a careless, scoffing world. As the time drew nearer the people were more careless, more hardened, more bold and imprudent, and their condemnation more certain. Noah and his family were alone; and could one family know more than all the world? The ark was a matter of ridicule; and Noah was regarded as a willful bigot. But the Lord called Noah into the ark, and by the hand of providence, the beasts were lead into the ark, and the Lord closed the ark. This was regarded by the people as something wonderful; but it was soon explained away by the wise ones, so as to calm their fears. The day finally arrived. The Sun arose as usual, the heavens were clear. Now where is Noah's flood? was heard from a thousand impious tongues. It was a day of unusual feasting and sports. The farmer was caring for his stocks and lands, and the mechanic was pursuing his work. On the very day some were joined in marriage; and while all were looking to long years of happiness and prosperity: suddenly the heavens gathered blackness; fear filled every heart; then the windows of heaven opened; and the great deep was broken up: here and there came gushing up rivers of water. The valleys were fast filling up and thousands of human beings were swept away; some fled to the highest points of land; but the waters soon overtook them. There was no resting place for Noah's dove; the whole earth was flooded. All were still in death. Horrible death! made still more horrible, by being in consequence of slighted mercy. But where was Noah? Ah! safe in the ark, borne upon the waters, safe from the flood; for God had shut him in, until all the wicked were destroyed.

By most people the evidences given of the coming of Christ are considered insufficient to base faith upon. But mark, the tesimony and acts of one man condemned the people destroyed by the flood. The evidences taken were sufficient; otherwise the world would not have been condemned. But much more convincing evidences come pouring in upon us, that the day of the coming of Christ is near. And at the right time and in the right manner to fulfil certain prophecies. Wherever we look we see prophecies being fulfilled; while the knowledge of God, and the spirit of holiness are departing. Spiritual wickednes covers the land like a flood.

Home.

How much is comprehended in this little word—home! How much that is lovely, pure, and good! How much that is cheering to the soul! How much that is beautiful and sublime! Oh, the sublimity of this little word—home, can not be fully comprehended by the finite mind. As it surpasseth all knowledge in this world, we shall only be made to realize its grandeur when the ransomed of God shall meet at home in the eternal felicity, to raise their voices in clarion tones of praise to the infinitely Holy, and bask forever in the loving smiles of a dear Savior, where we shall again re-unite with kindred spirits that have long ago crossed the chilly waters of death, and are now amid the unceasing hallelujahs, in the celestial climes above.

"I want to be an angel,
And with the angel's stand,
A crown upon my forehead,
A harp within my hand,
There, right before my Savior,
So glorious and so bright,
I'd wake the sweetest music,
And praise him day and night."

Bnt there are two kinds of homes; viz., terrestial and celestial. The terrestial, if rightly appreciated, may give us a faint conception of the celestial. Oh! methinks what joy there is in a home where the influence of parental love is felt, and the incense of their hearts is raised to God in silent praise and thanksgiving.

"Wherever we may roam
There is no place like home."

Of all places the parental home is dearest. Well may we say, a home kindled with love and devotion is the paradise of earth.

There is beauty all around,
Where there's love a home ;
There is joy in every sound,
When there's love at home.

Kindly heaven smiles above,
When there's love at home ;
All the earth is filled with love,
When there's love at home."

Oh, then, my friendly reader, make home a happy one, and give your heart to God while young ; and then, when life's dreary hours are o'er, we will meet at home, sweet home.

Your young sister,
FANNIE E. SCHROCK.

German Baptist Church Annual Council.

FIVE THOUSAND PEOPLE AT SMITHVILLE STATION.

The following was clipped from the Wayne County Democrat, of Wooster, Ohio :

The Annual Meeting of the German Baptist Church of the United States commenced its session on last Monday, May 20th, on the farm of Cyrus Hoover, near Smithville station, on the P. Ft. W. & C. R. W., six miles north-east of Wooster.

The country seat of Mr. Hoover is one of the finest of Wayne county—a county noted for its pleasant places, and in which the many beautiful and well cultivated farms, and fine residences give ample evidence of the industry, thrift and consequent wealth of its farming community.

The grounds are splendid in every respect, the scenery from every point a landscape picture ; the white mansion of Mr Hoover prominent, overlooking broad meadows' and forests all green in their spring time, and beautiful to look upon.

Twenty acres of land are devoted to the use of the Council. The Council Chamber is 120 by 80 feet, joined to the boarding tent, both making a mammoth structure of lumber and canvas, eighty feet wide and two hundred and twenty in length, costing about $600, the expenditure for everything estimated at $3,000.

While rain was much needed, it was unfortunate that the heavy rain storm at 2 o'clock Sunday morning tore down a portion of the canvas-covering of the Council Chamber and Boarding tent, to repair which the organization of the Council was changed from Monday to Tuesday. (We regard this as an error, as Tuesday was the day appointed for the Council Æ).

Delegations from all portions of the country commenced arriving on Friday, augmenting from day to day, until yesterday (Tuesday) it is estimated that five thousand of the German Baptists are assembled at Smithville Station. Thus far there are delegates from the following States : Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Missouri, Kansas, New Jersey, Minnesota, Michigan, &c. Six hundred preachers are present, representing their church from every district in the Union.

Among the prominent Elders present on Monday, before organization, were, Henry Davy, Miami, O. ; C G. Lint, Dale City, Pa. ; B. F. Moomaw, Va. ; D. P. Saylor, Maryland ; Jacob Garver, O. ; Henry Kurtz, Columbiana, O. ; James Quinter, editor of the Gospel Visitor, Dayton, O. ; E. K. Buechly, Iowa ; George Irvin, Golden Corners, O. ; Joseph Rittenhouse, Blackcreek, O. ; J. B. Shoemaker, O. ; R. H. Miller, Ind. ; D .B. Sturges, Ind. ; John Metzger, Ill., and many others.

The church of the German Baptists, or as they are more familiarly known, "Dunkards" (Tunkers) was organized in Germany in the year 1708. Their creed is, that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of Salvation without observing all its requirements ; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-Conformity to the World, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son. They are non-combatants, opposed to war ; seldom vote on political questions ; pay their preachers no salary ; regard religious fervor, such as the "mourner's bench," as one of the most unholy innovations of the Christian religion ; and have beside other peculiarities of Faith, which they consider nothing without Works. As a people they are very thrifty, economical, industrious and the best, wealthiest and mildest of citizens.

The canvas was repaired on Monday afternoon. The Council organized at 10 A. M., Tuesday, and elected Henry D. Davy, Moderator ; D. P. Saylor, Assistant Moderator ; James Quinter, Recording Clerk and John Wise, Assistant.

The Council being organized, the minutes of the previous Annual Meeting at Maryville, Berks county, Pa., were read and approved, after which some time was taken up in receiving and taking action upon various reports of Delegates. Forty-two members were appointed a Standing Committee. (This is too high by perhaps fifteen Æ).

There was considerable discussion, and able argument upon several points of dispute.

FIRST.—"Has the Church a right to pass resolutions and make decisions, and enforce them without authority of the Bible?" Decided in the negative,

The next question was, "The Church shall not expel a member without Gospel authority." approved.

Another prominent point of discussion was, "What shall be done with a Brother who gets his life insured, and insists that there is no wrong in doing so, and refuses to withdraw from the Church." Laid on the table, after animated discussion.

As a public gathering, all things have been favorable. The crowd on Tuesday was about seven thousand, four thousand of whom ate dinner in the Church's tent, hundreds of others dining at the booths of Messrs. Reaser and Wagner.

The P. Ft. W. & C. R. W., has made ample provision for transportation, and Mr, E. W. Reaser the Railroad Agent, at the Station, by his uniform courtesy is making hosts of friends. He has a large eating-house —75 by 20 feet—on the grounds near the Council Chamber, where all of the best edibles are served. Mr. George Wagner also has an eating-house near, where are served up the most refreshing meals.

The Council will probably adjourn to-morrow (Thursday).

PERSONAL.—One of the prominent delegates to the German Baptist Council is Elder H. R. Holsinger, Publisher of "The Christian Family Companion," Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa., the Church organ in the United States. We were pleased to make his acquaintance.

Christian Family Companion.

DALE CITY, PA., June 4, 1872.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting, of 1872, held, on the Premises of Cyrus Hoover, near Smithville Station, Wayne Co., Ohio.

On account of the council of Bishops on Monday, most of the members who expected to attend the Annual Meeting, arrived at the place of meeting, and in the vicinity, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday morning, so that the attendance on Monday was nearly as large as at any other time.

On Tuesday morning, at nine o'clock, the council was opened. We did not arrive on the ground in time to witness the opening exercises, and consequently did not get the names of the Standing Committee. We could name many of them, but as many of them will be named in the lists of delegates, we will omit them here.

H. D. Davy was chosen Moderator, and D. P. Saylor, Assistant Moderator; James Quinter, Clerk, and John Wise, Reading Clerk.

All things were announced in readiness for business. We expected to hear the decisions of the Episcopal Council announced, and submitted to the Meeting. But we were disappointed, for instead thereof was called the

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF INDIANA.

D. B. Sturgis, Jacob Berkey } Delegates.

QUERY 1. Has the church a right to pass resolutions and decisions, and enforce them, to the expulsion of members, from the body, without thus saith the positive law of the Lord?

ANS. The church shall not expel any member without positive law of the Lord. Agreed to.

The answers first given, are the answers of the District Meeting through which the query was presented. Or if the District Meeting had failed to offer an answer, it will be one framed by the Standing Committee. In either case, we will say whether or not this meeting sanctioned the answer.

QUERY 2. What shall be done with a brother who gets his life insured, and insists that there is no wrong in doing so, and refuses to withdraw his insurance?

ANS. Bear with him until Annual Meeting decides. Joseph Arnold, from Va., said: If he gets his life insured he gives evidence that he has more confidence in man than in God.

According to this answer it became a question whether this meeting would coincide the matter. It was moved that the Standing Committee take the Query and frame an answer.

Others moved that the answer be amended. Others moved to table it, and so with three motions, all seconded, before the meeting, different things were talked over. Some thought we had answers covering the case. Art. 3, 1864 was read. Art. 45, 1865, also read. By this reading it was hoped to ascertain whether we really have a decision upon the Life Insurance question.

David Roop, defined the difference between Life and Fire Insurance showing it to consist only in names, and depending upon circumstances. One man has spent his life in accumulating property, while another's life is yet before him, upon which he asks an insurance.

Many other small issues were raised, and after some fruitless discussions the matter was returned to the Delegates of District Meeting which had sent it.

QUERY 3. Will this District Meeting ask the Annual Meeting to admit all Elders who attend Annual Meeting to equal privileges on the Standing Committe?

Given to the Standing Committee to wait for similar requests.

MIDDLE DISTRICT OF INDIANA.

Jacob Metzger, Delegate.

QUERY 4. For a reconsideration of Art. 20, minutes of 1870, and a petition to grant the request of said query.

ANS. That this District Meeting grant the request. The query and answer referred to were read, as follows:

Since the A. M. has at different times decided against the excessive use of tobacco, see minutes of 1864, Art. 19, but the object desired has not yet been realized we, therefore, ask the District Meeting to suppress its use altogether except for medical or mechanical purposes, and to deal with such as use it according to Matth 18, as we consider to deal with members for wearing fashionable garments, minutes of 1863, Art. 3, and minutes of 1866, Art. 27, The District Meeting favored the request and sent it to the A. M.

ANSWER. This A. M. renews its disapprobation of the use of tobacco, and especially at the time, and in the place of divine worship, and believes it should be classed with other vain and useless things.

Brother A. Leedy Jr. favored classing tobacco using among offences to which Matth. 18 is applicable; went on to show the reasons for so thinking. Jacob Steel and Elias Steel favored tobacco. J. R. Hanawalt, spoke of the evil influence of the habit upon the rising generation. He wished to have more restriction upon the matter.

ANS. It was agreed to readopt the former answer (see minutes.)

QUERY 5. Are members justifiable in refusing to commune with Bishops of other churches who tolerate pride in their churches when the Annual Meeting makes it their duty to enforce plainness?

ANS. Yes.

It was not clearly understood. John Shively explained. At a lovefeast some sisters of an adjoining branch, who were conformed to the world, were refused to be communed with, while the elder was allowed to commune with them. Now the qustion has arisen had the church a right to do so. D. P. Sayler did not like the answer. The query had its eye upon some one elder, who would be refused the communion, while other elders from a distance, who tolerated the same things, would not only be allowed to commune, but be called upon to officiate.

To this Jos. Leedy gave assent, but he did also not favor the answer, because it was too rash towards the young.

The following answer was then proposed:

ANS. Not unless it is understood that the elder refused to have been admonished, and labored with to have their members conform to the order of the church.

Adjourned first day noon, by singing the verse,

"Hoard up his sacred word,
And feed thereon and grow,
Go on and seek to know the Lord
And practice what you know."

AFTERNOON.

Opened by singing hymn 395.

QUERY 6. Has a church the right to enforce its decisions according to Matt. 18: 2.

ANS. Yes.

This answer was passed so quickly, and the next one introduced that we did not get it all.

QUERY 7. Is the gospel a perfect law to govern the church in all things necessary to salvation?

ANS. Yes it is.

QUERY. 8. Is a church allowed to assume the power to make laws, and add to the gospel, for the government of the church, and that additional law be made essential to salvation?

Tabled.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF INDIANA.

R. H. Miller, Delegate.

QUERY 9. What is the ancient and established order of the church, when elders are called to labor in an other arm of the Church; are they to be taken into the private council with the laboring brethren of the church, or not?

ANS. They ought to be taken into the private council.

There was no order known to the oldest members, so it was thought good to make one which would be used. It was agreed to pass it "They may be taken into the private council."

QUERY 10. Is it according to the order of the Brethren in private council, that there be a unanimous consent of the official brethren, concerning any matter, before it can come before the church?

ANS. The official members should not bring a matter before the church, if they are divided, until they have called the assistance of the Bishops of adjoining branches.

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Sam Lehman, Enoch Eby } Delegates.

No business.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

John Metzger, Rufus Gish } Delegates.

QUERY 11. Has no answer. Must be referred to Standing Committee.

NORTHERN IOWA AND MINNESOTA DISTRICT.

E. K. Buechley, Delegate.

No business.

MIDDLE DISTRICT OF IOWA.

Christian Long, Delegate.

QUERY 12. Can the church tolerate a brother or sister in the body, that is a member of the society or order called "Grange," or Patrons of Husbandry?

ANS. Concide that no members should have anything to do with such order, it being a secret bound, and from appearance a political association, and members who have united with it, and persist in it, should be dealt with as transgressors.

C. Long explained. The order referred to pretended to have at heart the interests, more particularly, the interests of the farming community, in furnishing farming implements and machinery without agencies, &c. It was not positively certain that the society was oath-bound, though it was believed to be, and was known to be very secret. Both sexes are admitted, and women especially desired for officers and solicitors.

The above answer was adopted.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA.

Daniel Zook, Delegate.

No Business.

DISTRICT OF KANSAS AND NEBRASKA.

Wm. Gish, Delegate.

QUES. 14. Is it consistent with our profession and the Gospel, for Brethren to follow so-called Christendom and the world, in erecting High Schools?

ANS. We consider it not according to the Gospel. See Acts 4: 13. 2 Cor. 6: 14—18. Rom. 12: 16.

C. Long thought the schools among us and all individual enterprizes, therefore he thought there was no occasion for action in this case.

Davy thought there was no case that this query covered.

Hunsacker was very fearful of such schools.

Query 51, of 1858, with its answer was read.

Inasmuch as our fraternity has got very large, and the Brethren have from time to time devised means and ways to hold our Annual Meeting to avoid expense, labor, and confusion. Could we not still get on a better plan? We suggest a plan: Let the churches composing the several District Meetings convene as heretofore, and let those District Meetings have the privilege of sending one representative for every two churches composing the District Meeting, to the Annual Meeting; and let those representatives compose the Annual Meeting, which would bring the number within the limit, that our Annual Meeting could be held almost anywhere within the brotherhood. And we think matters could be disposed if more satisfactorily. We submit this to this meeting for consideration.

Tabled.

Other queries of a similar nature were asked for, and the following were presented :

There was but one more which was in the form of an appeal, which was tabled and on account of its offensiveness, it was forbidden to be published, by adopting the following resolution, which is the cause of its non-appearance in these columns :

Resolved that the appeal from Missouri, in regard to Salem College, be not permitted to be published in the COMPANION.

The discussion on the first query was then resumed.

Quinter thought we could not go backward. It had been properly remarked, that we could not go backward on the subject of tobacco, and he thought we cannot now go backward upon this question. We had last year tried to set a guard against the evils that brethren are fearing. Now, have those who are now bringing these resolutions, examined the workings of those efforts or restrictions ? It appears to him too soon to have given it a proper trial, and therefore he moved for longer time for a fair trial.

Hanawalt said, the reason members of the church at Salem College are committed to the charge of the church there, was because it is thought that is the proper place for all such questions to be referred to, and not to Annual Meeting.

Saylor was glad that fears are entertained when real dangers exist. He remembered 20 years ago when the Gospel Visitor started up, many brethren feared the church would now be ruined. Now what do we think?

Quinter stated a fact. Clemantine in Alexandria was connected with a High School, and yet he wrote upon the hair, the dress, &c., stating that at that time, keeping a High School did not necessarily imply that we must become proud. This he could substantiate if necessary.

Workman thought that we have always been patronizing High Schools, and that too the schools of the world and sects, and we would certainly better send them to a school conducted by the Brethren, under the supervision of the elders of the church.

Peter Nead moved and R. H. Miller seconded, to table the papers on the subject of High Schools, and they were tabled.

Adjourned at 5 P. M. by singing "Father I stretch my hands" &c., and prayer.

SECOND DAY.

Hymn "Let thy kingdom, blessed Savior," &c., and prayer by the brethren.

The following preamble and resolution were then adopted, without discussion : Whereas complaint has been made that some members have no time to speak, while others speak several times.

Resolved that no brother shall speak more than once on any question, without permission from the meeting.

QUERY 15. Is it right according to the gospel and our practice, for one arm of the church to delegate the power of restoring back to the church, a member, who had formerly been expelled from the church ?

The answer was, that it was by sending a committee.

QUERY 16. Does this District Meeting understand the Annual Meeting to mean, that we should dispose entirely of our likenesses, when they advise us to put them away? See minutes 1869, Art., 21.

ANS. We consider that the decision of the A. M. is to destroy them.

D. P. Saylor did not so understand the decision referred to. The design was to put them away from their tables, so as not to be offensive to those who take offense at them.

R. H. Miller thought also that it was not so understood, at any rate it was not so carried out.

Former minutes were read as follows :

"Whereas it has been repeatedly decided at our Yearly Meeting that it is wrong for members of the church to have their likenesses taken, what then is to be done with members that have their likenesses taken?

ANS.—We consider it not right for members to have their likenesses taken, and if they have done so, they should be admonished to put them away."

B. F. Moomaw also so understood it, and remembered that it had been so explained, at the time the above decision was made.

The following answer was then adopted.

This Annual Meeting understands the words "put them away," to mean to put them out of public sight.

QUERY 17. What is to be done with a congregation which tolerates its members in taking illegal interest for money loaned, after the Annual Meeting has decided again and again that it is wrong to do so ?

ANS. This District Meeting considers that that church should be visited by the elders of adjoining churches, and set in order things wanting.

Passed.

QUERY 18. Is it according to gospel and the spirit of Christ, for brethren to have their property and lives insured.

ANS. We consider not according to Gospel, and advise brethren to put their trust in God. See Luke 16 : 15. 2 Cor. 6 : 14—18. Rom. 12 : 16. Heb. 10 : 35.

Tabled.

QUERY 18. A request that the Annual Meeting of 1872 annul the answer to the 23rd of query 1870, and adopt in lieu of it, the answer to article 10, 1857, including all musical instruments.

Tabled.

SECOND DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Solomon Garber, Jacob Thomas } Delegates.

One query, which had no answer, and therefore fell into the hands of the Standing Committee.

District of West Virginia.

Martin Copner, Delegate.

No business.

District of Western Maryland.

David Long, Delegate.

No business.

District of Eastern Maryland.

D. P. Saylor, Delegate.

Query 19. Is it according to the gospel, and the order of the Brethren, for members of the church to teach instrumental music in public schools or elsewhere? We desire the dear brethren assembled in District Meeting to give us an answer on this subject.

Tabled.

Art. 20. In regard to members who cannot be satisfied by their congregations, and are appealing to the A. M. for committees, who are not better qualified to decide than those at home, so it was asked that the Annual Meeting give the District Meeting authority to settle such difficulties.

A motion was made to give the District Meeting the right to dispose of all such cases according to its judgment, or appoint a committee to settle said difficulties; but it was not agreed to.

Postponed, without an answer.

Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

Jacob R. Riner } Delegates.
David Garlach }

Query 21. Resolved to call the attention of Annual Meeting to answer 7, 1871, either to confirm or reject the answer formed by the Standing Committee in 1871, reading as follows:

Should not this District adopt measures to provide and supply ministerial aids for churches where there is no preacher? and, also, to fill calls, and open missions, preach the gospel, and introduce the principles of the Brethren in the many sections within said District which they have not yet reached?

Ans. This Annual Meeting approves of the suggestions in the above query, as it is very necessary that churches or bodies of Brethren in which there are no resident ministers should be assisted. And, inasmuch as there are many localities where the Gospel, as preached and practiced by the Brethren, is not known, we think the District should adopt such measures as it judges best calculated to answer its purpose.

It appears the query was overlooked until after the adjournment of last Annual Meeting, when the Committee framed the above answer and had it appended to the minutes.

A motion was made to adopt the decision of the Standing Committee of last year. Agreed to.

Query 22. Resolved to request the A. M. to give an answer to query 12, 1871, then deferred to this meeting.

Similar questions were presented from other Districts all were considered under one, though they differed from each other.

P. J. Brown spake of the old order of fire insurance and referred to its practical workings.

Adjourned. Hymn 435.

Take Notice.

Words.

If words could satisfy the heart,
The heart might find less care:
But words like summer clouds depart,
And leave but empty air.
The heart, a pilgrim on the earth,
Finds often when it needs.
That words are of as little worth
As just so many weeds.

A little said—and truly said—
Can deeper joy impart,
Than hosts of words that reach the head,
But never touch the heart:
The voice that wings its sunny way
A lonely home to cheer,
Has oft the fewest words to say,
But oh! those few—so dear!

Make a Beginning.

Remember, in all things, that if you do not begin, you will never come to an end. The first weed pulled up in the garden, the first seed in the ground, the first shilling put in the savings bank, and the first mile traveled on a journey, are all important things; they make a beginning, and thereby a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance that you are in earnest with what you have undertaken. How many a poor, idle, erring, hesitating outcast is now creeping and crawling through the world who might have held up his head and prospered, if instead of putting off his resolutions of industry and amendment, he had only made a beginning!

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Dear Brother: I was made happy a few days ago by meeting with my old friend the COMPANION. It has been a long time since we met; we had a pleasant time in listening to all it had to say to us; some very profitable things it told us. I do not know what caused it to pay me a visit, unless it was by me ordering a few almanacs and thereby found out where I lived. I have met a good number of my old friends, brethren and sisters in the Lord, some I did not see for ten or twenty years, but we met again, once more on earth. How pleasant it is to meet our old friends again, and enjoy their company. The COMPANION and I parted, as friends, in the year 1870. I moved near Forest City, Mo., the COMPANION moved to Dale City, Pa. Farther apart than we ever was before, not knowing whether we would ever meet again in this world or not. But we have met again as good friends as when we parted. Come along, and as soon as I get able, I will pay your way out here to Forest City, Mo., and all the expenses of all your cost. We have been out here, in Holt county, Mo., 12 months. We hope through the blessings of God, we have been instrumental in doing some good for the cause of our Master, and the good of some precious souls. We have now fully organized a church here in Holt county, called the church of Bethel, with forty-three members, three speakers. The speakers are A. J. Correll, John Miller and Joseph Glick. Three deacons, Isaac Ziegler, Joel Glick and Isaac Wampler. All in union, peace and love. We are trying to obey our Savior's new commandments, to see that we love one another, and to have that peace which he gives to his disciples; not as the world giveth, but the peace of Jesus; and as long as this remains with us, there will be no undergrounded petition to the Annual Meeting. It shall never have its origin in Bethel church, of Holt county, Mo. May God save us from all such dark doings. O Lord help us all to get rid of such a spirit. If our grievances are truly so great, why not bring up the petition in the right spirit and light? We are commanded to walk in the light, as he is in the light, and if the light is in us, how can we be guilty of such dark doings? Christ tells us that the light that is in us is darkness; how great is that darkness? I am fearful that some want to be kept in the dark, and why do we want to be in the dark? Is it because we love darkness better than light? Are our deeds or designs evil? O Lord, help us to come to the light, that our deeds and designs may be reproved and manifested. O God, give us more love for our brethren. Give us humble hearts, and right spirits. Less envy, self esteem, self righteousness, and less self will. Let us be more subject one to the other as we are commanded. I have never met with such grievances among the Brotherhood as is described in the petition, and therefore cannot tell from whence it came. But I am certain it was gotten up by a wrong spirit, or they would not keep themselves in the dark. If these things are true; why not seek redress in a brotherly like way? There is no use in taking a sneaking, undermining and underhanded way. I do believe it is abomination in the sight of the Lord for us to do so. But I have got off the subject which I had intended to write before I saw the petition in the COMPANION. It struck, or grieved me so much to see such things at work among us. I could not help but give it a passing notice; and as I will not be present at the Annual Meeting to see it presented, I just thought I would give my views about that way of doing. I hope that God will help us to love one another out of a pure heart fervently, is my earnest prayer.

Yours in the bond of Christian love.

A. J. CORRELL.

Brethren Holsinger and Beer: The brethren and sisters composing the above named arm of the church, met at their big-meeting house, April 14th, for divine service, it being the day of their regular appointments; and also by special arrangements to attend to some church business. After the brethren and sisters had duly assembled, the 130th hymn was sung, after which, exhortation and prayer to the commencement of the service, was made by our much esteemed Elder Samuel Lidy—reading of the word by Elder David Ober, who spoke from the same; followed by Daniel Brallier—exhortation and prayer to the close of the service by Joseph Holsopple. Then the business was attended to, which was, to choose three deacons to fill the places of three of our worthy ones that had moved into other arms of the church. The result was, Levi Brallier, Hezekiah Berkeypile and Samuel Crisswell, three worthy brethren, were elected to the office above named. May God bless the brethren who were chosen to that responsible position, and may they serve with full purpose of heart, both their blessed Master, and their church. We have now, (as reported before), seven deacons. The church is still in a prosperous condition, under the supervision of Elders Samuel Lidy and David Ober, with a goodly supply of other ministerial aid. Fearing that I am not interesting I close abruptly.

Answer to Jonathan Kessler

Dear Brother: I read your request in COMPANION No. 19, page 301 I did not attend the Sabbath-school referred to, being in bad health; but I sent my children. My son, at whose house we are now staying, says, he remembers it well, and says, it was not conducted like the Sabbath-schools generally are now. The singing and prayer was more devotional. No Superintendant, Secretary or Treasurer—I take back the word Superintendant and say Teacher in the place of it. The most I remember about it is the sorrow I felt when it was closed (as it was told me) for lack of assistance, the burden all resting on you. My sister Ann Conway (now deceased) said to me, if we only had assisted brother Kessler more, that the school might have continued for the good of our children. I referred to it from a grateful feeling towards you for your praiseworthy deeds, as I considered them; and to show that our efforts for good are never lost—"a stream becomes a river." If my statement is not correct you are at liberty to make your own defence, I am much surprised that you are opposed to Sabbath-schools now.

Yours in love,

HANNAH KNOUFF.

Reply to Brother J. T. Meyers.

Brother J. T. Meyers says he is left to conjecture, as to what idea I wished to convey, by saying ministers should not preach, that in the midst of life we are in death. I mean to convey the idea, that it is an unscriptural term, and contrary to the nature of the case, to which I always heard it applied; because, as I said before, "Every one, both young and old, dies at the end of life." But brother M. begs leave to differ with me, from the fact, that he seems to think I did not know the meaning of the phrase, "In the midst." Thank you for the favor of the rendering of that phrase, by Webster. But I ask brother J. T. M. to bear with me, if I tell him, he has made a mis application, of Webster's definition, when he used it in the subject under consideration the way he did. It would look just as reasonable to me, if he would make the following applications: In the midst of death we are in life; because we may be surrounded by thousands of dead objects; or, in a certain city, we are in the midst of groves, because the groves are all around us; or, in Nebraska, we are in the midst of all other states; because we are surrounded by them. I do not believe that brother M. will be ready to accept such demonstrative points, if they were adduced to him. I shall ask the same privilege of him, before I shall preach that in the midst of life we are in death. Try it again, brother M., if you can give us a "thus saith the Lord" for it. We are only required to preach the word.

Yours in love,

JOHN FORNEY, Sr.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent, B. & Mo. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

"I Will Never Leave Thee."

IN these words the English language fails to give the full meaning of Greek. It implies, Never, no, never; no, nor ever! This world, is is a world of leaving, parting, separation, failure, and disappointment. Think of finding something that will never leave nor fail. Grasp the promise, "I will never leave thee," and store it in your heart; you will want it one day. The hour will come when you will find nothing so comforting, or cheering, as a sense of God's companionship. Stick to that word "never." It is worth its weight in gold. Cling to it as a drowning man clings to a rope. Grasp it firmly as a soldier attacked on all sides grasps his sword. "Never." Though your heart faints and you are sick of self-failures and infirmities, even then the promise will not fail. "Never." When the cold chill of death creeps on and friends can do no more, and you are starting on that journey from which there is no return, even then Christ will not forsake you "Never."

The Most Important Subject.

Daniel Webster on one occasion was spending an evening at the house of a friend, in a large company of invited guests. It was in his younger, purer days. His course had been criticised through the press, and that evening he appeared unusually silent, serious and profound. A little group hovered near, and one jocosely remarked that Mr. Webster was "doubtless busied again with his great thoughts." Whereupon a lady asked the following rather puzzling question: "Mr. Webster, what is the most important thought you ever entertained?" All listened for the answer—the room grew still as death. and, with evident emotion, Webster replied, "The most important thought I ever had was my individual responsibility to God." So let earth's inhabitants be what they may, whether statesmen or slaves, princes or paupers, "every one of us must give an account of himself unto God."

Success don't consist in never making blunders, but in never making the same one the second time.

The Bible Talks to You.

THE Holy Scripture is very familiar: "When thou wakest, it shall talk with thee."

To talk signifies fellowship, communion, familiarity. It does not say "It shall preach to thee." Many persons have a high esteem of the book, but they look upon it as though it was some very elevated teacher, speaking to them from a lofty tribunal, while they stand far below. I will not altogether condemn that reverence, but it were far better, if they would understand the familiarity of God's word; it does not so much preach to us as talk to us.

It is not "when thou awakest it shall lecture thee," or, "it shall scold thee;" no, no, "it shall talk with thee." We sit at its feet, or rather, at the feet of Jesus, in the world, and it comes down to us; it is familiar with us, "as a man talketh to his friend."

And here let me remind you of the delightful familiarity of Scripture in this respect, that it speaks the language of men.—Spurgeon.

Divisions.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause division, and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." Rom. 16:17.

Divisions are dangerous, and are forbidden in the word of God. For illustration of the subject before us, we must refer to natural circumstances. The question of slavery is what we select for our present purpose; which every true follower of Jesus Christ will denounce. The sublect of slavery caused a rebellion in America. if the subject had never been agitated, there would never have been a war upon that subject. It was first agitated by England in order to divide the unison of the states; because they furnished the rebels with vessels to destroy our commerce. And if they had succeeded in their deep schemes they would have made the U. S. an easy prey. what did the question of slavery do? It divided the Methodist church, and they stand in open hostility to each other for many years, and perhaps may never be united. The Methodists, north and south, stand chargable in a great degree on account of the rebellion; having worked for thirty years until the subject gained admittance into our Legislative halls. The consequence was the destruction of more than one half of a million of our fellow creatures, who were ushered into the presence of a just God unprepared. This has been the result of divisions in a temporal point of view. Divisions arise by the introduction of new modes "contrary to the doctrine." So say the Apostle. Salem College is something new in the church of Jesus Christ. An institution of this kind has no foundation in the gospel of Jesus Christ. If it has, I want information upon the subject. I am in favor of education, but I am opposed to a manufactory of preachers. It has no precedent in the teachings of Jesus Christ or his Apostles. But says a friend of the institution, "For the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." How long was the above to be continued? Answer, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," Ephesians 4: 12, 13. If we have not come to that, we are not the church of Christ. But I contend that we have come to a time when we need not those helps. We are in the unity of the Spirit; and this unity is about to be torn asunder. Woe be unto that man, who first agitates a subject which may divide the church. "It were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea," than that he should offend one of these little ones. This is the language of Jesus Christ. Look before you leap. But what has man done, and what will man not do, for place and power? They may try to stand behind the screen, but the eye of vigilance is upon them. They occasionally hoist the vail, and peep out and say, "It is not quite time yet, we will wait until we can mould popular opinion, and then we will present a solid front."

HENRY KOONTZ.

Little Sunbeams.

I HEARD a tiny snow-bird chirping the other day, and it seemed to carry me away back to the bright, glad summer-time—and I was listening again to the songs of bird-love, that thrilled all those warm, sunny days, and to the clear sweet laughter of dimpled rills as they plashed over the stones. And then I thought how we all might bring a sunbeam from the warm, golden summer of our lives, and fling it where it would cast a bright gleam over some tired heart's dark mid-winter, making it happy, just as that tiny bird sent a thrill of gladness all over my heart.

There are weary souls whose gushing rills of joy are all ice-bound by sorrow and neglect. Can we not send some warm, balmy breeze of kindness to melt all the snows away? Only a smile, or a loving word, and God will bless you, and the watching angels will be glad.

Living for Eternity.

How thrilling the thought that some poor soul may be made an heir of eternal life through our instrumentality. On the other hand, how dreadful the thought that some one may fail of Heaven because of our failing to live for eternity. "We live in deeds not in years." With the shores of the beautiful city of our God so near, what a powerful incentive to a holy life! Is not the prize worth striving for with all our redeemed powers? Blessed living for endless life in the kingdom of God! Immortality and eternal life are just before us. Shall we not be willing to sacrifice all worldly gain for the rich reward that awaits the overcomer?

"The sands of time are sinking,
The dawn of Heaven breaks;
The summer morn I've sighed for,
The fair, sweet morn awakes.
Dark, dark, has been the midnight,
But dayspring is at hand,
And glory—glory dwelleth
In Immanuel's land."

L. E. MILNE

Council Bluffs, May 13.

The Infidel and the Work of God.

One Sunday evening, a young man was walking along the streets to some scene of pleasure, when he was accosted by a person who stopped him and thrust a small bit of paper into his hand. The young man took it and read by the light of the nearest lamp the words, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." A sneer passed over his handsome face as he read, and throwing the paper from him, he hastened on.

"Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," doesn't apply to me, at any rate; for I am an infidel, and do not believe anything of the kind." Thought he, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as sonw." Hang the thing, I can't get rid of it. 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shll be as white as snow.' Sins? Conscience? Yes; but I acknowledge neither a future, nor a God, and therefore am not responsible. What do I care to have my sins made white, seeing that I owe no duties beyond those necessary to natural human existense. 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' "I am an infidel" (stamping his foot). "I don't believe in the Bible, the God of the Bible, the future, nor anything beyond the still, dark grave. So here's for a short life, and a merry one. * * 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' Confound it! * * 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' Confound it, I wish I could get it out of my head. . . 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' It is very forcible. Very poetical. Certainly that Bible is a wonderful work. Given, for the sake of argument, that it is true, and that a God exists, I can easily understand religious people who believe in a future, either of joy or of suffering, clinging to such sentences with a tenacity proportioned to their belief. 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' Admirable writing. Terse, forcible language. I wonder who wrote it? God, I suppose. God?—why, there is no God. I forgot myself. If I could only remember principles, and how logical and well founded the arguments are which support them, I should be all right. * * * * 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow.' confound the thing. Will nothing put a stop to this? There is a church; I may as well turn in and see what they have to say."

He entered and was shown quietly into the pew by the door. A solemn silence reigned. The preacher had read the text from the pulpit, and paused a moment, before repeating it. Then, in a gentle voice, he pronounced the words: "Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

The vestry of that church was open for a short time after service for the reception of those whom the message of the Lord had touched. That evening there was one who prayed with tears, 'Jesus, though my sins be dyed deeper than the deepest scarlet, do thou make them whiter than the purest snow."

Spirit is now a very fashionable word; to act with with spirit, to seek with spirit, means only to act rashly ond speak indiscreetly. An able man shows his spirit by gentle words and resolute actions; he is neither hot nor timid.—Chesterfield.

Although men are accused for not knowing their own weakness, yet perhaps, as few know their own strength. It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold, which the owner knows not of.—Swift.

Soliloquy.

BY SUDIE M. THOMAS.

"He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments, and took a towel and girded himself. After that he poureth water in a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded." John 13: 4, 5.

"Write," saith the Holy Spirit, "what I unto thee say."
Thus, imploringly I hear it pleading day by day;
It matters not how often I may repudiate,
There comes the admonition, "Write what I may dictate."

Oft have I heard Thee calling; yea, even unto me,
"Write; thou surely knowest what I have said to thee:
Do unto one another as I have done to you;
Follow my example, for nothing else will do.

"The wise, the great, the noble, may all expatiate;
But, little children, fear not; although the way is strait;
And if thou lackest any, my Spirit I will send,
To comfort, guard and guide thee, and all thy ways defend.

"But if ye fail to ask it, Suppose comes creeping in;
And ere you know, or fear him, he causes you to sin.
Then like the would-be faithful, you very often stray,
Because for your convenience you fail me to obey."

Self makes a great proviso; and Nature sanctions all.
But need we strangely wonder? It was so from the fall.
To err is like us—human; forgiveness is divine.
Pity, dear Lord, our darkness; for we would all be thine.

Thine when the glorious trumpet shall sound, "Awake! Awake!
Come forth, ye faithful few, your Master's joys partake.
"No jot or tittle passeth"—the words of Christ are true:
"Oh, have ye done to one another as I've done to you?"

O Lord, forbid, we pray, forbid, that we be sentenced chaff,
Because 'gainst us the record stands—"Duty done but half."
Grant that we each be girded, and wash and wipe as He.
For if we know and do these things, then happy we shall be.

Nobody's Child.

Alone in the dreary, pitiless street,
With my torn old dress and bare, cold feet,
All day I have wandered to and fro,
Hungry and shivering, and nowhere to go,
The night's coming on in darkness and dread,
And the chill sleet beating upon my bare head;
Oh! why does the wind blow upon me so wild?
Is it because I am nobody's child?

Just over the way there's a flood of light,
And warmth and beauty, and all things bright;
Beautiful children, in robes so fair,
Are carolling songs in their rapture there.
I wonder if they, in their blissful glee,
Would pity a poor little beggar like me,
Wandering alone in the merciless street.
Naked and shivering, and nothing to eat!

Oh! what I shall do when the night comes down,
In its terrible blackness all over the town!
Shall I lay me down 'neath the angry sky,
On the cold, hard pavement, alone to die,
When the beautiful children their prayers have said,
And their mammas have tucked them up snugly in bed?
For no dear mother on ME ever smiled—
Why is it, I wonder, I'm nobody's child?

No father, no mother, no sister, not one
In all the world loves me, e'en the little dogs run,
When I wander too near them; 'tis wondrous to see,
How everything shrinks from a beggar like me!
Perhaps 'tis a dream, but sometimes when I lie
Gazing far up in the dark blue sky
Watching for hours, some large bright star,
I fancy the beautiful gates are ajar.

And a host of white-robed, nameless things
Comes fluttering o'er me on gilded wings:
A hand that is strangely soft and fair
Caresses gently my tangled hair,
And a voice like the carol of some wild bird—
The sweetest voice that was ever heard—
Calls me many a dear pet name,
Till my heart and spirit are all aflame.

They tell me of such unbounded love,
And bid me come up to their home above;
And then with such pitiful, sad surprise,
They look at me with their sweet, tender eyes,
And it seems to me, out of the dreary night,
I am going up to that world of light;
And away from the hunger and storm so wild,
I am sure I shall then be somebody's child.

Think of Me.

WHEN pleasure's cup is sparkling high,
When friends around thee throng;
When hearts are light with playful mirth,
And lighter wakes the song;
When, counting o'er thy many joys,
Recalled by memory,
If 'twill not dim thy pleasure then,
Oh! give one thought to me.

At dawn, when first Aurora's light
Reflects o'er hill and dale,
And gilds the dew-washed lily's head
That slept within the vale;
When first the lark shall plume his wing,
And soar from bondage free,
To warble forth his merry notes,
Then give one thought to me.

And when the shades of evening are Fast falling into night—
An hour that well seems made for thought,
And quiet is delight;
At midnight's deep and solemn hour,
When on thy bended knee,
Thy hands upraised to Heaven in prayer,
Oh then, then think of me!

If I could claim the richest gem
That now lies in the sea,
I'd rather far, than have that pearl,
Have one kind thought from thee:
If all the joys of this bright world
Were now spread out to me,
And I were told to make a choice—
I'd ask one thought from thee.

My Desire.

Let not despair nor fell revenge
Be to my bosom known.
Oh, give me tears for other's woes,
And patience for my own.

Feed me, O Lord, with needful food;
I ask not wealth nor fame,
But give me eyes to view thy works,
A heart to praise thy name.

Oh, may my days obscurely pass,
Without remorse or care;
And let me for my parting hour
From day to day prepare.

How a Good Deacon dropt the use of Tobacco.

The following is an extract from Trask's Anti-Tobacco Journal. If you think proper to give it a place in the C. F. C., you can do so; if not, no harm done.

I hold, that the use of tobacco is one of the principal stepping-stones towards the use of intoxicating drinks; and, in view of this evil tendency, its utter filthiness and unnecessary expense, we think professors of the Christian Religion, are lowering very much their standard of the pure and holy religion of Jesus, by persisting in this unseemly indulgence. Especially should all teachers of the word of God, whether in the pulpit, or in the Sabbath-school, have their mouths and breath undefiled by such an abomination, and bear a testimony against the evil by word and example.

JOHN HARLEY.

Pottstown, Pa.

"I chewed twenty years or more, but the Bible, and the good Spirit of God taught me otherwise.—It was on this wise: In my family devotions, I was reading the passage in Paul, 'Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," and I was arrested, my quid and saliva troubled me, my conscience troubled me, I felt that I was doing wrong, and suddenly turning to my wife, I exclaimed:

Wife! how am I glorifying God by chewing tobacco? Impossible! Impossible!

Now, call me an enthusiast, a fanatic, or what you please, I maintain that the Spirit of God then and there convicted me of sin, in this filthy indulgence, as really as He convicted Saul of Tarsus of sin, on the plains of Damascus. Then and there I renounced the sin, and "taste not, touch not, handle not," has been an article in my creed ever since, and shall be till I die. I experienced a physical regeneration, I got my freedom, and was made a happier man in soul and body.

Without boasting of relinquishing a vile habit, a habit of which every victim should be ashamed, and which had cost me, in money, wasted time and all, from year to year, enough to give fifty copies of the Word of God to the destitute, or perhaps enough to educate an orphan child.

Could I be heard, I would say to all my dear Brethren, drop the nauseous abomination, and especially to those who are honored with the deaconship, would I say, Brethren, "Be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord!"

Drop it, and I predict for you a more clear and calm mind and amiable temper—more of self-respect—more of christian freedom and joy—and a far more delightful communion with the Father, Son and Spirit.

What Intemperance Does.

Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the loving mother, extinguishes the natural affection, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hope, and brings down mournful age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives, widows; children, orphans; fathers, fiends; and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds epidemics, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, poverty, disease and crime. It fills your jails and supplies your alms-houses and demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cherishes riots. It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes the victims for your scaffolds. It is the life-blood of the gambler, the aliment of the counterfeiter, the prop of the hangman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, and esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligation, reverences fraud, and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue, slanders innocence. It incites the mother to butcher her helpless offspring, helps the husband massacre his wife, and aids the child to grind the parricidal ax. It burns upon man and consumes woman, defeats life, curses God and despises Heaven. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness. With the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its desolation, and insatiated with havoc, poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence and slays reputation, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin. It is the sum of all villainies and curses; the devil's best friend.

For the Companion.

Love of God, Benevolence—Pure Universal, Eternal Benevolence.

Look at the works of nature. See not only the fitness of things, but see how all bears the impress of love and kindness. Look at the necessities of man, and how abundantly they are met; look at the frame work of his body, how constituted for enjoyment; look at the senses, what sources of pleasure; look at the vital parts, how they are protected from injury. Look at man, as gifted with rationality: this gives him superiority over all the brute creation. This enables him to rise higher than the eagle, to move more swiftly than the race-horse, to emulgate the courage and the power of the lion. Behold the dignified inhabitant of the body, the eternal, undying soul; its capacities of knowledge, reflection, and spiritual enjoyment. Then behold the world and its profusion of comforts, for the dignity and happiness of man. The earth is covered with a soft and verdant carpet, the expanse of the sky is of a most beautiful blue; the salubrious air is impregnated with the balm of life; thousands of rivers send forth their living streams; the fields yield their roots and grain, and trees spread their richly-laden boughs to the hand of man, with an abundance of food and necessary raiment; the earth yields from its own bowels the materials of a comfortable heart; the great orb of day sheds his golden beams, illumines the landscape, and makes all nature to rejoice; the darkness of night administers to man's repose, while balmy sleep, as nature's great restorative, prepares for the coming day; the atmosphere is purified by the power of God, of its baneful exhalings and the lightning causes it to dispense its contagious influence abroad; the sea, by its saltness and nation retains its healthful purity, instead of becoming a stagnant lake, which would destroy the world by its pestilential vapors. This my friends proves that God is love.

The benevolence of God is engraven in all his works. This is true The dignity and dominion with which he invested man, made him ruler over all the other creatures, and but a little lower than the angels; the moral garb in which he clothed him. His own image, every moral excellency, he was endowed with, knew how to honor God, and to remain happy. Truly, God is love. Adam's crime was voluntary it was a compound of an evil.

No merit, but to deserve death. Here then is the love of God manifest in triumph over the claim of justice and unworthiness of man. Truly, his love did triumph. Truly, sin must be punished; holiness, be exalted; truth, vindicated, and yet love must be victorious. "God so loved the world," &c. God yields his Son to poverty, to reproach, to agony, to death. God revealed himself as he had never done before: "God manifested in the flesh," &c. "God is love."

The gospel will restore man to the favor of God, image of God, family of God, and the enjoyment of God. Consider the riches, the glory. Who can tell what God has laid up for them that love him? Regions of immortality, the temple of life, the joys of eternity—everything proclaims that "God is love." sun and stars—these also manifest the love of God. I hear no other sound in the groves of paradise, in the walks of Eden, until the cloud has settled over the head of our progenitors. I see it in all that Jesus was, and said and did; his life taught it; his death ratified it, and his resurrection, and all his words in earth and heaven plead it.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown him Lord of all."

JOHN NICHOLSON.

Shanesville, Ohio.

If you know anything that will make a brother's heart glad, run quick and tell it; but if it is something that will make him sigh, bottle it up.

We are all sculptors and painters, and our material is our flesh and blood and bones. Any nobleness begins at once to refine a man's features, any meanness or sensuality to imbrute them.

If you want to find out a man's real disposition, take him when he is wet and hungry. If he is amiable then, dry him and fill him up, and you have got an angel.

For the Companion.

This World is not our Home.

O when shall we leave this world of sorrow? This world is not our home. No, by no means. We do not wish to stay here always; for no lasting pleasure, peace, or comfort that be obtained from it. The pleasures it affords are only for a season, and they soon fade away. Yes, the sinful pleasure which the wicked enjoy to-day, they may not enjoy to-morrow, and perhaps no more forever; for we do not know what to-morrow may bring forth: perhaps death, and then the pleasures that earth can afford will have disappeared and fled from us. We cannot take them with us into eternity: we will have to leave them behind. Then it would be well for us to turn our backs to the world now, and set our faces zionward, and "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith;" believing "that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." But some will say, "I cannot leave the pleasures of this world; for my youthful friends and companions will not love me any more, and they will point the finger of scorn at me, and say, Why is it that one so young should forsake the pleasures which the young so well enjoy? O dear young friends, I was young myself, and I enjoyed myself as well as any of you; but alas! how soon it faded away, and trouble and trials came, and I will never enjoy those earthly pleasures any more. But let me tell you what I know by experience. The pleasures that you now enjoy are fast hastening away: the sweetest pleasures are only for a few days in this world. But this world is not our home. Heaven is the Christian's home. How sweet the words—"A home in heaven." What if our associates do laugh and deride? How much more did our heavenly Master endure for our souls? And what does he say? "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you". My dear young friends, why is it so hard for us to give up this world, with its sinful pleasures? We cannot stay here long; and when we die our souls will wing their way to the bar of God; and if we are not prepared we will sink down into everlasting misery and woe. Let us try to be faithful in the discharge of our duties. If all the world should serve the Lord, what a happy world we would then have. Then wickedness would cease, and evil would be practiced no more. If only all whom I love, would take this step, then would my heart leap with joy, to think that we would all get home to heaven together. My dear father we laid in the cold grave but lately, but let us try to get where we can see his face and quietly with him rest. We have many trials to undergo here, while traveling through this wilderness, but oh! let us strive to meet where pleasures unceasingly flow—where hunger and thirst are driven away. Let us try to be faithful; and when the time comes for us to leave this unfriendly world we shall go to meet all the saints on high. How sweet and comforting is this thought!

Secretism in Africa.

The following is selected from Livingston's Key to Masonry:

"Mason's boast of the antiquity and universality of their principles; and we readily admit, that they are as ancient and as universal as devil-worship. I have the following particulars from Rev. D. H. Flickinger, who was Missionary in Africa, and has for some fourteen years been Missionary Secretary of the United Brethren Church, and still fills that office. The particulars are also published in his book entitled Sketches of Men and things in Western Africa. 'This secret order is variously called Purrow-Bush society, Devil-Bush society, and the place where they hold their meetings is called the Devil's Belly. Here Satan is supposed to have at least a temporary residence as a favorite stopping place. By the way the Devil's Belly comes very near to the name which the old dutch woman gave to the Masonic lodge in Marine City, and which I have mentioned elsewhere, — 'The Devil's Kitchen.'

A certain initiatory ceremony is observed, and the name of the applicant is altered when admitted into the society. Just so with Masonry; when the candidate is admitted, the master says, 'Dear brother, I give you a new name which is, Caution!

This mystic order, besides regulating the worship of the people and the value of currency, infuses into the minds of the common sentiments detrimental to the spread of Christianity. To my certain knowledge the Purrow Society prevented the Mendi missionaries from opening a mission station at Wela. After showing that all other parties favored the movement, he says, 'But this society put Purrow-law upon the place, the substance of which is, that no one must do anything there, either directly or indirectly, unless they do it by strong; that is, by resisting and overcoming those who put the Purrow-laws there. That devil-worshippers should oppose Christianity, the worship of the true God, is no more than might be expected: indeed, it would be absurd to suppose that Masonry will not oppose Christianity; for it, too, is devil-worship. If any one should deny that Masonry opposes Christianity, I will simply ask, Does it not exclude the name of Christ? Does it not oppose every church which it cannot control? If not, why do ministers become Masons, simply that they may obtain or retain the patronage of certain churches? Many other pertinent questions might be asked but those who will honestly answer these will not deny that Masonry opposes Christianity. Its opposition to Christianity is just as real as is that of the kindred society in Africa. Here, or in Africa, if Christianity obtains a place it is 'by strong.'

This society engenders pride and selfishness. When one joins the Purrow, he looks down to the society. Here Mr. F. gives striking instances of this fact. This, too, is Masonry exactly.

Women are not allowed to belong to the society, or to be on the ground where it meets. Here again Masonry is one with the African Purrow.

I am not able to speak of all the doings of this society; but this I know, it is a secret society, and among its distinguishing peculiarities are opposition to every system of religion and government contrary to its own, and the promotion of idolatry and Amuletism among the people. Here again Masonry and the African Purrow are one. We are satisfied that none who know Masonry will deny this. Its opposition, as above specified, we have clearly shown, as also its idolatry and its efforts for the promotion thereof; and as to its amults, there is no end to them: they are openly exposed on the persons of preachers and pirates, in short, on the persons of men of all classes of society: indeed, we are plainly told that it is not safe to be without them.

DALE CITY, PA., June 11, 1872.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting of 1872, Held on the Premises of Cyrus Hoover, near Smithville Station, Wayne County, Ohio.

AFTERNOON.

About the time of calling the meeting to order, it began to rain very hard and continued for a half hour or more before business could be resumed. The 47th hymn was then sung, and the meeting organized. The Insurance question was announced as being before the house, and under discussion.

The District Meeting did not think the principle of insurance to be wrong. The following answer was proposed:

Ans. This Annual Meeting can not authorize Insurance companies, as church organizations, neither will it forbid societies by brethren for protection against loss by fire, as individual enterprize.

We have no notes of what was done finally upon this question, but we think it was tabled.

DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

Query 23. Can brethren in the ministry who have fallen into the gross crime mentioned by Paul in 1st Cor., 5, ever be restored to their office? and if they can in what way shall it be done?

Ans. of S. C.

We think they may under some circumstances, and the church having to act in the case should judge whether such circumstances exist. But we think it should be by the unanimous consent of the church.

P. R. Wrightsman opposed ministers ever being restored to their office again, who have fallen by those gross crimes, though they may be restored to their membership.

Quinter thought there might be cases where it might be restored, under peculiar circumstances.

It was added thereto, "in the presence of at least three elders," but there are some cases so grievous that we cannot receive them into their office again.

Adopted.

MIDDLE DISTRICT PENNSYLVANIA.

J. W. Brunaugh,)
J. R. Hanawalt,) Delegates.

Query 24. Will not this District Meeting urge a change in holding our Annual Meeting as the present system is very unsatisfactory?

Ans. A reconsidering of Query 4 of last Annual Meeting is desired.

The above was granted as an answer to the above request.

C. Long represented his District Meeting which thought the Annual Meeting should be brought into a smaller compass, and that expense and tumult should be prevented.

A similar request was handed in by the Middle District of Iowa.

R. H. Miller thought the plan introduced did not propose to lessen the burden of Annual Meeting. He was not scared by the burdens, but thanked God for the Annual Meeting, burden and all. He wanted no curtailing in the attendance.

John Metzger wanted no change, because he did not wish to change so much.

Holsinger was not in favor of a change. He favored the present method because of its intrinsic worth. He believed the influence of meeting one another once a year was worth as much to the cause as the Council Meeting.

Decision of last Annual Meeting adopted.

Query 25. Will this District Meeting ask the Annual Meeting to admit all elders who attend Annual Meeting to equal privileges on the Standing Committee and to all the council of the meeting?

Ans. Yes we ask the Annual Meeting to make this addition to the order of holding the Annual Meeting, and allow all elders to have the same privileges.

Tabled.

Adjourned by singing hymn 432, and prayer.

THURSDAY FORENOON, 8:30.

Opened by singing the 28th hymn, and prayer. Very cloudy with mists. R. P. Miller lined hymn and offered exhortation.

Davy remarked that in all probability a matter will be presented that may create some excitement, or enthusiasm. Wanted that moderation should be exercised, and personalities avoided. There was the world around us, who should take knowledge that we have the spirit of Christ.

Query 26. The Still Water church, west of Dayton, Ohio, April 24, 1872, does most earnestly petition our Annual Southern District Council Meeting of Ohio, to petition our general conference meeting to make no change whatever in the practice of feet washing or to grant the privilege to any of the churches to change their practice from the double to the single mode, and also to forbid the farther agitation of the question.

The above petition had also passed the episcopal council, by 88 against 14, as it stood in the house.

Brother John Cadwalader, favored the single mode. He gave his arguments which were logical. He did not expect to have the Brethren to change, but he claimed the privilege of practicing according to the word of God.

Thomas Major favored the single mode, and showed that they have occasion to practice it. It was the case of one colored sister in the congregation.

Lewis Kimmel, was in favor of the single mode, but was willing to submit to the decision. He moved that there be no change by the Annual Meeting, but that we allow all the congregations to select their own mode.

David Garlach was on neither side. He had taken a vote upon the question and found them almost unanimous in favor of the single mode, but were all willing to forbear.

J. S. Flory favored liberality, and that this meeting grant this privilege, and presented strong arguments in favor of it in order to maintain love and union.

Jacob K. Riner reported, that both practices have existed for perhaps one hundred and twenty-five years, and now the answer before us requests one of those practices to be cut off. He favored that this Annual Meeting allow the congregations the liberty to make any change, when it can be done in love and union. He would not stop the agitation by endeavoring to stop the current, but by turning the stream into another channel.

Sayler stated that both the practices were in use 150 years ago. He gave his experience while at Philadelphia, saying that he was much annoyed by the agitation of the question. He wanted that agitation to cease. He was in favor of suppressing agitation.

James R. Lane was in favor of granting the liberty to each congregation.

Adjourned, by singing hymn 102.

AFTERNOON.

Re-opened by singing last verse of hymn 101.

Davy remarked that the habits of some of the members in cheering and assenting or dissenting with speakers, is borrowed from the political world. Other remarks in regard to lording it, &c.

The subject of feet-washing was resumed.

The following amendment was offered.

Ans. This meeting deeply regrets the state of feeling upon this question, and although we would much prefer to have one practice in the performance of the ordinance of Feet-washing, and this meeting will not establish more than one practice ; but individual congregations will not be restricted, as long as they proceed in love and union, taking God's word as their supreme law, but recommend our dear brethren and sisters not to lose the spirit of the ordinance.

One man, D. P. Sayler, only objected to it, whereupon the following substitute to the amendment was proposed : Whereas a difference in the practice of feet-washing has obtained among the brethren ; and whereas both modes can be traced back to the earliest age of the church in America ; and whereas it is very generally admitted by the dear brethren that both modes meet the command of our Lord ; and whereas what is called the double mode has been almost unanimously practiced among the Brethren ; and whereas we think there is not sufficient cause for an occurrence so serious in its character as that of the dividing of the body or church of Christ ; therefore,

Resolved, that this Annual Meeting can make or sanction no change in the practice of feet-washing, but urges most strongly upon all the elders and ministers of the church to labor faithfully in the spirit of love characteristic of the Gospel of Christ, and of our early fathers, to promote peace and union in the churches, and the more so in view of the language of the apostle : "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divison and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned ; and avoid them." Rom. 16 : 17 and also that they labor judiciously to stop the farther agitation of the subject.

This could not pass.

A Resolution was passed, which reads as follows : "Make no change whatever in the mode and practice of feet-washing, and stop the farther agitation of the subject." This passed by a large majority, but by no means unanimously, nor nearly so.

Qtery 27. In regard to using the Brethren's Hymn Book, some using it some not, causing inconvenience, therefore it was resolved :

That the Annual Meeting give the new Books its sanction, and liberty to all the members of the churches to use them.

Adopted.

Query 28. As there is a difference in regard to the proper time of putting the bread and wine on the table at our Communion Meeting, could not the District Meeting unite in one order ?

Ans. We think the bread and wine should be on the table with the supper at the time of feet-washing.

Tabled.

Ans. Resolved that the request of John Dennis and his brother, of the state of Maine, in regard to a ministering brother being sent to them to preach the gospel and the order of the Brethren should not be slighted, but prayerfully considered by the Annual Meeting, and measures adopted to carry the same into effect.

Ans We think the minutes of Annual Meeting of 1860, and 1868, give the churches ample liberty to make arrangements to meet the case above alluded to ; we therefore refer the subject to the District Meeting from which it came.

Referred to Annual Meeting.

Agreed to make the correction.

Query 30 Will this District Meeting and especially ministering brethren, to engage in the Banking business ?

Ans. Not advisable for brethren to engage in such business. See Matth., 6 : 13.

Adopted.

Query 31 (Art. 8 of Min of W. Pa.)

Same article was read, and the following answer proposed by the Leading Council : We readopt the answer to the Minutes alluded to and consider that any brother when suffering himself to be elected to and serve in such an office as that alluded to, cannot be retained as a member of the church.

The solemn amen was proposed.

This meeting thinks that singing last is in accordance with scripture.

Editorial Correspondence.

Chicago, Ills. }
May 30, 1872 }

Many of our readers will no doubt be somewhat surprised to see our editorial headed at this place. This surprise might have been spared them had they been kept properly posted with our plans for the future. They should have been told long ago that from the Annual Meeting we intended to take a tour through the Northwest, in search of health. It was not done, because there was much uncertainty connected with our plans until we had set out upon the journey. Another reason for it may be given. Had we announced our intentions we fear we would have had more labor to perform than would have been conducive to health. As it is now we hope to pass along more "free and easy."

Our last closed with our arrival at the place of Annual Meeting, and an outside view of the Episcopal council. We have but little farther to say of said council. We might have learned nearly all its doings, for some of its members were very communicative ; but we had very little interest in it, and think our readers have less yet. We consider it to have been a miserable failure, from beginning to end. It did not amount to a thing. Their answer did not receive a respectable notice by the general council. We hope it will be the last effort at episcopacy that we shall be called upon to record, in the history of the Church.

Our accommodations during the meeting were very good. We were permitted to sit with the Standing Committee, immediately opposite the moderators. In this, however, we do not regard ourselves as the recipient of any special favor, for an old impostor who passed himself off for a reporter for the press, was also favored with a seat at the table, to the exclusion of at least one old brother. What a change in a short time. A few years ago we had employed a young man of ability and good character, who was under our immediate control, and his entire report would have been our property, but he could not be permitted to labor for us, and we were compelled to discharge him at a loss of about fifty dollars; now an entire stranger, representing himself as a reporter, with the general impression that he is connected with the Chicago Daily Tribune, is not only permitted to take a report, but freely allowed to sit at the table, and necessary accommodations offered him!

At nights we were accommodated, at the houses of brethren E. L. Yoder, and Jonathan Kurtz, and received such attention as kind families bestow upon their friends.

On Friday morning we took the westward train, and joined many of our brethren and sisters on their journey homeward. We stopped off at Bourbon, Ind., to visit our Annie, and the other young folks from Dale City, in attendance at Salem College. O, how glad they were to meet their papas, (Dr. Beachly and ourself) and we were as glad as they; especially to find them in good health and spirits. We were kindly entertained at the house of brother Keylon Heckman.

In the evening we made the acquaintance of the professors, and found them, in appearance, gentleman of the first class, which is sustained by the vouchers of those who know them better. We also interviewed the building, and to make a long story short, we will say it is fully good enough for the accommodation of students for the next three years; is comfortable and convenient. A boarding-house, in connection with it, is badly needed. At some time we may write a chapter on Salem College, for the present we will only say to its friends, that it needs their united effort to make it a success. Brother K. Heckman, the present Secretary is moving away, and it will be very necessary to have some brother to move there to take his place, and become the leading spirit of the institution.

On Saturday, in order to afford our children a little recreation, we employed a livery hack, and set out for the neighborhood of Warsaw, said to be about sixteen miles, but which we found to be about twenty-six, taking us until noon to drive it. Here we were almost strangers, knowing none of the resident members, except the Elder, brother GEORGE CRIPE. However we felt at home when we saw old brother Umstead, and brother Davis Younce. There were also other ministers present whom we had seen before. We had a good meeting, and all seemed to enjoy it well, perhaps none more so than ourself. This congregation is young, but gives indications of prosperity. It has a large number of young members.

On Sunday we had to set out upon the return trip in order to reach Bourbon in time for evening meeting. In the evening we preached in the United Brethren Meeting-house. Had a large congregation. That is all we can say for them, or ourself. Lodged with brother Heckman's.

On Monday we dined at brother Gans's, and had a pleasant hour in their society. At two o'clock we took cars for this place where we arrived at about six. Dr. Fahrney and sister Christie Camerer met us at the depot, and conducted us to their house, where we were cheerfully entertained. We found sister Fahrney much improved in health to the condition in which we had found her on our former visit. The family were all in good health. We have been enjoying their hospitality for several days and seeing the sights of the city, of which more anon. H.

Pious Youth Department.

Our readers have no doubt observed, that, since No. 22, we have had no Pious Youth Department in the Companion. Why is this? Perhaps we are as well prepared to answer as any. It is because our contributors to that department have failed. Why this is, they are better able to tell than we are. Come brethren, sisters—all who are interested in this department—and help us along. Why should it die a second death? Quite a number of our readers seemed concerned about it, and they no doubt were; but it appears that that their interest is declining—their zeal waning. Let us have a revival soon.

THIS IS WHY

This paper was delayed a full week because our boiler and engine gave out, and we were obliged to send them to Cumberland for repairs. All is right now, and our readers may expect their papers regularly.

Contributors Read This.

We want as soon as they can be furnished, at least fifty good articles on important, vital subjects. Shall we have them? It is for you to decide. Look at this matter from the standpoint of duty.

The Editor.

The editor is still absent on his western tour. At last accounts he was at Polo, Ogle Co., Ill., where he expected to remain till about the 10th inst. Then he expects to make his way to Iowa.

He seems to enjoy himself; and we hope this trip may be an advantage to him in various ways, especially that he may regain his health. In the next issue we expect to give his general remarks on the Annual Meeting.

Thoughts Suggested on our Return from Annual Meeting.

Dear Readers:—Though I met many of you and parted again without becoming personally acquainted, we hope there have been impressions made upon our minds that will cause us to hold each other dear, and unite us more fully in the bonds of Christian love and affection. True there was a difference of sentiment; but thanks be to God we differed in love In demonstration of this fact, think for a moment for the pain it cost to part as Christians only can—by shedding tears of sorrow. Oh! for the time that we shall meet to part no more. The few thoughts that I here hastily pen came to memory, whilst I was being carried so rapidly along on my return way, while my brethren and sisters were singing with such inspired zeal, "Homeward bound," I wondered if when we again arrived at our borrowed homes; again to engage in the daily routine of business, whether we would endure as good soldiers of the cross, or whether we would suffer ourselves to be led into temptation. Oh! ye young who stand up for Jesus, watch and pray. The world is full of sin. See the tares of evil springing up. The enemy of souls is very artful, and if possible will lead you astray. The intoxicating bowl is held up. The card-table has the image of sin upon it. The ball-room has music and dancing. The abomniable whore hath made the ungodly drunk with her fornication, and is leading a licentious world down the awful precipice of a burning hell. But for the sake of the precious Jesus and your own never dying soul keep yourselves pure. "Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies" "Abstain from all appearances of evil." "See that ye love God with a pure heart fervently," and your God and Father will be with you in all the trying hours of temptation. Your hungry souls for the past week have been fed upon the manna that cometh down from Heaven. You have been drinking at the great fountain head of salvation. But "take heed to the things which ye have heard, least at any time you should let them slip." Give Satan not the least advantage. Trifle not with sin. Fight manfully, fight as good soldiers of the cross, and if you never again meet in the great Annual Council of God's dear people, may you all meet with the young writer around the great white throne, is my prayer.

Casting out Devils.

"And if I by beelzebub cast out devils by whom do your children cast them out? Therefore they shall be your judges." Matth. 12: 27.

Now the points in the pasage cannot be whether or not Christ cast out devils by Beelzebub. For he, in his arguments with the Pharrisees, has abundantly shown the inconsistency of such a conclusion. But the mystery seems to be, Who were the children who cast out devils? And by whom did those children cast out devils? First then let us find the children, see Matthew. 10: 1, "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits to cast them out &c. Also 6th verse, "Go rather to the lost sheep of Israel" 8th verse "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils:" Now we will turn to Luke 9: 1, Then Jesus gave the twelve, "Power and authority over all devils;" see next Luke 10: 17 "And the seventy returned with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." Now from the foregoing quotations, we see the Savior had his twelve apostles, also the seventy disciples, being in all eighty two, sent out before this conversation took place between him and the Pahrisees, all impowered to cast out devils. Now Luke says sons instead of children. The new translation of Mathew, also says sons. Then were those eighty two all truly sons of the children of Israel? Not a stranger amongst them. Neither were they sent to a strange people to cast out devils; but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Perhaps some of those blasphemeous Pharisees had virtuous sons amongst those eighty-two; anyhow, some of the very fathers of the eighty-two were present, and heard the Savior's remarks on that occasion, as they were all thought to be young men; so that, no doubt, their parents were mostly alive at that time Hence, we say the eighty-two were their children. See again, Luke 10: 17, "Even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." Many more quotations might be made to prove that they did use the very name of Christ in casting out devils; but that will not be disputed. See the perplexed condition. This displeased the Pharisees. He casting out devils by Beelzebub and 82 casting out devils in the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God! "Therefore," says the Savior, they shall be your judges." Let them ask either of the eighty-two by whom they cast out devils, and would not their condemnation have been equally as appalling asby the Savior himself?

Then in conclasion see Matthew 19: 28, addressing the apostles, he says, "Ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." See also Luke, 22: 30, "Truly then, as the Savior said to them, "They shall be your judges." Hence the conclusion summed up is, that those authorized by Christ to cast out devils were the children or sons alluded to. 2nd that they did cast out devils through Jesus Christ the son of God. And 3rd that those eighty-two who cast out devils in the name of Jesus, were their judges, and especially the apostles who will sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of disobedient Israel.

O. SNOWBERGER.

Dear Brethren Editors: I have long since thought a word from this arm of the church, Fairview congregation, Appanoose Co., Iowa, might not be amiss. The ark of the Lord is still moving. In February last, brother David Sink was with us, and preached twice each day for over a week. The meetings were pretty well attended, notwithstanding the intense cold weather, and, without a doubt, many hearts were warmed and encouraged to persevere, and others warned to flee from the wrath to come. One soul was made willing to enter the liquid grave. As the ice was 21 inches thick, and with some difficulty removed, and she was buried with Christ in baptism.

On the 25th day of April, Abraham Replogle received a letter requesting two or more of the laboring brethren to come to Putnam county, Missouri, to hold meeting, on Saturday evening and Sunday the 4th Lord's day of April at the house of one James Cooksey. His wife had been afflicted for a long time, and she became much concerned about her future welfare; but never had made religion a subject of study until within a few years. Her husband was a member of the Missionary Baptists in Ohio, until the late war, when pastors and deacons got to quarreling, and the members were scattered. This family came West, and settled near a family of our members that were taking the Gospel Visitor. They would borrow and read them, and last year subscribed for it, and compared its teachings with the Bible, and were persuaded that these things were so. Yet they never had heard the brethren preach. This woman being very feeble and thinking she must soon leave her husband and family of seven small children, besought the Lord by supplication and prayer, that she might be spared till she could attend to the rite of adoption; and her prayers, with her husbands were heard, and she sent for James H. Corder, a brother in the ministry, and demanded baptism. He, feeling unauthorized to perform the solemn rite, she requested him to sing and pray with her, and write to us, and have us come on the beforementioned time. Though her vital strength was reduced so that she was confined to her bed for some two months, only able to sit long enough to have her bed made, her faith was strong in the Lord, and willing to submit to his will, even to die in two minutes after receiving baptism. So at the appointed time brother Martin Replogle and I started, after a very heavy rain, some thirty miles, and did not reach the place till Sunday after twelve o'clock in consequence of the heavy, falling rains. But as soon as we reached the place we found them anxious to have a meeting. They started runners and soon had the house filled with anxious hearers. In the meantime I talked with the sick woman, and such faith I never found; "no, not in Israel." She soon renewed her request, saying she felt as though she was a christian at heart, but that it was yet needful to be buried with Christ. I asked her if she felt herself able; and she said, By the help of the Lord he did. The hour for preaching having come. brother Martin opened the exercises with appropriate remarks. I spoke according to ability of the conversion of Cornelius and the household; after which I visited the applicant, and it still was her mind to be immersed that day. She made a public confession of her faith. She was then placed in an arm rockingchair and carried to a small, flowing stream near by, and brother Martin and I carried her into the stream, her husband following to the brink of the water, praying aloud. I baptized her according to the commission, while the congregation was in tears. She then said she was satisfied, and requested preaching that evening at candle lighting. Brother Martin then spoke on Practical Christianity. We lodged with a widowed sister, Eve Idleman. In the morning returned to the young sister's and found her much better—able to sit up, and said she felt better than she ever did, and that it was her desire to get well, the Lord willing. By her request we left another appointment, in two weeks, at four o'clock P. M. Myself, Abraham Replogle, and Wm. E. Stickler attended, and found the sister up and doing considerable of her household work, and abounding with thanks to God and us that came to her in her special time of need.

Casting out Devils.

REPLY TO BROTHER JOHN HAMMER.

Dear Brother: I beg leave to differ with you in love. Your explanation on Matth. 12: 27, differs a little from the general tenor of the Scriptures; according to my judgment, at least. You say, "Casting out devils was not an uncommon thing in the days of our Savior—not only by him and his disciples, but also by others that were not followers of Christ." This would imply that casting out devils was only a labyrinth; and that any one could do it, without the power of God. Mark 9: 38, and Matth. 7: 22, will not substantiate the above reasoning.

Mark 9: 38, reads, "Master we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us." But our Savior said to John, "Forbid him not; for there is no man which will do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me." From our Savior's reasoning, as above, we infer, that the one spoken of in Mark 9: 38, was a follower of Christ in a spiritual sense, but did not attend on the Savior liberally, as did John. So he was a follower of Christ, and he did cast out devils with a professed reliance on the power of God.

We think Matth. 7: 22 does not tell us that any one except Christ's followers can or ever did cast out devils and do many miracles. If you read the 23rd verse you will find that none of these hypocrites did so.

Further you say, the seven vagabond Jews did cast out devils for sport. Certainly you have failed to read 15th and 16th verses of Acts 19th, or you could see that they did not cast out evil spirits for sport, or for the glory of God; for they were rebuked sharply for their mockery. I should have referred you to Numbers 11: 26—30. This has a bearing on Mark 9: 38, 40. We think no one can perform miracles that is not a genuine follower of Christ. We find that it takes prayer and fasting to fit one for the work. I have written these imperfect thoughts from pure motives, and hope our brother will receive them in the same spirit; and if I am in error tell me so, and I will gladly receive instructions.

Our Late Annual Meeting.

Our late Annual Meeting, with the associations connected with it, was one of much interest and pleasure to me. The weather being mostly pleasant, made the traveling agreeable. The occasional showers during the meeting, made it a little disagreeable for the time being, but was otherwise an advantage in keeping down the dust that would have accumulated had it been altogether dry.

Arriving at the place of meeting on Saturday, and looking around at the arrangements and preservations, I very soon discovered that the brethren in charge were fully competant to their trust; and as the meeting progressed, I found no cause to change my mind, but my first impressions were more and more confirmed by the very active and efficient performance of duty in each department.

Saturday night I accompained brother D. P. Sayler to Smithville, where he preached in the Winebrenarian meeting-house, to a large and attentive congregation. At the close of the meeting it was announced that he would resume his labors on the following morning, and that I would be with the people at the Lutheran meeting-house. The morning came; we were conveyed back to town by brother J. B. Shoemaker, with whom we had shared the hospitalities of the night. The congregation was not very large, but very attentive. The minister in charge being present, introduced himself after meeting, and expressed his approbation of our labors.

Returning to the place of meeting after the services were over, I found the brethren assembling from every direction, among whom were some of the companions of my childhood, my youth, and earliest Christian associations, with whom, in the calm of early life, I slept, prayed, studied at school, and worshipped; but with whom I had not met for many long years. While in some respects they soon appeared familiar, they, like myself, had changed the black and auburn hair, the brilliant eye, the dimpled cheek, the teeth of pearl, the active limbs, for the rigid form, wrinkled brow, the snowy locks, and care-worn appearance in general of the autumn of life; thus bringing to mind the solemn reflection that we are all rapidly passing away. By and by Monday morning came; and, at the appointed hour, the elders present repaired to the meeting-house, according to arrangement, to consider what was best to be done concerning the difference of opinion and practice existing among the Brethren in the mode of feet-washing, and the importance of bringing about a harmony upon this subject. The meeting being opened in the usual manner, the question was submitted, for discussion. It was freely discussed on both sides, and was marked with considerable earnestness and animation, yet the kindest feelings appeared to prevail throughout. Finally a solution of the question, rather favoring the practice of the general brotherhood, was submitted to the popular vote of the house, and was sustained by a majority of the Elders (or Bishops,) present, as I now remember, as eighty-nine is to seventeen. This however was somewhat modified and compromised, without taking the vote in the final decision before the united assemblage of the meeting; and, upon the whole, though there were no public concessions made, I think that I am justified in saying that something is gained in this, that the extreme elements are to some extent neutralized, and that the Brethren are impressed with the fact, that there is more vitality in union and love, than in the mere mode of performing the ordinance—much more value in the kernel than there is in the shell—and that we can all associate together in washing and being washed, a slight difference in the manner of washing notwithstanding; and that, there being no principle involved, it is our privilege to consult convenience and expedience; and thus, may we not hope that a step is gained toward a more perfect oneness, upon this point among, or in, the entire brotherhood.

In the general council which continued the three entire days, many questions of more or less magnitude were presented; and while in the discussions, among the variety of minds, we noticed the inclination to take extreme ground, and press those extremes; but happily there was sufficient element of moderation, forming a nucleus around which those extremes exhausted their violence, converging and concentrating upon a proper medium, and so, in the final conclusions, general satisfaction was indicated.

The meeting closing on Thursday evening, in company with our associates in travel, at 9 o'clock P. M., we departed homeward-bound, arriving at Pittsburg at 3 o'clock A. M. We rested until seven o'clock; then were again on our way. On this line, as fortune ordained, we met with the President of the Road, and also some of the inferior officers, with whom brother C. G. Lint was personally acquainted. With them brother Lint, by indefatigable effort, succeeded in getting the assurance that the fare returning on that road would be refunded to the brethren.

At 12 o'clock, A. M., we arived at Dale City where we stopped off by request of brother Lint, to be with them at their love-feast, on Saturday and Sunday. Were conducted to the house of Dr. Beachly, where we were refreshed and comforted by the apparent, disinterested hospitality of the beloved sister and her household, in the absence of her husband with whom we met at Annual Meeting, and who cordially invited us to visit his house, he intending, in company with others, to take a tour farther west, in hopes of regaining declining health. May the good Lord smile upon him, and cause him to realize his fondest hopes.

In the afternoon of the day alluded to, we visited the "Companion Office," where we found in the Sanctum brother Beer, sister Mary S. Buechly, and others, to whom we were introduced. They being much engaged, we soon left, and prospecting a little around, presently evening came, and we repaired to the Brethren's Meeting-house for preaching, according to the appointment. The hour arrived, and quite a respectable congregation were assembled considering the shortness of the notice. Saturday morning, after a comfortable nights rest at the house of brother Daniel Buechley, by whom, and the young sister, Lydia, his daughter, we received unremitted attention, we were conveyed to the place where the Love-feast was to be. At the proper time the members and others assembled in numbers. Supposed to be present, between five and six hundred members. While here, I was led, by circumstances, to solemn reflections, contemplating the reminiscences of the past, marking the progress of events, and the decline and mortality of humanity. Nearly a quarter of a century ago, I, then a youth in age and a babe in Christ, in company with six ministering brethren, passed through this country on our way to A. M. Had a meeting at what was then called Meyer's Mills, in a small school-house, a few families of brethren residing in the vicinity, a small church under the care of old brother Cover and others. We then traveled on horseback, and on this tour I, for the first time, near Cumberland, Md., heard the shrill notes of the railroad whistle. Now, at this then humble place, Meyer's Mills, is Dale City, a flourishing town, with its stores, hotels, meeting-houses, institutions of learning, printing-press, &c., all exhibiting the marks of progress; and the enterprising and energetic character of its citizens. And now, instead of trudging slowly and tediously along on horse-back, as in days of yore, we are comfortably seated in the costly and splendidly constructed car, which, attached to the locomotive, rushes madly on, serpent like, through hills and valleys; now on the mountain slope, then in the lonely valley, and anon plunging beneath the lofty hills, throwing around us the gloom of midnight darkness; then again instantly introducing us to the light of meridian day. And lastly, when viewing the progress of events, instead of the humble school-house, we find the spacious meeting-houses (not house), well furnished with every needful accommodation, not needful to particularize; and instead of the few scattering members, assembled in the little school-house, these large meeting-houses are filled to overflowing. But at this point permit me to say, for our mutual benefit, that we cannot close our eyes to the fact that, in this age of progress, there is a tendency among all of us to depart from the simplicity, self-denial, and cross-bearing attitude that characterized the church in ancient days; and we have need to be admonished upon this point, that we do not suffer the standard of our blessed Christianity to be lowered, but that we endeavor to pass it into the hands of future generations no less pure than we received it from the hands of those who preceded us.

Of the company that traveled through this section, of which I spoke, which was in the year 1848, one other brother, Elder George Shaver of Shenandoah Co., Va., and myself, are all that are left upon the stage of action, the rest having gone to their reward: some taken according to a course of nature, and others by violence. At the close of the love-feast, it was announced that we would preach at candle-light in the city. The hour came; the house was literally crowded, and to us the meeting was pleasant; the people endearing themselves to us by their good order and interested attention; and I hope that our labors, though humble, were blessed. The meeting closing, we accepted an invitation to spend the night with our widowed sister, Sally Buechly. Here we enjoyed a good nights rest. Next morning, being at leisure, we formed a very agreeable acquaintance with this entire family, which appeared to us to be the very embodiment of kindness. In the course of the forenoon we again visited the COMPANION office, found the Editor's assistants more at leisure; formed a more extended and to us very agreeable acquaintance. Returned to sister Buechley's to dinner; after which we took our leave from the family, whose memory will be for time to come fixed indelibly upon our mind. Accompained by the elder son, Gabriel, who ought to be a brother, we took up our march to the depot. The cars soon arrived, and we dashed away, and were soon to them lost in the distance. Passing Cumberland: here taking the train on the B. & O. R. R., we arrived at Washington city at eleven o'clock P. M. The agents on this road would not recognize our privilege of free return; but all admitted that it only failed for proper attention. I hope the A. M. will, in the future, if they make appointments at all, be careful to appoint suitable brethren to make their arrangements.

From Washington city home all was right, and we returned free; and I desire here to say in behalf of the O. & A. R. R. and the Va. & Tenn. R. R., and their agents, that they are every way gentlemanly and accommodating, and deserving the patronage and influence of our fraternity.

Leaving Washington city, we soon arrived at the point where, during the night, a freight train run over a cow, was thrown from the track. Another such a wreck I never saw. The whole train literally smashed and piled up, crushing two of the operatives and seriously injuring the third. A temporary track had to be laid to enable us to get along. We here again were led to think of the uncertainty of human life, and thank God that we were still safe amid the many surrounding dangers.

Passing on we arrived at the place we call our earthly home, thirty-four hours after leaving Dale City, found all well and everything flourishing—the fields of clover in crimson red, and the luxurient crops of wheat beautifully waving before the golden tinge indicating the near approach of harvest; for all of which we thank God, who is the giver of all. Oh, for grace, to enable us to serve him in truth, with the whole heart, considering the great things he has done for us!

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st. To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd. To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

THE

Christian Family Companion.

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Cause of Sorrow.

BY J. W. BEER.

O mother, dear mother, why look you so sad.
When other kind mothers seem cheerful and glad?
Say what is your trouble? What weighs on your heart.
That causes those tear-drops, so bitter, to start?

My daughter, kind daughter, I love you so well.
Or never, no never, my grief would I tell.
My husband, your father, to-night is away.
While here with my children alone I must stay.

The night is so chilly, the fire is so low,
While 'round our rude cabin the winds fiercely blow.
My dear little children are hungry and cold,
And soon our mean pittance, I learn, must be sold.

Your Father, my husband, once loving and kind,
Has gone to the grog-shop to ruin his mind.
To squander his money, to barter his time,
To waste his fine talents, by yielding to crime.

He beggars his children, nor cares for his wife.
He leaves us to suffer and struggle for life;
Your brother is starving—the dear little boy—
And soon our deep sorrow shall have no alloy.

Your father is sinking, and by his own hand
Is hasting himself tow'rd the dark, cheerless land,
Where drunkards and gamblers in torment must dwell,
And drink from the dregs of the nethermost hell.

I plead with him often—he knows it is wrong.
I prayed for his safety and hoped for him long;
But pleading was useless, and pray'rs rose in vain,
My hopes are all blasted; I weep in my pain.

I've heard the sad story while tears fill your eyes
Once more let our prayers like incense arise;
Perhaps in our anguish our Father may hear.
Perchance through this darkness some light may appear.

That they all may be one, as thou father, art in me, and I in thee that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. John 17: 21.

This prayer was offered by the Lord Jesus Christ a short time before his crucifixion. And the import of that prayer was for the unity of the church both in faith and practice. How will sectarians reconcile this prayer with their ever changing systems of theology learned in the schools of divinity? Impossible for them to reconcile that prayer with their practice. Either Christ's prayer was not the will of God, or the practice of their theology is wrong. I maintain that Christ's prayer was the will of God, and their system of theology is wrong; because it is a system built on the wisdom of men, and that is foolishness with God. The import of Christ's prayer was for the indivisibility of the church; that there should be no schism in the church. Next we will inquire whether the diciples understood his prayer, and the import of that prayer. We will call up brother Paul's testimony one who was called by Christ. Brother Paul, what do you understand about the Lord's prayer as written in the 17th chapter of John? Here comes the testimony; "I neither recieved it from man, neither was I taught it, but by the Revelation of Jesus Christ." This is infallible testimony. The first you will find in Galatians 1: 12. Now we will offer his second testimony in regard to his faith in reference to the indivisibility of the church of Christ. Brother Paul, what do you understand about the unity of the church? The church must be a unit in faith and practice God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his son Jesus Christ our Lord. "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment." 1st Cor. 1: 9—10. How beautifully this harmonizes with the prayer of our blessed Lord. Do sectarians believe in the prayer of our Savior? Paul believed that prayer of vital importance, consequently he urged a closer union in the church of Corinth. This union was to convince the world that God sent his Son for that express purpose. Where do we find our great men who want to be the light of the world? we see them arrayed in hostile combat with each other in all controversy, and never can come in union with Jesus Christ, and the true church. And after they are through with their discussions, the people are left just where they were before. But it is something for the infidel. It is food for his ungodly soul. He says, "Let those Christians, so called, agree among themselves what religion is, and then let them teach us." There is reason in this and enough to shame our controversalists. They have become ashamed of Jesus and the simplicity of the gospel. They say we must have classical preachers. As a certain writer recently said, "We can make use of those who who are not classically learned," but he did not say in what way. Their money perhaps for the use of supporting those who will not work.

The Sunny Side.

"Joy and sorrow divide the world between them." We have our seasons of joy, and we have likewise, our moments of sadness. Sometimes our best and dearest friends seemingly leave us under a cloud of disappointment, and then we are likely to experience a degree of sadness. This, however, is natural, and of frequent occurrence while the state of society continues as it is. He who is far wiser than we, has declared that offences must come. It certainly is wisdom in us, then, not always to expect sunshine, and then our seasons of gloom and disappointment will prove less oppressive.

The side on which the sun shines is the sunny side, and since the sun ever shines, there is always a sunny side. The darkest day has its bright moments, and though we see no gleams of sunshine, it is none the less true that it shines above us. How often do we see a gloomy day followed by a pleasent sunset, and the sweet song of birds in twilight. Nature teaches us instructive lessons, and it is from the field of nature that we draw our richest thought. During a cloudy day we are on the dark side, and if we see no further than the mist and gloom around us, our feelings will be dull and oppressive; but if we look above, look higher, where sunshine paints the upper clouds, our spirits will be buoyant and cheerful, or at least, less inclined to sadness.

So it is in respect to our intercourse with others. At times, all is joy and sunshine, and we cannot think that our hearts will ever be chilled by unkindness, or sickened by neglect. But reverses will come and friends may forsake us, leaving the thousand streams of our affections to flow back in disappointment to our hearts. Yet even then there is a bright side to this gloomy picture. Every one has his cares and perplexities in life, and it is certainly right that we make due allowance for many things that we see in others. In order to see the bright side at such times we should place ourselves in the position of those whom we thus narrowly look upon, view their cares, anxieties and perplexities, and appreciate the deep solicitude which they entertain respecting their future prosperity and happiness. None are exempt from the ills and frailties of life; consequently the faults and blemishes of others should be seen and considered through our own.

"Oh, the human heart!
None, none but God can penetrate its mask
And truly understand its life of lives;
The soul-communings that are whispered there;
The anguish and the woe; the hopes in bud
And those all spoiled by blight; the wasted love
And untold struggles that are traced upon
The sacred tablets of its hidden cells!"

If we would be happy, if we desire to keep on the sunny side, the sunshine of happiness must rise in our own hearts. It must brighten the mind, enliven the eye, animate every lineament and expression, and quicken every impulse in carrying sunshine to the hearts of others. Industry, coupled with a lively disposition and good nature, paints sunbeams everywhere. Action is required to remove the rust of gloom and melancholy. Let us then have more action, more life, more cheerfulness, in short, more of everything that will carry sunshine and cheer wherever we go.

DANIEL HAYS.

A Word Fitly Spoken.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." This is a beautiful figure, and teaches an important lesson. A word fitly spoken is a word in season—the right word at the right time.

In no one thing should Christians be more careful than in the matter of speaking to others on religious subjects. A few hints upon this point may not be amiss:

1. The right time must be improved. Some people pay no attention to this, and consequently their words do more harm than good. This holds particularly in the case of young persons. There are always times and seasons when the young are peculiarly susceptible of good influences and impressions. At such times, everything which may be necessary can be said. To neglect this precaution is to throw away golden opportunities of usefulness.

2. The right place must be selected. With many all places are the same. They pay no attention to delicacy or propriety. They say at the table or in the drawing-room what should be reserved for the utmost privacy. Words spoken out of place are worse than thrown away; they do a positive harm. The young are often disgusted by being talked to or preached at in a promiscuous company. Both delicacy and taste are offended, and the person who does it loses all influence for good. How strange that religious conversation must, with some, always be of a preaching character, and as public as possible!

3. The right word must be spoken. No two persons should be spoken to in the same way. This involves much care in knowing and understanding the persons whom we would benefit in conversation.

There are always approaches to every human heart. These can easily be discovered when we really try to find them. With this knowledge we shall the better know what words to employ. When the heart speaks it will be fit words, "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The Restitution (Acts 3: 21).

It is the restitution of all things to their rightful owners: the kingdom shall be the Lord's. The earth possessed by the Son of God and righteous men, will no more be cursed by the usurpation of Satan, or the reign of death and destruction. The heavens will shine with resplendent glory—no more obscured by the dark cloud of God's anger. The thunders of God's law on Sinai against sin will never reverberate through the wide expanse of the new heavens, and man will never more hide himself from the presence of his Maker or temble at the footsteps of the Almighty: for 'love is the fulfilling of the law,' and perfect love casts out all fear. Therefore we love his appearing, and look for his coming in like manner as men of Galilee saw him go into heaven; (Acts 1: 11)."

The Sincere Man.

A sincere man, like a sincere work, bears the stamp of nobility upon his countenance, no matter how rugged and uncouth the features may be. Sincerity classifies the whole soul, so that the light of Heaven can shine plainly into it. It includes earnestness, not so much because it enables us to see, and therefore urges us to obey, the human need for activity. Of all things, sincerity is the most antagonistic to falsehood, because falsehood is the meanest and most ignoble of vices—the vice indeed which seems to envelop all other vices, for even cowardice is but falsehood to human instinct, and sin in all guises but falsehood to nature, and cowardice in the face of moral austerity.

And be ye not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God. For I say through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly according as God has dealt to every man the measure of faith," Rom. 12: 2, 3.

Dear brethren and sisters, how often do we come short of the above quotations! Did we not pledge ourselves to abstain from that which is evil, and to follow him, with meekness and humility? But I fear we too often violate these laws, by conforming to the world, taking part in worldly matters, such as fair's, festival's &c. The scripture says: "Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." Not only part of the cross must be taken, but the whole of it. We must deny ourselves and follow Christ, so that we come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall also confirm you to the end that ye may be blameless. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us watch, and pray, that we take no part in anything that does not become a God fearing people. Let us try to serve God in an upright and honest way the remainder of our days on earth; then we have promise of meeting at his right hand, in heaven, where pain, sorrow, sin, and death can not enter, but where all is love.

From the RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE

Christ's Joy in Our Salvation

Perverted wisdom is apt to attribute any special tenderness of feeling to weakness, and find in the stoical indifference of selfishness the evidence of strength. The philanthropist, with a throbbing heart and tearful eye, is weak; the grim warrior, or the abstracted philosopher, is strong. Such is not, however, the heavenly pattern. Christ was moved with compassion; he groaned at the very sight of grief; he wept with those who wept; and for the joy set before him in the prize of our salvation, he willingly bore the cross and despised the shame.

We often imagine those who are weeping and sorrowful, the most miserable of all men. It is true. The most miserable of all are those who are so selfish that they can not sincerely sorrow nor weep over anything that does not involve their own special interest. The heart that is tender is as much alive to all that is lovely and truly happifying as it is to that which occasions grief. God's grace flavors such sorrow that it carries a sweetness that almost neutralizes the bitterness of its woe. The spirit of indifference and selfishness is almost the essence of satanic happiness.

One of the great beauties of the personal revelation of Christ clothed in humanity is the manifestation of the lively sensibility of Deity toward the sufferings and happiness of our race. Christ not only manifested the broadest philanthropy, and the most profound view of the unspeakable importance of our eternal salvation, but also the tenderest regard for our present happiness. His missions of healing, his words of comfort, his tears, his revelations of the divine character in his dealings, all go to show the most exquisite tenderness toward the human family in their temporal, and even in their griefs and sufferings.

It is not departing from true principles to recognize Christ's sympathy. What is it that most endears Joseph to us? Is it not his exquisite tenderness toward his father and brothers even toward the cruelly-erring ones whom a score of separating years could not estrange from his heart in the slightest degree? What so ennobles high-souled Abraham as his tenderness toward his son Ishmael, and his nephew Lot? What so entwines our affections around the memory of Moses and David as the disinterested devotion of the one to his people, and the love of the other toward his rivals to the throne, Saul and Jonathan, and his inconsolable grief over the erring, sining Absalom? what so endears Jeremiah, and Paul, and Titus, to us as the exquisite sympathy manifested for the sorrows, grief, and afflictions of others? Is it not a similar tenderness of heart which embalms the memory of Howard, the philanthropist, Wilberforce, the statesman, and Lincoln, the great liberator?

It is this tenderness which clothes the genius of Homer with its exquisite loveliness, and draws the affections of a race to Milton, Burns, Cowper, and Whittier.

It is the sympathy of Christ which clothes the wisdom and omnipotence of Deity with a charm that draws the hearts of millions toward him. It seems almost inexplicable to finite intelligence that Christ should have such joy in the salvation of sinners, as that evinced by his acts and by his words. It seems strange that one of estate so high, and glory ineffable, as was his anterior to his incarnation, should find in a fallen, sinning race anything that should so move his joy, in prospect of their deliverance, as to swallow up all will for release from the unspeakable agonies of Gethsemane and Calvary. It seems most unaccountable that beings so fallen should, in any sense, be regarded as his latent jewels. His struggle in Gethsemane, his sufferings on Calvary his manner of conducting the gospel campaign for man's salvation, all attest his value of the souls of men. And "if while we were yet sinners" he gave himself so freely for us, "how much more, being saved by his blood," shall he not freely give us all things.

The triumph of the Lamb will not be a joyless one. In it will be the ingredients of our deliverance from eternal death, our reconciliation and adoption, and our assimilation to God,—our communion, our elevation, our beatification, our glorification, the intermingling of the pure and unceasing love of the redeemed with that of their Redeemer. Of all the happy families that of God will be infinitely loveliest happiest and the most glorious. Greater than the joy of all the saints and angels will be that of our Elder Brother.

For the Companion.

Neglect not Public Worship.

"Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Heb. 10 : 25.

We would infer from the above language, that Paul would have us to bear in mind the great importance of attending the house of God. that we might be built up in the most holy faith. It seems there were some in the days of the apostles that refrained from the house of worship. So it is down to the present day. But says one, "I believe if I stay at home to-day and read my Bible, it will do me just as much good as to go to church." If we were all to come to that conclusion, I fear we would have but little preaching. It would be calculated to discourage our ministers. But let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, unless sickness or very unfavorable weather prevent. We should go and encourage one another so much the more as we see the day approaching. I am persuaded to believe that, when we begin to stay at home, there is a coldness growing within our hearts; and the more we stay away, the colder we get, and we become disobedient, and if not careful will find ourselves grasping baek after the fascinating allurements of the world, which are calculated to destroy our happiness in the future world.

"Well but," says one, "it is impossible for me to go to church to-day; I have got this or that to do, and I think they they can get along without me, so I wont go." But says Christ, "Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." So this should be first, foremost—above everything else. Then let us hereafter, go if possible, and instruct and also encourage our brothers and sisters in the Lord.

We all have a work to perform. All of us are historians; not to write the history of empires or of nations, but to write the consoling thoughts of our blessed Savior on the imperishable minds of our fellow-creatures. If so, that history will remain indelible throughout eternity. If we spend our time in so doing, we shall meet it again, and read it with eternal joy in coming ages. We are taught, that we should be helpers together. We should not expect our ministering brethren to do all.

Each of us has a talent. We should improve it to the best of our ability. We should be very careful that we improve them in the right way. If we improve them by seeking after the facinating things of this world, I fear our end would be as the unprofitable servant: we would be cast into outer darkness where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth. But we should improve them by searching after those things that will pertain to ou r future happiness. The talents given to those servants recorded in Matthew 25: 14, were a type and shadow, of the talents now stamped within our hearts for our improvement while here on earth. Christ the giver of those talents, has now gone to the bright realms of eternal bliss, and is now interceding for you and me. But he has promised to come again in the clouds of heaven, encircled with angels of bright glory to receive those that have made their peace with God, and have been faithful, and to take vengeance on those that know not God. God bless and protect us all until our life's end.

Peter the Rock.

A REPLY.

In COMPANION Vol. 7, No. 47, I find the article referred to, written by Christian Good, Mineral Point, Pa. In explaining W. G. Lint's query on Matthew 16: 18 says, "I believe Christ meant Peter to be the rock;" and he quotes certain scriptures as reasons for his faith. How many of our Brethren understand the above scriptures as brother Good does I know not. I want to say to you, dear brother, with a feeling of love and respect for you and our common interest, after examining your arguments, I cannot accept your conclusions as correct on the above text.

Peter was a man like other men, subject to temptation and wrong conclusions, and entirely too weak to risk the church redeemed by the blood of the Son of God, upon as her sustaining power. If he was right and could not be wrong, Christ would not need to have said, "Get thee behind me Satan." and Paul would not have needed to withstand him to the face for eating with the Gentiles at one time and separating himself from them at another.

The Church of Christ is composed of believing members, (1st Cor., 12: 27—28); Peter was a believing member, and therefore a part of the church. To say the church is built on Peter, is equal to saying the church is built on a part of the church.

You say Peter is called Cephas, which means a stone. That is true but it has no reference to a particular stone neither to this rock. This same apostle calls all believers lively stones, who are built up a spiritual house, &c., 1st Peter 2: 5. From this scripture we must conclude, that the building of the church is represented by the building of a house. You admit in building a house we need more than one foundation stone. Christ, the chief corner stone, was laid when he was ordained to be the Savior of the world. But one stone is not the church, any more than one member is the body. He needed other stones to carry on the work of building up the church, "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ;" Eph., 4: 11—12. These, then, were foundation stones with Christ, upon which the entire structure was to be erected. This is the length and breadth of the building. And although they were the foundation, and therefore, a part of the building, they were also the builders. Christ says, "Upon this rock I will build my church;" And Paul says, "As a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation; for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ;" 1 Cor., 3; 10—11. Through their labors the church was built, and is still building, whether by Christ or his ambassadors. So we preach, and ye believe. Every time they received a believer into the church, they added a stone to the building; and every believer thus added becomes a lively stone in the spiritual house, and a co-laborer with Christ and the apostles in bringing in other stones, and laying the foundation in other places, until it covers the earth as the water covers the sea. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations; and then shall the end come." But not the end of the church or kingdom of Christ, but the end of the world and of preaching and receiving stones for the building. The church is then finished, and ready as a bride adorned for her husband, and will reign with Christ in eternal life. All this great building rests upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets. Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone.

But you do not seem to conceive the difference between the foundation and that on which the foundation is laid. The foundation of our houses is the first part that is made, and may be of wood, brick, or some other material, upon which the remainder of the house is built. But that on which the foundation is laid is the earth, and is no part of the building. Every house must have a foundation, and that foundain to be laid on an immovable substance, or it will not stand. To make this more clear, read Luke 6: 47, 48, "Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like; "He is like a man which built a house and digged deep and laid the foundation on a rock." Here we see the foundation is laid, and is a part of the house. But the rock on which the foundation is laid, is deep down, and is no part of it.

It seems plain, then, to my mind, that as Christ and Peter, with the other apostles and prophets, are the foundation of the church, and therefore a part of the church, neither of them meant to bethat rock against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. By the gates of hell we understand death, or destruction. By the term hell we understand the seat or habitation of the opposing power against God, and Christ, and the church in all ages. By the term prevail we understand to overcome. As the church is to stand forever, the rock on which she is built must be unmovable by any power. But we know that Christ and Peter and the church, have all been under the influence of death; therefore they cannot be this rock.

To learn what Christ meant, we will now examine the scriptures again. "I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter." From these words we understand that Christ had been conversing about something else that is connected with this sentence. By examining we found that the Savior had asked his disciples, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? and they said, some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, and others Jeremiah, or one of the prophets. But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, thou are the Christ, the Son of the living God." This positive declaration of Peter was founded on the rock, and Peter was laid on it, upon the the confession he made. When Christ said, "Thou art Peter," he acknowledged him a believer in Christ, (and upon this confession all believers are not received), because men had reasoned with and convinced Peter that he was the Son of God; "flesh and blood has not revealed it unto thee." If his knowledge of Christ had expended on flesh and blood, he could not have been so positive; for some reasoned one way and some another, and hence the answer, "Some say thou art John the baptist; and some, Elias, &c. Their faith rested on their own power of reasoning; and therefore some would believe one thing and some another, But Peter's faith rested on the revelation of the Father. He knew that Christ was the Son of God, because God said so when the voice came from heaven and said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." With this revelation before him, the apostle could not be mistaken when he heard that voice. Neither were the shepherds mistaken when they went to Bethlehem to seek the Lord. Their faith rested on what God revealed to them by the angel, and they found it all true. Simeon was not mistaken when he took up the child and blessed him, and said, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation," because God had revealed to him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord's Christ. John the baptist knew that he was the Son of God, and that he would baptize with the Holy Spirit; because the father had revealed it to him. And he saw and bare record that this is the Son of God. By the revelation of God through the Spirit, Peter knew that God was no respecter of persons, when he spoke the word of the Lord to Cornelius and his house, and they believed and received the Holy Spirit. And he took that as the ground for his defence before the Jews in saying, "What was I that I could withstand God." Paul says he received his authority for preaching the gospel by the revelation of God through the spirit; and by that revelation he made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, that the gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel. Eph., 3: 3—6. And again, "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory; which none of the princes of the world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. But as it is written, Eye hath not en, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, what God has prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God;" 1st Cor., 2: 7—10. I could refer to many other scriptures to prove that the revelation of God through his Spirit is the great moving and sustaining power of the church, and the only substance that has ever been brought to the knowledge of man that is immovable. The word of God cannot be moved, it is yea and amen. By it we know that the Savior was born into the world, and that he pleased God when he was baptized of John, because the Holy Spirit descended upon him and the voice said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well plesaed." By this we know that Christ had the authority to give us a law, and that we must obey that law. By it we know that if we transgress that law, we bring upon ourselves the wrath and displeasure of God; For Christ spoke not of himself: his Father had given him a commandment what he should do, and what he should teach: "The words which I speak, are not mine, but the Father which sent me." "I will pray the Father to send you the comforter and he shall lead you into all truth, and reprove the world of sin, of righteousness and of a judgment." Whether the Father reveals his Son to us directly, by himself or his Spirit, through Christ or the apostles or the prophets, that revealed word will stand when heaven and earth shall pass away: it is the groundwork of all we believe—the substance of all that we hope, and the fulness of the love of God. Every promise made to the children of men of a Savior of the world, and of a better resurrection, and of eternal life, is based on what God has revealed to us. May we all build upon that rock, that, when the rains descend, and the flood comes, and the winds blow upon our house, it my stand; and that after death we may have a home in heaven, is my prayer. In conclusion I will say, dear brother, I hope our reply will cause no offence to you or any of our brethren. I have written from a conviction of the truth. If I have formed wrong conclusions, I am thankful to you or any brother for more light on the subject, as we want to know the truth only.

The Contrast.

There cannot be a greater contrast than between a pious and a profane youth. A wicked young man is one of the most deplorable sight in the world. He is continually engaged in the service of satan and his angels—the tormentor of his family, and the curse of society. He destroys the prime of his life in his ungodly pursuits, rushes into tepmtation, and is a slave to corruption. He earnestly delights in sin, glories in his shame, and is led captive by the devil and his will. Reader, if this be thy state, how truly affecting is it! Saints pray for you; the Savior weeps for you; angels pity you; and Jehovah himself is concerned about your latter end: "As I live saith, the Lord God, I see no pleasure in the death of the wicked," Ezek., 33: 11. "O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end," Deut. 32: 29. If you seek Him, he will be found of you; if you forsake Him, He will cast you off forever. Young man you are now warned and admonished: but if you are resolved to disregard every entreaty and pursue your guilty pleasures, if you love misery and are determined to perish, then, "rejoice young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes, but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment," Eccles. 11: 9. A pious youth is one of the most delightful sights under heaven. He is employed in the work of God and the angels; he is remembering his Creator in the days of his youth, and devoting the morning of his life to the Father of his mercies. By divine grace he is enabled to strive against sin, resist satan, "flee youthful lusts," contend with corruptions, and conquer temptations when exposed to them; but he avoids the tempters path, and overcomes a corrupted and corrupting world. The pious youth is a comfort to his family and his friends, and is a blessing to society. He is training up for useful life, a happy death, and a blessed eternity. His amiable example is worthy of imitation by all around him. He is ever respected and honored, if not in public he surely is in private. If words fall from his lips they are believed; for he is a truthful young man, and his words can be relied upon. In a word he is the admiration of saints, the joy of angels, and the delight of God himself. The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him, and in them that hope in his mercy. His ways are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace in this world. He has hope in his death and an incorruptable inheritance when time shall be no more. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Let the wicked man forsake his ways; let him pay for the pardon of his sins; for the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin, (1 John, 1: 7). Thus, you see the great contrast that lies between "The pious and the profane youth." Choose the former for your tittle, and rest assured that you will inevitably be saved from a lake of irretrievable woe; to meet with just men made perfect, around the dazzling throne of Jehovah.

Never—a Curiosity.

Never, never, NEVER, NEVER.
Does it move along forever?
Never ends not—never, never.
No it surely means for ever.
When the heart would hope for pleasure,
But the time can't yield to measure,
Then the heart-hope's ours never.
Never gained, but lost forever.

Happiness that finds us never,
Surely finds us not forever.
Cruel word that thus doth sever
Happiness both now and ever.
Never found? No, never, never.
Always lost? O yes, forever!
Mocking term, I'll use it never,
When its' scourge must last forever.

Sinful thoughts I'll harbor never,
Crime is welcome never, never:
Ev'ry evil it may sever
Cut it loose and banish ever.
But the good, the pure shall never
By its ruthless hand know sever.
That I seek -desire forever,
And its breath must blast it never.

Once I said that I would never,—
If another wills to sever.
Will that one pronounce the never:
And thus chain me down forever?
No, the kind heart thought it never
And the lips shall speak it never.
Never! Never! Never! Never.
Am I free? Free! Free! NEVER!

The Day of Judgment.

The great tremendous day's approaching,
The awful scene is drawing nigh;
Which was foretold by ancient prophets,
Decreed from all eternity.

But O my soul, reflect and wonder:
That awful scene is drawing near;
When you shall see that great transaction,
When Christ in judgment shall appear.

See nature stand all in amazement,
To hear the last loud trumpet sound:
Arise ye dead and come to judgment,
Ye nations of this world around.

Loud thunder rumbling thro' the concave,
Bright forked lightning parts the skies,
The heavens shaking—the earth quaking,
The gloomy skies attracts mine eyes.

The orbit lamps all vail'd in sack-cloth,
No more their shining courses run;
The wheel of time stop'd in a moment,
Eternal things are now begun.

Huge, massy rocks and tow'ring mountains,
Over their trembling bases roar;
The raging ocean all in commotion,
Is hovering round her frighted shore.

Green, turfy grave-yards and tombs of marble,
Give up their dead both great and small;
See the whole world, both saint and sinner,
Are coming to the judgment seat.

See Jesus on a throne of justice,
Come thundering down the parted sky;
With countless armies of shining angels,
With hallelujah—shouts of joy.

Bright shining streams from his awful presence,
His face ten thousand suns outshine;
Behold him coming in power and glory,
To meet him, all his saints combined.

Go forth ye heralds with speed like lightning,
Call in saints from distant lands,
Those that my blood from hell has redeemed,
Whose names in life's fair book do stand.

O come ye blessed of my Father,
The purchase of my dying blood
Receive the crown of life and glory,
Which are laid up for you above.

For your dear souls which have continued
With me and my temptation here
I have prepared for you a kingdom,
To reign with me for ever more.

There's flowing fountains of living water,
No sickness, pain, sorrow, nor death to fear;
No sorrow, sighing, no tears nor weeping,
Shall ever have admittance there.

But now will sinners stand and tremble
When Justice calls them to the Bar
Those who reject his offered mercy,
Their everlasting doom to hear.

See Justice now with indignation,
Calling aloud for sinners' blood:
Those that have slighted offered mercy,
And crucified the Son of God.

Depart from me! ye cursed sinners,
My face you never more shall see;
Be banished from my peaceful presence,
To endless woe and misery.

Each guilty soul then struck with horror,
And anguish trembling in his breasts;
Forever doom'd to endless sorrow,
And never more to hope for rest.

Come sinners here's a faithful warning,
Return to Jesus whilst you may:
For he is ready to receive you,
Or else you must depart.

Smoked to Death.

A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said: "It was a mysterious act of God." The minister at the funeral, consoled the friends by saying much the same thing.

Physicians said it was heart disease, and said nothing about the cause of his death. A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said: "Tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart; it ceased to beat, and the victim fell. The woman was right. —New the Sundayschool Advocate.

Little Lifters.

"BEAR YE ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS."

Did you know, my darling children,
There was work for you to do,
As you tread Life's flowery pathway,
'Neath skies of brightest blue?
Your tiny hands so feeble,
May powerless appear,
But often lighten burdens,
The strongest scarce can bear.

You are all "Little Lifters,"
Who with loving zeal will try
To help the weak and weary,
And dry the tearful eye;
And though you lift but little,
Faint not, but lift again,
The hardest rock is worn
By the constant dripping rain.

And when you sing to baby,
Till he gently falls asleep:
Or comfort little sister
Till her blue eyes cease to weep;
Or tie up Johnnie's shoe strings,
And brush his tangled hair;
You are lifting mother's burdens,
And shielding her from care.

And when father, tired and weary,
Comes home to rest at night,
Draw up for him the easy chair
And make the fire burn bright.
Though small the deeds of kindness,
And low the words of love,
The recording Angel writes them
In glowing lines above.

Then love and help each other,
For to you this charge is given.
And in lifting other's burdens,
You lift your soul to heaven.

The Little Fishes.

Two little fishes were swimming one day
In a cool, pleasant river, not far away.
Said Scaly to Finny, "Oh there's a nice fly!
I wish I could catch him; I'll just go and try."
"Stop! Stop!" replied Finny, there's danger, I fear;
I see a long line, and a man watching there:
Don't venture, dear Scaly; be guided by me,
Or else you'll be caught as sure as can be."
But Scaly was heedless; the fly looked so nice,
That soon he forgot Finny's kind advice.
He snatched at the fly, when as quickly as thought,
Came a jerk! and, oh, dear! little Scaly was caught!
Now wasn't he foolish? And yet how I wish
Little children were never like that little fish
But when sin entices how often we see
That they yield to temptation as quickly as he.

But they who thus foolishly choose what is wrong
Are sure to repent of their choice before long.
For like little Scaly, they find, though too late,
That a sharp hook is hid in the nice looking bait.

Apples of Gold.

The Power of a kind word.

A little boy named Willie H. used to pass by a lady's house every day, as he drove a neighbor's cow to pasture and back again. He was a very bad boy. He used swear dreadfully, and was very rude. The lady who lived in this house always called her children into the house, if they were playing on the pavement when Willie was going by. She didn't want them to hear the terrible oaths that he swore. One day this lady thought she would try and do some good for this poor, neglected boy. And I want you to notice what she did; how little it cost her, and yet how much good it did.

As he was driving the cow past, one morning, she called him kindly to her and said:—

"Willie, my boy, do you go to school?

A gruff "No" was the only reply.

"Can you read?"

"Not much; and I don't want to."

The lady pitied the boy. He had no nstruction and no encourgment at home. His parents were not only poor, but very wicked. He had no one to help him to do right.

"Will you stop here a minute on your way back, Willie? said the lady: "there is something I want to give you."

Willie nodded his head with a look of wonder. He was not used to have anything given to him but kicks and knocks, and cross words. To be spoken to kindly, and have a present made him, was something new.

As soon as he was gone, the lady got a nice new Testament, and wrote his name in it. He called on his way back, and got his Testament. The kindness of the lady and the interest she seemed to take in him had a good effect upon him. He promised the lady that he would try to spell out and read at least one verse every day in his Testament. He promised her to come to the Sunday-School next Sunday. And he kept his promise.

A year passed away. And after that a great change had taken place in Willie H. He was always in his place at church. It was pleasant to see him sit there, as if he were afraid to lose a single word that was s i!. And as often as the Sabbath came round, Willie would be seen with his little Testament in his hand, and his clothes brushed clean, on his way to Sabbath-School. His lesson was always well learned; and the rough, ragged, swearing boy, who was a plague to the village a year before had become one of the best boys in the neighborhood.

Now how very little it cost that good lady to speak a kind word to the rude, swearing cow-boy, and give him a copy of the New Testament! And if Willie grows up to be a good man, a Sunday-school teacher, and a member of the church, and lives a life of usefulness, who can tell how much good will result from this one kind act of that Christian lady?

Too Young.

"Auntie, am I too young to die?" asked little five-year-old Ettie, as she came into the pleasant sitting-room, one afternoon.

"No, darling," answered Aunt Hattie. "But what made you ask that question?"

"Why, I told Cousin Harry that I was trying to live for Jesus, as Mr. Johnson told us at Sunday school, and he said I was too young to think about such things; am I, Aunt Hattie?"

"No, dear, you are not too young to do something for Jesus. He died for you, and you must live for him, and the younger you begin, the easier it will be."

"O, I am so glad that Jesus loves to have little children do something for Him, and I always will as long as I live."

"But why do you ask me about dying, darling?"

"Because, when Harry said I was too young to love Jesus, I thought I must be too young to die and go to Him; but if little children like me can die, we can live for Jesus; and I love to think of Him, it makes me love everybody, and I think I feel so happy."

Ettie was right; it does make us happy to think of Jesus and love and serve Him.—Child's Paper.

Christian Family Companion

DALE CITY, PA., June 25, 1872.

Editorial Correspondence.

At our last writing we were at the house of brother Daniel M. Miller. After spending a night and part of a day very pleasantly in the family, brother Miller took us to brother Joseph Fike's, where we spent the remainder of the day and night. Here we were again joined by our traveling companions, Dr. Beachly and little Emma. We had a very pleasant season.

On Wednesday visited brother Samuel Fike's, and dined with them, who in turn accompained us to the house of brother Flickinger, where the company took supper. Here also lives old brother (perhaps Jonathan) Peck, the father-in-law, who is not in the best of health. Thence to the house of sister Polly Lichty, where we lodged. We had made the acquaintance of sister Annie, one of the daughters, at Dale City, last Winter. It is refreshing to meet an acquaintance when traveling among strangers far away from home But we dare hardly call the good people among whom we have been visiting strangers, for are they not all from the same county that we now live in, and do they not know all our neighbors, and some of them much better than we know them ? Besides, they read our paper, and, although some of them had never seen us before, they knew us just as soon as somebody told them who we were. And we ought to know them, for have they not been subscribers to the COMPANION for several years. Of course we did not know them as soon as we heard their names. One thing we do know about them, viz : that a kinder people we could not wish.

On Thursday (6) we attended a Council Meeting, in the Milledgeville branch. It was very rainy, in consequence of which there was not a full attendance. A number of matters were disposed of, apparently, to the satisfaction of all concerned. Brother Miller again took us home with him, and next morning, Elder Martin Meyers, brother Miller and ourself, set out for the West Branch Meeting-house, Ogle county, to attend a Love-feast. The weather being very damp, brother Beachly did not venture out, and hence we are again separated.

We reached the place of meeting in good time, by 10 o'clock. This western wagon travel is almost as great a surprise as rail-road travel was twenty years ago. Besides our company of ministers there were present that we can now remember, Eld. Daniel Fry, Paul Wetzel, Isaac Meyers, (brother of Grabill) Samuel Lehman, Jun., David Miller, brother Kimmell, and most likely some others from adjoining branches. The attendance in the forenoon was rather small. In the evening the house was full. The interest and attention was good. One person was baptized. An election was held for speaker, resulting in the choice of brother John Early. Brother Emmanuel Newcomer was advanced to second degree.

There was preaching on Saturday forenoon, but we could not be present, having other matters to attend to. We have been told that Elder Martin Meyers and others held forth the word.

On Saturday night (9th) we lodged at Uncle David Holsinger's, who now live with their daughter, sister Elizabeth, widow of Emmanuel Miller, deceased some three or four years ago. We always feel at home at Uncle David's. Of him we first learned of the death of Uncle John Holsinger, which occured, after a short illness, on the 28th ultimo. He was seventy years of age, since the eighteenth of March last. He was for a number of years the Elder of the Yellow Creek congregation, Pa., having succeeded his father, John Holsinger. He is now succeeded by Elder Jacob Miller, who was ordained a few years ago.

Thus they go in rapid succession. Only two more uncle Holsinger's left, David and Alexander. The former lacks only four years and a few days of the allotted three score and ten.

On Sunday at 10, A. M. we attended meeting at the West Branch meeting-house. Brother Jacob Hauger preached from the words "Understandest thou what thou readest ?" In the afternoon we again went to Uncle David's and met four of his children with parts of their families. We never expect to meet in the same way again, never in this world. Well, never mind : all the good shall meet above ; if we are good or will become good—which is our privilege—then we shall meet again.

This morning (Monday) we are still at the same place. This afternoon we expect to take the cars for Lena, to attend a Love-feast commencing to-morrow at one o'clock. Thence to another at Milledgeville, on Thursday 13th. On Friday afternoon we expect to take cars at Sterling, for Waterloo, Iowa. Any of our friends wishing to write to us, may address us at Waterloo, Iowa, up to the first of July. If everything goes well at home, and our visits continue to be so agreeable, we may not return for several months. We are now informed that the climate of Colorado would likely be very beneficial to us. We should not be surprised if we would never get within breathing distance of a health giving climate. We suspect it will be like the ague, always forty miles off. We are about as well as when we left home. H

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA }
June 15th, 1872. }

Most of our western readers will wonder at seeing our communication being headed at this place, knowing that we would meet with no fraternal entertainment. Hence we shall first relieve that curiosity by imparting a bit of information.

This section of country has been visited by a great storm and freshet, tearing down and sweeping away bridges, fences, crops, and everything movable in its way. Every hillside bears witness to the quantity of water which fell, being worn into gullies, many of them of considerable depth. Especially are traces of the flood visible on rail-road embankments, against which the elements played with terrible havoc, washing away the track, digging out the culverts, stopping rail-road transportation altogether for several days. The Chicago & North Western R. R. has so far repaired its road, temporarily, as to pass trains over the line, although at fearful risks. While passing over a trestle some seven miles east of this place, the timbers gave away, or settled, several inches creaking and cracking frightfully. Instantly all the passengers were upon their feet. But we were delivered safely upon terra. When we arrived at this place last night at about eleven o'clock, we were told that there were ten breaks between Cedar Rapids and Waterloo, and that we could not leave before nine o'clock this morning. Now we are told at one this afternoon, and some say we may possibly be detained until Monday. Oh, dear, what a disappointment! We had expected ere this time (11 A. M) to be with the brethren and sisters, at the Love-feast at Waterloo, enjoying ourselves with kindred spirits; and instead thereof we are obliged to lie at the hotel. We have however comfortable quarters. After finishing this correspondence, we mean to look around, and possibly may find acquaintances or brethren.

Our last report closed at Uncle David's. On the 10th, uncle took us to Haldane where we took the cars at about two in the afternoon. Arrived at Lena shortly after four. Here we were met by brother Allen Boyer, our agent at that place, and a minister in the Wadam's Grove congregation. He conveyed us to his home, some three miles in the country and kindly cared for us during the night. Next morning he took us to Lena, to visit the Star office, and we formed a very pleasant acquaintance with the editor and his foreman. Their office is a model of neatness. We also had the pleasure of examining one of Dr. McFabrich's Addressing Machines, the most perfect machine we have ever seen for that purpose. Persons wishing farther particulars can address our office.

Thence to the meeting-house in Wadam's Grove to attend the Love-feast. Preaching began at one o'clock. There was a respectable attendance in daytime, and quite large at night. Order and attention very good. Here we again met our venerable old colleague, Elder John Umstead, who made himself useful in the ministry. Brethren M. Meyers, and D. M. Miller, from Milledgeville, Henry Martin from Cherry Grove, Daniel Fry from Hickory Grove, and others from adjoining branches were also behind the table. All the participants appeared to enjoy the feast.

We lodged at brother Paul Wetzel's, in company with other brethren and sisters whose acquaintance we were pleased to make.

On Wednesday afternoon, after having attended an interesting forenoon meeting at the same place, we took a seat with brother and sister Wetzel and their son Peter, in their carriage, and in the evening, after a very pleasant ride, we put up at the house of brother Michael Kimmel, a minister in the Milledgeville branch, where we lodged for the night.

Thursday, 13th, met with the Brethren at Dutchtown, at 10 A. M., being the commencement of their communion meeting. Forenoon attendance small; afternoon, respectable; and evening, large and attentive. Here was the largest number of communicants we ever witnessed in the west. The singing by the sisters was charming. It was admirable to hear so vast an assemblage preserve such perfect unison. We were made to anticipate the songs of the heavenly choirs. About the same ministers were present as at the Wadam's Grove meeting, excepting brother Umstead and Martin, and adding brethren Eby, Wetzel, Isaac Meyers, Michael, David, and John Emmert, David Miller, Samuel Lehman, Jr., and others whose names we cannot recall, as we write from memory. The meeting was pronounced a blessed one by many. We lodged with brother Joseph Fike's.

Friday, 14. Attended forenoon meeting until shortly after eleven o'clock, when it became necessary for us to leave the house in order to prepare for the forth-coming journey. Our exit occasioned considerable confusion, although we think we tried to depart quietly. We shall ever try to avoid a similar occurrence. Had we known the fate before us, even that would not have occurred. We would have much preferred to have remained and taken a more affectionate leave of our kind friends, of whom we had many at the meeting. Should we have occupied more than our proper portion of time during the above feasts, our fellow yoke-men will please pardon. They know how it was. We never enjoyed a series of meeting better than those four feasts in Illinois. Perhaps zeal for the Masters house had swallowed us up. It is so encouraging, so inspiring, to see such large, orderly bodies of faithful followers of the blessed Savior, in such a new country. Hope our fellow laborers will take fresh courage with us, and double their dilligence in laboring to advance. Our labor is not in vain. Indeed, it is not!

At 11:20 brethren Joseph and Samuel Fike, with two conveyances, took aboard brother David Lichty, sister Samuel Fike, brother Beachly, little Emma and ourself, for Sterling, about 18 miles distant, which we reached in time for the 3:15 train, and the rest has been told. With thanks to all our Illinois friends for many favors, we close this lengthy report.

We are all well, and the report is that we leave at 1:35 P. M., an hour from date H. R. H.

Feet-washing a Religious Observation.

Editor A. P. J. In the February number of the Journal, in answer to question: "Are Christians required to wash each others feet in order to carry out the doctrine taught in the Bible?" You answer, "Yes, if one feels that his safety depends upon it. But when one is able to wash his own feet why trouble another to do it?" which answer we do not regard as consistent with your general manner of discussing of such subjects. You would have a man wash his feet "every day," and not if he feels that his health and comfort depend on it. As a teacher, you know that comfort does depend upon cleanliness although your arguments would scarcely be appreciated by those classes of human beings who, like the pig feel very good in the mud, scripturally, "love darkness rather than light." But we have understood you to teach that a man cannot violate any of the laws of nature without suffering the penalty, even if he does feel disposed to do so, which we believe. The same is true of the divine law also. The Christian law directs its subjects to believe and to be baptized. Would you also teach that Christians are required to believe and be baptized, in order to carry out the doctrine taught in the Bible, only if they feel that their safety depends upon it? They can also baptize themselves (whether by immerson or sprinkling); then why trouble another to do it? The command of Jesus is not "keep clean feet," but "wash one another's feet."

When you write your work on Theology in the light of Phrenology, we will expect to learn—for we shall certainly read it, D. V.—valuable lessons upon keeping the head, feet, and entire body clean, without the ordinances of Christianity, but the conscience of the enlightened reader of revelation must be purified "by obeying the truth." (1 Pet. i. 22). "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (John xiii. 17.)

H. R. Holsinger.

[If our good friend supposes that our playful remark was intended to bring a valued and obligatry religious form of his into disrepute, we greatly regret it. We have always regarded the act of Christ in washing his disciple's feet, not as an act to be followed literally, but as an act typical of a spirit of kindness and service—and, as washing the feet in Christ's time was considered one of the most menial of services, Peter was amazed when the Master proposed to wash his feet, and he earnestly protested. "Thou shalt never wash my feet:" but when he found that there was to be somehow a virtue in it, he said, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head."

To the ambitious he said, "He that would be great among you, let him be your (servant) minister." There are many things which teach a lesson of service and self sacrifice for others, and it is the duty of each man and of each age of men to minister kindly to the wants of others, in any form which may be required whether looking after orphans or taking care of the sick. There is a great deal of feet-washing or beneficent and self-sacrificing service required, and it matters little what its symbol is, whether it be washing feet or feeding the hungry or teaching the ignorant.] —Phrenological Journal.

See Here.

The editor has been absent since the 16th of May, and may perhaps not be home before the first of August. This gives us considerable additional labor. Our boiler and engine gave out, tud we had to send them to Cumberland for repairs, which detained us more than a week. These circumstances embarrass us somewhat; but we hope to succeed better hereafter. We can manage to get along without the editor; when our machinery needs it, we can have it repaired; when our stock of materials is exhausted, we can have it replenished; but we cannot do these things without money. There is still some due us, and we ought to have it all inside of two weeks, but don't like to ask for it. We shall wait a little longer, hoping that all who know themselves to be indebted to us will send us the amount without waiting to be dunned.

J. W. B.

The Editor.

By latest from the editor he was at Waterloo, Iowa, still enjoying himself, and improving in health. The same may be said of Brother U. M. Beachly, M. D., who is his travelling companion. They talk of going still farther west.

PHILADELPHIA, June 14th.

Brother Holsinger : Broad Street above Ridge avenue is the most attractive thoroughfare in this city. The many dwellings of superb grandeur, with large side yards attached, adorned with the most beautiful domestics and exatics of the floral kingdom, make it truly such. On a bright moonlight evening, such as we have lately had, the scene is grand beyond description. The broad side-walks lined with double rows of stately maples, are promenaded with thousands of the young, the gay, the proud. Two or three squares only to the north-west lie the green meadows and woodlands of the country ; the sounds of which may be heard in the chirp and croak of the insect and reptile world, and its ambrosial perfumes inhaled, wafted by the western breeze from blossoming fields of grass and grain.

Your correspondent, having enjoyed this inspiring panorama of life and beauty for a while, turned his thoughts inward, and found that meditation is possible even in the midst of the rush and bustle of a flowing tide of our fellow-beings. Some of his reflections will here be reproduced for the benefit of those of your readers who may think them worth perusing.

They, who inhabit the magnificent mansions, which adorn this street, must of necessity be wealthy ; but do riches and grandeur, as a consequence confer happiness ? certainly not. Many, who live in splendor, and possess superfluous thousands, have hearts desolate and forlorn ; that long and ache for the love and contentment, which often nestle in the humble cottages of the poor. The sot or sensualist frequently heaps up treasure, which proves a curse to him and his ; and, he and they go from a palace down to "the narrow house appointed for all the living" amid strife, unhappiness and despair ; while, in the dwellings of poverty and privation, that peace may exist, which the Savior pronounced upon his disciples, and "flow as a river" into the hearts of the occupants ; causing such reciprocal affection and heavenly enjoyment, that words of heartfelt endearment are constantly exchanged ; and they reflect with resignation, and even with glad satisfaction, that only a thin partition of earth probably will separate their sleeping bodies after death ; and exult with joy unspeakable, that their souls will be reunited in a mansion of glory, where love and happiness will be in eternal fruition. It is said man possesses an instinct to worship, by which, when unacquainted with the true God, he is impelled to bow down to "stocks and stones." Might we not, with good reason, suppose that an urging cause of the same nature exists, when we see such a general anxiety among mankind to dwell in habitations of magnificence and splendor ? and is it not as much a prostitution of instinct to spend wealth and energy in procuring fine houses, which can be inhabited only during this short life, while neglecting to secure eternal mansions in the skies ; as it is to worship idols and images instead of Jehovah ?

At our late Love-feast, we had a very refreshing time. There was much tenderness of feeling manifest among the communicants ; and it was indeed "a feast of fat things" to the soul's of God's people. Elder John Fox and his companion participated ; but the old brother declined to officiate on account of the feebleness and infirmities of age. Brethren Jacob K. Reiner and Davis Younce did the most of the preaching. By the way brother Younce, at the request of the brethren of Germantown, came on from Indiana and held a series of meetings, at the conclusion of which five were added to the church by baptism, and one more since; while there are still others who are about ready to turn in with the overtures of peace and saluation. So the mother church at Germantown has put on her garments and girded herself for action ; and, we hope is about to shine in her pristine glory.

"The Church of God" (Winebrenarian) have a small congregation in this city, who worship in a convenient meeting-house at the corner of Germantown avenue and Berks street. They lately held an "ordinance meeting," on which occasion they practiced feet-washing and held the communion, without the passover supper, as they designate the meal which Christ ate with his disciples, the night before he suffered. There were four or five of their preachers present, and the services commenced at 8 o'clock in the evening, by a sermon upon the ordinance of feet-washing, from the words, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The principle points of the discourse were, that there are three "Commemorative, monumental" ordinances enjoined upon the Church of Christ, baptism, the Lord's supper and washing the saint's feet : that if the first two are binding the last is equally so, upon the same authority ; and that a blessing always accompanies obedience, in fulfillment of the promise, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." In conclusion the speaker asserted that Church history proves there always have been a people, the Waldenses among the rest, who, from apostolic times down to the present day have practised "washing the saint's feet ;" and that in our times there are not a few who observe the same rite. The "Winebrenarians" practice the single mode, use an apron for a towel, and exchange the salutation ; in fact, observe feet-washing, just as the Brethren do.

A brother has requested me to inform him whether I could procure him a copy of the German translation of the New Testament by Leander Van Erz. By your permission, I would say to all who wish a copy, that if they will send me $1. 25, with their address plainly written, I will forward them one by mail, postage paid. My address is No. 1527 Park avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

Neglect not Meeting.

Brother Holsinger.—On account of rain I did not go to meeting to day. And being alone, I was engaged in reading God's sacred word of truth and perusing the columns of the COMPANION, which tells us of enough to do, gives many wholesome instructions. Yet there seems to be something lacking. What is it? Why, there was meeting to-day, and I was not there : and one more sermon I did not hear. It made me feel as though I would not stay away from meeting again, if it should rain a little, or the weather be rough. Why? Because there is the place to have our spiritual strength renewed; there is the place to hear the word of God preached : in short it is our duty to be there. The Savior told the apostles to go and teach all nations, to go and preach his word. So we are taught, and it is scripture too. "Faith cometh by hearing and how can we hear without a preacher, and how can they preach except they be sent?"

Brethren and Sisters remember the scripture above written. "How can we hear without a preacher?" Why have preachers? Because it is our duty to go and hear them preach the gospel. Let us not think because we have learned the way to Jesus we can stay at home and read our Bibles, and sing spiritual hymns, and pray, and that is all that is required of us. The apostle did not see it so. What does he say to the believers in Christ? He earnestly entreats them to not forsake the assembling of themselves together as the manner of some is, but to exhort one another; and so much the more as they saw the day approaching. Hebrews 10: 25. We are also taught in the same letter 3: 13, "But exhort one another daily, while it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." In reading this chapter, we find there is danger of us living too negligent in this matter. The longer we stay away from meeting, the less we care about going to meeting; our hearts grow cold, and colder, till at last we care not whether we go to meeting or not. We, like the prodigal son, may get so far from our Father's house that we can see no difference between them and the world. When we get so far, there is danger of us losing our souls. We know not when this little thread of life will be cut off. If our souls are lost all is lost. And whose fault is it? It is our own. Jesus has made ample provision for all of us. If we are willing to take hold and help to keep the wheel a rolling everything will go right, the Lord has said he would be with us in six troubles, and in the seventh he would not forsake us. So we see Jesus is willing to do his part, always has and always will. He is always willing to impart his blessing on all his needy creatures that are under the heaven but he expect something of us, and what is it? The Savior was always about his Fathers business, for which he was sent and it is his disire, that we should be about our duty to be engaged in searching the Scripture, and if we read any part we do not understand, let us find some one who can tell us. Jesus says, "I am the life, the truth, the way, and no one cometh unto the father but by me." Brethren and sisters, Jesus has commanded us to obey. He has sent us preachers to preach for us; then let us keep to our post, don't let the preachers go and preach and we not there to hear them. Let us not stay at home, because we are going to have visitors or want to go visiting ourselves. Don't we know if we take one spoke out of a wheel it weakens that part, and affects the whole wheel. Just so in the house of God. Let us meet once and not find the preacher there; how quick we feel it. Certainly it is the same with the preacher, when he comes to the house of the Lord and no members there. I am including myself as well as others. I know it is the duty of us all to be there: and if we are up to our post, then will the world have cause to say that there is reality in the religion of Jesus Christ. Written in love.

Tornado.

DE GRAFF, OHIO, June 8, '72.

Yesterday about 7 o'clock P. M. a Tornado passed through our vicinity, such as never before witnessed in this section of country. Buildings, forests, and fences, were blown down, thus several thousand dollars worth of property being destroyed. Men, women, children, seeing the approaching storm ran, frightened, into cellars. The writer was called to witness the storm. It looked frightful indeed. The very clouds seemed to be drawn as by the force of attraction to one common center, and thence dashed violently upon the earth. The storm passed in a N. E. course. Our first observation of it brought to view branches of trees and fragments of boards, shingles, &c, as they were being carried a considerable distance in the air. The dreadful appearance of the storm, told evidently as to what the sad state of affairs was where it raged with most violence. This morning we had an opportunity to see a portion of it, of which we accepted. After passing along for some time, tracing where it played general havoc with the timber, having uprooted and broken down all the trees within its reach, both large and small we came in sight of the premises of brother John Kerr. Here is a sad sight indeed. A short distance, perhaps one hundred yards, east of his dwellings, the timber passed over by the storm has all been blown down, some trees being broken off several feet from the base, others taken up by the roots. His dwelling and other out-door buildings present a sorrowful appearance; they all being blown down except the former, though it was much injured, so much that it will be unfit to live in until repaired. To give the reader some idea of the violence of the storm. I only have to tell you that the remaining portion of this building has pieces of timber driven into the western end, as though they had been shot in with some huge cannon—pieces that were carried ½ mile, that being about the distance to De Graff. This town, and one 3 miles west of this have suffered much from the storm. A large portion of both places has been left worthless ruins. A valuable Mill here owned by Wolf, Shriver, & Co is injured beyond repair. Also the M. E. church was blown down here, though few lives were lost. Two children belonging to the Rall family, aged one 13 and the other 5 years. They, as is supposed started for the gravel pit, but before they could reach it they were instantly killed by the falling of this church. This family as regards physical injury has suffered the most of any of those inhabitants. It will be some time before those homeless sufferers will recover their losses. Papers are to day being carried, soliciting donations. Large crowds of people are on the grounds of this much injured little city.

F. M. SNYDER.

Brother Henry:—As I lay down your valuable paper and take up my pen, I feel like saying, Amen, to what I have been reading. The C. F. C. is a welcome visitor to me. I do not get to hear the Brethren preach very often; and it does me much good to hear from my dear brethren and sisters. There is nothing that makes me rejoice more than to read church news from all parts of the brotherhood, and to hear of poor sinners flocking home to Jesus. I feel my weakness very much in trying to write for the paper; but we should not bury our talents, if we have but one, we should try to improve it. I read some few articles written on the Sabbath school cause. This is something I love to read, for I think there is no place where children can go that is better than the Sabbath-school for them to learn the way of Jesus. I have been a teacher in the Sabbath-school for two years, and now am elected for a third term. It is a place I dearly love; and I sincerely wish the brethren and sisters would take a deeper interest in going to Sabbath-school, than some of them do. I hear some brethren say they were never in a Sabbath-school in their lives. This I am sorry to hear. My prayer to God is that I may hear no more of such talk. We all have a work to do in this life. Going to church every Sabbath and hearing the Minister preach, and not doing anything ourselves, will not take us very far on our way to heaven. I feel like saying with brother Bosserman, on the subject of Sabbath-schools, that brethren should send their children if they do not go themselves. I think much good can be accomplished by them, if rightly conducted, and dear children brought into the fold of Jesus. I close, hoping to hear more from the brethren and sisters on the subject.

Yours in christian love.

CATHARINE ROBBINS.

Millersburg, Ind.

Editors of Companion:—I have an item of church news to lay before your many readers. On 8th inst. I left home to meet with the Brethren in council in the Middle Creek branch Somerset county, Pa., Arrived there in good time for business. Met Elder J. Berkey, of Shade branch, Bennet and Foust of Indian Creek branch. Had a large turn-out on the occasion; and to their credit we must say the church is in a flourishing condition, and the members seem to have that love that should be manifest among the people of God. After the deacons' report was handed in, we found that there was no business for the general council; after which the applicants for baptism were asked to take their seats forward, when seven if I mistake not, came forward to be received into the church by baptism.

After this we made preparation to hold an election for two Speakers. When the votes were all received, the choice was declared for William H. Miller, (son of brother Jonas A. Miller of the Elklick branch. I mention the above so that the brethren elsewhere can make a better distinction from the many Millers in this county.) and Jacob T. Meyers. May God be with them in all the efforts they may make in the spread of the gospel of Christ.

C. G. Lint.

Permit me to ask for an explanation on the following passage of the divine law or gospel of our Lord and Savior, about the sin against the Holy Ghost we read of in Matth., 12: 31, 32. Heb. 6: 4—6, also 10: 26, 27. Luke. 12: 10. The above scripture I have never heard explained, and some of my neighbors would also like to hear an explanation. I had an idea of the meaning of the above scripture; but in the C. F. C. No. 9 page 133, brother D. B. Klepper knocks my theory all to pieces. Hence I ask for further information.

Yours in love.

G. R. Kistler.

Query.

Brethren, I desire an explanation on the 26th verse of the 14th chapter according to St. Luke.

John A. Clement.

In the Berlin branch, Somerset county Pa., June the 8th, of dropsy, brother SOLOMON BERKLEY; aged 72 years 10 month and 16 days. The subject of this notice was brother in the flesh of our much lamented brother John Berkley, deceased bishop of the Elklick branch. He leaves a widow, two daughters, and some grand-children to mourn his loss, and a very large circle of friends with whom there was close affiliation, as we would suppose from the large number that waited on his funeral. His sufferings were extremely great the last days he spent on earth; but now his body is calm and quiet in the grave, while his spirit is at rest. Funeral occasion improved by the writer and J. P. Cober from Rev., 21: 1-8.

In the Upper Cumberland church, Cumberland county Pa., sister CATHARINE HOLLINGER; age 76 years and one month. Her husband Elder Daniel Hollinger, died nearly 12 years ago. She was the mother of 11 children, 7 living, 76 grand-children. But some of them have gone to the spirit land. Four of her sons had been in the ministry. One of them is also gone. She was the mother of our suffering brother Adam Hollinger, who has been lying on his sick bed some 8 months. The departed sister had been afflicted for some 5 years. Three years she was confined to her bed. She was helpless. Her disease was rheumatism. Funeal services by brother John F. Stamy and the writer, from the 119th Psalms 59: 60.

John Brindle.

Died on the 16th of April, Elder GEORGE BEAR, aged 83 years and 3 months. Brother Bear was for upwards of forty years a consistent member of the Church. During that time he was considered worthy to serve the Church in the capacity of Deacon, First and Second Degree in the Ministry, and for the last fifteen years as Elder or Bishop.

Many of our old traveling Brethren, no doubt, recollect him, (when he lived in Middletown, Fredrick county Md.,) at whose house they enjoyed the pleasant hospitality of himself and worthy companion. Sister Bear died in 1863. Brother Bear since that time has lived amongst his relatives and friends, having no children. He attended as member of A. M. always at his own expense. Was considered a safe counselor. He died at the house of Mr. C. F. Adolphus Fox, in Fredrick City, Md.,—a relative. In his last hours he had the attentions of a number of near relatives—one of whom remarked to me, "Oh, I wish you could have been present to have witnessed his last moments." Another said: "'I was standing near the bed and remarked to him—'Uncle, how sweetly you sing.' His answer was, (and I think they were his last words,) 'You know it was always my wish to be engaged to the last in good works.'"

Thus died one whom the apostle Paul might have included (so intended no doubt) when he said, "Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men." Brother Bear was buried besides his wife near Burkettsville. Funeral sermon preached by the writer, assisted by the Brethren Castle and Yontz. Text, 73d Psalm 24, 25.

E. Slifer.

Died, in the Cherry Grove Congregation, Carroll county, Ill., April 18th, brother ANDREW ESHELMAN, aged 52 years, 3 months and 25 days. He leaves a sorrowing widow and seven children to mourn their loss, which we hope is his great gain. He said he was ready and willing to die. His disease was lung fever. He was a Deacon, and I we believe a faithful one, too; and he is now gone to reap the reward of his labors, and to enjoy the peaceful and happy abode of the blessed eternity, where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

Funeral services by brother Henry Martin and Michael Boinger, from Amos 4: 12.

S. H. Wolf.

Died, in the Lickcreek Congregation, Owen county, Ind., near Middleberry, Clay county, Ind., March 26th, sister JULIAN SHOCK, wife of brother Azariah Shock, deceased, aged 38 years, 4 months and 13 days. She left a kind husband and five children and many friends to mourn her loss, but not without hope. She was a kind sister, beloved by all who knew her. She was brother Shock's second wife. Her disease was palsy. She lived but a few days after she was struck with the palsy. Friends, here is another warning to all the living, for death comes when we think not of it. Being so near at hand, when the rider on the pale horse comes and knocks at the door of our earthly tabernacle, O how often, with great grief and woe, he must be welcomed in. Then, when it is called to-day, prepare to meet thy God; for it will not be long till we too must go the way of all flesh, prepared or unprepared.

Funeral services by Elder David Culler and the writer, from St. John 5: 25—29, to a large concourse of people.

Ananias Hensel.

Died, in the Buckcreek Church, Henry Co., Ind., May 13th, 1872, of consumption, Brother JESSE R. LIVEZEY, son of Brother Isaac Livezey, aged 22 years, 11 months and 19 days. Funeral discourse by the writer and Eld. Geo. Hoover, from Job 14: 14, to a large and attentive audience. The subject of the above notice put off his return to God till within a week of his death. He was baptized by the writer. Br. Jesse was strictly moral in his manners, and a dutiful and obedient son to his parents.

Levi Himes.

In Greenbriar county, West Va., August 17th, 1870, LILLY VIRGINIA, aged 4 years.

In Fayette county West Va., June 3d, ISAAC DAVID, aged 11 years 4 months and 15 days; all children of brother David and sister Sarah Frantz. Little Lilly and Isaac were bright and intelligent children, seemingly too good for this sinful world; so God has taken them home. Funeral of the three preached June 5th., by the writer, assisted by brother C. Masters.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler, and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

Education.

We have attained to an age in which the populace is looking up the educational interests of our blessed and happy land. And the general feeling of the people of this great nation is favorable to all institutions of learning. At least those that are conducted in a manner agreable with Christian meekness. Not only are the people of all shades and colors instructed in this matter, but I am ready to bless the name of my God, that I can lay my hands upon the Bible while my silent thanksgiving are going up to the framer of the great School Book of all nations on the earth, and that it has gendered a feeling, or an emotion within the heart, to imitate the great Educator, by establishing a method of instruction well sustained and supported by this great goverment, to whom all from the highest to lowest should be grateful. Even the poor are provided for. Now where is the man that dare say, that our method of educating the youth of our land has not done a vast amount of good? Admitting that it, as well as anything else, brings its evils along, is it not equally true, that, upon the whole, the good fairly covers the evil? What else than our great institutions of learning in America, is breaking down superstition—idolatry, has even crippled the power and influence that the great seven headed monster once wielded over his subjects in this land of Bibles and educational facilities? I am not in the least startled at the fears that seem to be harbored in the bosom of the great Antichrist of the world; for as we advance in education, and in the general literature of the day, we thereby bring into question his ecclesiastical pretentions and supremacy. It is the great engine of power, that God has placed in our hands, with which to equalize us as a nation. He who will live another quarter of a century, will see the great work that it will have done in that direction in America, yea, all over the world. This thing of education, as it is called, has been kept entirely too long within the grasp of the aristocratic; it is now wrenched from these and thrown into the lap, as it were, of every man and woman in all this land, to make use of, to their best advantage as Christian people. Be not astonished when I tell you, in the face of all this, we have men and woman professing godliness who oppose anything and everything called education or learning; not thinking, for a moment, that they are advocating the propriety of ignorance, superstition, and mental slavery. I am indeed sorry that we have in our brotherhood those that are so very fearful concerning the interest that some of our brethren seem to take in education; yet at the same time they say "We are not opposed to education." Why, then, do you not practice what you preach? Your practical teaching and influence, are reared up as a mighty bulwark against institutions of educational advantages.

It is said, "Our common school faculties are all we can desire them to be, and in them we can get our children all that they need to carry them through the business of this world,"&c. Let us try this rule by a practical, every day occurrence among us. To whom do these men of no letters go to have some business transaction completed in writing, or it may be a mathematical business arangement? Do they go to men that know as little about reading, writing, and calculating as they do? We answer, no; neither do they go to a man of but an ordinary education, but they seek for the very best. And why? Because they suppose him to be the safest and most reliable. Why, is it because he is the humblest, the most honest neighbor within reach? No, that is not it; for neighbor B. is much a better man in many respects; but because of educational advantages the other one is to be preferred. Just so in religious matters When the disputer must be met, we seek out the ablest man in letters to meet him. We then look not so much upon his other Christian characteristics; it is education we want for the time being. We are certainly aware of the fact, that our English language is changing all the time. Words in use when I went to school, are now obsolete, while others have been changed in their orthography, so much so, that I think it highly necessary in us, as a Christian people, to make upward strides, that we be making preparation to meet our opponents on every side. I am not an advocate of pride in any case.(if know what pride is); at the same time, I think we ought to have a few more of that kind of praechers among us, that some of us call "col lege bred," for I have repeatedly observed this one thing, namely, when we come together as ministers, and as members, we want to hear from the ablest, in general information' and in literature as it is generally said, "Not on my account, but on the account of the outside attendance. Is not this so? Who of us is not guilty; What is our strongest auxiliary to the spread of gospel truths, as we understand and practice them? Some might say the Bible. Admitting that the Bible is the great master-wheel, or should be in all institutions, it being the base of operations, education is a great auxiliary to carry out the general principles, of the Bible to the world. And so are our periodicals, as long as they build upon the Bible. But had the editors of our periodicals not the qualifications literally, our papers would effect nothing. But with these, and the education we have in our church, we are amply able to cope with any sect that makes the Bible its base of operations. In addition to this we say, that Salem College is, or will be, a strong fort of defence if it is carefully conducted. I fear none of those "college-bred ministers" that brethren unite and talk about so much. I will in conclusion say, let us stand under the arms of our brethren that are engaged in the good work at Salem; and if we cannot do this, let us not, for the present, write against it, nor preach in opposition to it; for I am of the honest conviction, that, if we have anything in the church or among us as a body of Christian people, that will do more, in a measure, than our periodicals have done, it is as a well conducted institution of learning. If it does not demolish sectarianism I am pretty sure that it will cause it to tremble, as many of the advocates signify.

The word "education" was chosen as a heading, from the fact that it is the word most generally used among us. It does not quite cover the ideas I wished to convey, yet I presume it will appear intelligible to you, as readers of the C. F. C.

The Books of the Bible.

In Genesis the worlds were made, by God's creative hand;
In Exodus the Hebrews marched to gain the promised land.
Leviticus contains the Law, holy, and just, and good;
Numbers records the tribes enrolled—all sons of Abraham's blood.

Moses, in Deuteronomy, records God's mighty deeds:
Brave Joshua into Canaan's land the host of Israel leads.
In Judges, their rebellion oft provokes the Lord to smite:
But Ruth records the faith of one well pleasing to his sight.
In first and second Samuel of Jesse's son we read.
Ten tribes in first and second Kings revolted from his seed.
The first and second Chronicles, see Judah captive made;
But Ezra leads a remnant back by princely Cyrus's aid.
The city walls of Zion, Nehemiah builds again,
Whilst Esther saves her people from plots of wicked men.
In Job we read how faith will live beneath afflictions rod;
And David's psalms are precious songs to every child of God.
The Proverbs like a goodly string of choicest pearls appear.
Ecclesiastes teaches man how vain are all things here.
The mystic song of Solomon exalts sweet Sharon's rose,
Whilst Christ the Savior and the king the apt Isaiah shows.
The warning Jeremiah—Apostate Israel scorns;
His plaintive Lamentations their awful downfall mourns.
Ezekiel tells, in wondrous words, of dazzling mysteries,
Whilst kings and empires, yet to come, Daniel in visions sees.
Of judgment and of mercy Hosea loves to tell.
Joel describes the blessed days when God with man shall dwell.
Among Tekoa's herdsmen Amos received his call;
Whilst Obadiah prophesies of Edom's final fall.
Jonah enshrines a wondrous type of Christ our risen Lord.
Micah pronounces Judah lost—lost but again restored.
Nahum declares on Nineveh just judgment shall be poured.
A view of Chaldea's coming down Habakuk's visions give:
Next Zephaniah warns the Jews to turn, repent and live.
Haggie wrote to those who saw the temple built again:
And Zechariah prophesied of Christ's triumphant reign.
Malachi was last to touch the high, prophetic chord;
Its final notes sublimely show the coming of the Lord.

Don't Do It.

The following rules, from the papers of Dr. West, were, according to his memorandum, thrown together as general way-marks in the journey of life:

Never to ridicule sacred things, or what others may esteem as such, however absurd they may appear to be.

Never to show levity when people are professionally engaged in worship.

Never to resent a supposed injury till I know the views and motives of it; nor seek occasion to retaliate.

Adoption.

"To them gave he power to become the sons of God." John 1 : 12.

Christ first communicated his doctrine to his own chosen people, which is implied in the language heading this article ; but they did not accept it, and refused to acknowledge him as their King, pronouncing him an impostor, and heaped vile epithets on him. "But as many as received him, to them" he gave special power, which the text implies they did not possess before he conferred it.

Prior to the coming of Christ, and after the introduction of the gospel, they claimed to be of the seed of Abraham and the sons of God ; but Christ plainly informed them that they do the works of their father, the devil, and consequently are not what they claim to be. And as many of them as received Christ by accepting the conditions of John's preaching became the objects of his (Christ's) special power, and received power to become the sons of God.

There is evidently a difference between being made a son, and receiving power to become a son. Some people will probably conclude from reading the text, that those Jews were made heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, by one grand stroke of the divine power visted in Christ, by their simply professing faith in Christ. But this will not do ; for Nicodemus confessed, saying, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God ; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest except God be with him." John 3 : 2. But Jesus told him plainly that he must be born again ; implying that a profession of faith would not change his relation, and admit him to all the immunities of the kingdom. Do men receive power to become sons of men in this nineteenth century, or are they made sons by a physical act on their part ? We answer, that they receive power to become sons, and there is physical action required of them, as well as of those Jews who were obedient to the heavenly admonition by believing John's preaching and being baptized of him. Those of the Jews who did not receive Christ rejected the counsel of God against themselves, not being baptized of John. Hence we conclude that we must receive Christ before we will receive power to progress in the divine life. The belief and action of the Jews we believe to be the way they received the Savior of Mankind ; and as God's laws are immutable, and not susceptible of improvement by men, we must, in order to inherit everlasting life, accept Christ as our Savior and confide implicitly in his word, and perform all that he commands, let the acts be ever so simple to our minds ; for God's ways are not man's ways : as the heavens are higher than the earth, so his ways are higher than man's, and the foolishness of God is wiser than the wisdom of men.

"O yes," says one, "I know you always refer us to baptism as a means which God uses for the salvation of men." God and his Son Jesus Christ, on whom our hope of heaven hangs. We must walk worthy of our vocation, preach the truth of the stars fall. Christ says, "He that receives you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." John baptized them unto repentance for the remission of sins ; saying they should believe on him that should come after. And again, "I indeed baptize you with water ; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am unworthy to unloose, he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." We are not informed that John had a mourner's bench and invited the Jews to come forward and occupy it that their more righteous brethren might pray for them, that the Lord would send a special spirit into their hearts with power to enable them to believe and instantaneously make them the sons of God and heirs in his kingdom. We hear men, now-a-days, claiming the divine sanction for the most foolish, false, and palpably wicked practices, which causes every moral principle of candid, honest men to revolt. They deny the plainest Gospel truths in or ler to bolster up their perverse doctrines, which they substitute for the truth of God, and are enabled to go forth with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, to deceive mankind, and drag them down to the pit of destruction, and sink them down to the lowest depths of spiritual depravity. But if we take the plain account of the believing Jew's acceptance of Christ for our example, we will have no use for the modern inventions that are used to prepare men for membership in the fashionable sects, and to qualify them to participate in the absurd forms of worship adopted by these self-styled Christians. Christ has not told us he would grant us life on the terms of our own choice. He has fixed the conditions of his law, and made all the preparation necessary for our salvation, and it now remains for us to accept and reap the reward—everlasting life, or to reject, and be cast into hell with all the nations that forget God, and become a fit companion of devils. I once heard a preacher say, at a protracted meeting, that all that the Lord required of them was that they believe, and Jesus would meet them and pardon their sins ; and almost in the same breath he told them, that none were considered legal communicants at the Lord's table, but those who had been baptized. If Jesus had promised to meet us on the highway, in the closet, or in the wilderness, and pardon our sins on our own conditions, we could accept the teachings of modern, sectarian divines, and carry with us into the church all that is required to gratify and amuse our proud, sensual natures in the world ; but the belief of any one of the sectarian doctrines is not sufficient to enable a man to receive power to become a son of God. Every sect, or society, requires a man to believe in the tenets of the society before it admits him into its privileges or secrets. Unless a man has faith in the doctrine of his brethren, he can not be a consistent member. A man must believe the Gospel before he can become a subject in Christ's kingdom ; and his faith must be made manifest by certain acts of obedience, which Christ, during his incarnation, exemplified for the benefit of the children of men.

Dear reader, your Savior has promised, that, if you will confess him before men, he will confess you before his Father which is in heaven ; and if you deny him before men, he will deny you before his Father in heaven. Receive him at once, if you are not in the church, and he will grant you to reign with him in glory. May the Lord lead us by the light of his word, and, finally, when our labors are brought to a close, give us all a happy admittance into his celestial kingdom above, is the prayer of your unworthy servant.

Covering the Head.

In COMPANION No. 8, page 125, we find a query addressed to ourself, which we will now try to answer. In the first place, we owe an apology to the brother who requested an explanation from us. His very kind, brotherly letter, ought to have been answered long ago, but circumstances beyond our control have thus far prevented us.

You desire an explanation on that clause in our essay which reads, "To wear a covering in times of public service is a plain injunction, to wear it at all times is a privilege, accompained with the promise of angelic assistance." You say, "Now if it is the sister's privilege at all times to wear the covering, it is her duty." Do you, dear brother, discern no difference between duty and privilege? We think, we can perceive some difference. Duty is something binding, something that we are under obligations to perform. Privilege is merely a right, a prerogative, or a permission. Having now tried to give the meaning of the two terms as they are generally employed, we shall next try to notice how these terms are used in the sacred volume.

In Ecclesiastics 12 : 13, we read, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter : Fear God and keep his commandments : for this is the whole duty of man." And in Luke 17 : 10, it is written, "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all these things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants : we have done that which was our duty to do." From the above scriptures we learn, that obedience to the divine commands is our bounden duty, and our whole duty, and that to neglect to render such obedience, will imperil our salvation. But has our heavenly Father granted unto us, his children, the right to use our own option in any matter without incuring his displeasure? This is now the question at issue. It is not left to our own choice whether we comply with that which has a, "Thus saith the Lord," or its equivalent for. But there are otherthings concerningwhich there are no plain commands; respecting these, we think, we have some choice ; also we may exercise our judgment as to fitness of circumstances. For instance, we are commanded to pray, see 1 Chron. 16: 11; Ps. 105 : 4; Is. 55: 6 ; Phil 4 : 6 ; Col. 4 : 2 ; 1 Thess. 4 : 16 ; 1 Tim. 2 : 8. As to place, secret prayer is positively commanded, Matth. 6 : 6. Family devotion, though we have every reason to believe, is, if properly conducted, well pleasing with God, and will serve as a great help, yet, for it, there is no plain command. We might name other instances of like nature, but let the above suffice.

So with that clause upon which our brother requests an explanation, "To wear this covering in times of public service is a plain command, which we dare not neglect. To wear it at all times, is not so plain a command, yet we have a strong intimation that by so doing we meet our Father's approbation, and that he will vouchsafe to us blessings. You say, "Then it becomes our duty as brethren to be uncovered ; to my mind the two seem parallel." We do not regard the two as parallel throughout, so far as it alludes to seasons of worship, they are parallel. Again we shall try to notice the language of 1 Cor. 11 : 10, "For this cause ought the woman to have (the token of,) power on her head because of the angels." For what cause? because, "The man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man." The apostle, in his allusion to the original design, intimates that man had the pre-eminence. In Gen. 3 : 16, we read the penalty pronounced against woman, as the punishment due her transgression. This law has never been repealed. So also with every evil that has been entailed upon us, as transgressors. But all these evils having been brought under the control of Jesus. If we have found refuge beneath his sheltering wings, we will not only have grace given us to bear them patiently, but they will be made instrumental in promoting our spiritual welfare. Hence, the apostle says, "For this cause ought the woman to have (the token of,) power on her head." Paul, asserts, that she is in possession of an inward power that will sustain her amid all the sufferings and trials, that the peculiarities of her position, exposes her to. The apostle desires her to wear an outward sign or token, of this power. Precious, blood-bought power! How we should prize it! Power, to appropriate unto herself all the immunities of the kingdom of grace ; power, to expand the wings of her soul, and soar far above the narrow confines that limit her earthly sphere. A badge that signifies so much, we ought not to be ashamed of.

Again, we do not see that our brethren ever really wear a covering, or any thing on their heads designed as such. Are not their hats designed for a protection, merely, and not for a covering?

In that church where inferiors and superiors, are acknowledged, it seems to be in keeping with this voluntary submission, that a part of the clergy should at certain times, in their service, have their heads covered. But our brethren, who acknowledge no creed but the gospel, in accordance with the teachings of the great Master, as recorded by Matth. 23 : 8—12, have no human leader ; but in the language of the Savior they are emphatically, all brethren. They all occupy one common level, having, but one Master, Christ; but one Father, God. This is the noble dignity, the glorious liberty, that Christ has bestowed upon our brethren. Paul says, "Stand fast therefore in the liberty with which Christ made us free, and be not again entangled with the yoke of bondage." Gal. 5 : 1.

Now dear brother, we have tried to reply to your questions as best we could ; hope we have written the truth, if however you, or any one else detects any errors in what we have written, we hope to be corrected in the spirit of love. Thank you for the kind manner in which you addressed us.

Conversion.

I do not want to teach my superiors, but I expect to give evidence as I go along to prove the position I take.

Peter preached on the day of pentecost, and three thousand souls believed and were added to the church. When the gospel pierced their hearts under the preaching of the apostles, they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Now here comes the point, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." There was no hesitation, no going away sorrowful ; they felt just right on the subject, and with great joy complied with it the same day. Some teachers of Christianity seem to think that they have discovered a universal remedy for all cases. Faith, and faith alone appears to be the remedy. Faith is good in its proper place; without faith, it is impossible to please God. The Lord requires more of his people than faith. He wants us to put our faith into practice, by obeying his commands. Some think that prayer alone is the remedy; prayer is good in its place. We find Cornelius was a man that prayed much, yet, he was not justified by prayer alone, thus, when we come to sum up every thing in its proper place we find that it requires faith in the word of God. Repentance and baptism are connected together; and therefore no man can put them asunder. A man may attend revivals until his head is silvered over with the frosts of age, as long as he is not willing to obey the injunction of our blessed Savior, he has no promise of eternal life, "Blessed is he that doeth his commands, that he may have a right to the tree of life and enter in through the strait gate into the city." Rev. 22: 14. We must take the word of God for our guide, but the question is, Do we take scripture for our guide, and at the same time reject the ordinances of baptism, and feet-washing? These are certainly no works to prove our faith, if we reject the simple injunctions of the Savior. The Savior says, "He that breaketh the least of my commands is guilty of all," but if we have the spirit of God it will lead us into all truths, and we are willing to do all things whatsoever he has commanded us; otherwise it must be a spirit of delusion and consequently we are not Christ's followers; if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his, as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith, without works is dead, consequently faith must have also works, and baptism and feet-washing is some of the work whereby we prove our faith. Are we saved by the blood of Christ or are we saved by ordinances? We all admit that the blood of Christ cleanses us from sin. But as long as we are not willing to do whatsoever he has commanded us, we are not cleansed as in the case of Naaman; he could not be cleansed until he dipped himself seven times in Jordan. We find that he was not willing at first to comply with the instructions given, for he said are not the waters of Urbana and Pharpar rivers better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean? But he said if the prophet had bid them to do some great thing, would they not have done it? This seemed to calm the raging of his turbulent soul, he was now ready to bow in submission to the will of God, and dipped seven times. Now why did not the fifth and sixth dipping cleanse him? The qualities of the water coming in contact with his flesh, did not effect the desired change; but the power of God through the visible means in accordance with the specific directions given. Had he refused to be dipped the seventh time, who would dare to say that he was cleansed? The seventh dipping was essential to his cleansing he had just to do what God commanded him, otherwise he could not be cleansed. So was the case with Peter in feet-washing. Some think that the blood of Christ cleanseth us from sin, and not baptism and feet-washing, and that the reception of the Spirit can be obtained in revivals. We admit that it matters not where the sinner repents: he can repent at home or at revivals; but we see that they have revivals one year after another, and some of the same converts again. Here they weep and mourn, until they think they have received the Spirit. Then they stop, and consequently they are not going on to perfection; and when storms and persecutions arise, they fall back again into the world. And why is it? Because they are leaving undone that which God has commanded. They are not willing to follow Christ in his footsteps, and as he is our pattern, and was immersed in the river Jordan, to give us an example, and washed his disciples feet, and told them, "As I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet," and said, "Happy are ye, if ye do these things." We find when Peter said, "Thou shalt never wash my feet," the Lord said, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part me," and as Peter was to have no part without his feet washed. So I believe that any man that objects to have his feet washed, has no part with the Lord; for "He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commands, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Therefore brethren and sisters, let us pray to God always to fill us with a knowledge of his will in all wisdom, and spiritual understanding, and let us go in the discharge of our duties and take the word of God for our guide. If others reject some of the ordinances, one thing is certain, they cannot explain it out of the Bible. It stands there "Though heaven and earth pass away, my word," says the Savior, "shall not pass away." Therefore let us watch and be sober, that we may not be deceived by the enemy. We find when Jesus was telling his disciples of the things that shall transpire before his second coming, he says, "There shall arise false prophets, and if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." By the elect we understand those whom the apostle denominates to be the children of light—tells them that they are not of darkness. Then beware of false prophets, for they shall come to you in sheep's clothing, but they are as ravening wolves. Believing that we are at the present time surrounded by those who would prevent the true doctrine, it becomes us to be on the alert; for they will tell you that some of the injunctions are of no utility to salvation. May the Lord rebuke such folly and grant them grace, peradventure, they may acknowledge and obey the truth.

The Wife.

In comparison with the loss of a wife, all other earthly bereavements are trifling. The wife! she, who fills so large a space in the domestic heaven, she, who is so busied, so unwearied in laboring for the precious ones around her—bitter is the tear that falls on her cold clay. You stand beside her coffin and think of the past, it seems an amber-colored pathway, where the sun shone upon beautiful flowers, or the stars hung glittering over head; fain would the soul linger there. No thorns are remembered above that sweet form, save those your hand may have unintentionally planted. Her noble, tender heart lies open to your inmost sight; you think of her now as all gentleness, all beauty and purity. But she is gone! The dear head that laid upon your bosom, rests in the still darkness upon a pillow of clay. The hands that have ministered so untiringly, are folded white and cold beneath the gloomy portals of the grave. The heart whose very beat measured an eternity of love lies under your feet. The flowers she bent over with smiles, bend now above her with tears, shaking the dew from their petals, that the vendure around her grave may be kept green and beautiful.

Many a husband may read this in the silence of a broken home. There is no white arm over your shoulder; no dear face to look up into the eye of love; no trembling lips to murmur the kindest feelings of the heart. Ah! how sad, how lonely you feel; for the idol of your heart is gone. The little one whose nest, death has rifled, gazes in wonder at your solemn face, puts up its tiny hands to stay the tears, and then nestles back to its father's breast, half conscious that the wing that sheltered it most fondly is broken forever. Remember then that nothing in life is so pure and devoted as woman's love. Wound not then the heart that loves you; that fountain of unsealed and gushing tendernesss. It matters not whether it be for a husband, child, sister or brother, it is the same pure unquenchable flame, the same immaculate glow of feeling whose undeniable touch-stone is trial. Give her but one token of love, one kind word or one gentle look; even if it be amid poverty, desolation or death—the feelings of that faithful heart will gush forth as a torrent in despite of earthly bonds or mercenary ties. More priceless than the gems of Golconda, is the female heart; and more devoted than the idolatry of Mecca is woman's love. It is delight for the soul, to have confidence in faithfulness of a wife. It makes a pillow of softness for the cheek which is burning with fears, and the touch of pain. It pours a balm on every sorrow, it is a hope undeferred. A flowery seclusion into which the mind, when weary with sadness, may retreat for caress of of constant love. The rememberance of every friendship, the clasp of that dear cold hand in the last moments of life, when she with her consoling voice says, "farewell, farewell," and her hand yet clings to yours, "we shall, I hope, meet again in heaven." The sound of those parting words, dwell as within an eternal echo on the ear, and as dew of mercy falling on the bruised and troubled heart. Bereavements long witheld, descend sometimes as chastening griefs upon our nature, to remind us of our duty to our Heavenly Father, and direct our thoughts to that happy and blessed home, "where all tears and sorows shall be wiped away," and we shall meet those dear ones to go out no more for ever. There is healing in the bitter cup. God takes away or removes far from us, those we love, to increase our faith and impress on our minds the uncertainty of life, and teach us to look forward to a re-union in another world where there will be no more separation, and no mutability; except that which arises from perpetual progressiveness.

Faith is that precious alchemy of the soul which transmits grief into joy, or rather, it is that pure and heavenly change which clears away the film from our mortal sight and makes affliction appear what it really is, a dispensation of mercy. Then cherish the rememberance of that faithful friend, that dear departed wife, whose holy presence as a ministering spirit, is probably now guarding your innocent children. In all new and pleasant connections give her spirit a place in your heart; never forget what she has been to you. Be tender of her memory so you may meet her, with a soul unstained in that bright and beautiful world. Wife and mother! What sacred memories cluster round these words; that being, whose affections will linger round us to the very last. what sweet consolation in the hope when this freed spirit is released from this earthly tabernacle, we shall again behold those we have loved on earth, in the home of the blest whose deep sound no mortal ear hath heard; where our friendships will be renewed, where God hath said, "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor has it ever entered into the mind of man to conceive the joys he hath prepared for those who love and serve Him." Consider who deprived you of that dear wife and companion. Was it not God? Did not he that gave her to you, take her from you? May he not do what he pleases with his own? Is there any defect of wisdom or goodness, of justice or mercy, in God's disposal of your wife? Or, will you ever have rest but in the submitting to the divine good pleasure. You must not have all your miseries conveyed to you merely by one instrument; therefore, when one dear friend has done her part for your wellfare and happiness, God will send you other mercies by another hand; and it is fit he should choose the messenger who bestows the gift. There are some who doubt whether heaven itself will renew those friendships of earth; to remove such distressing aprehensions, let the following reasons which are supported by God's word be sufficient: You can not think the knowledge of glorified saints shall be more imperfect than their knowledge was while they were upon the earth. We shall know much more, not less, than before. Heaven exceeds earth in knowledge as much as it does in joy. The angels of heaven have now a distinct knowledge of the last believers on earth, and rejoice in the conversion, and are styled by Christ their angels; therefore, then we shall be equal to the angels, we shall certainly know our nearest friends, who will have their share with us in our glory, and though God be all in all in heaven, yet we shall there, not only know, but love and rejoice in our fellow creatures, for Christ in his glorified human nature will be known and loved by all his members, without distinction of the glory of divine nature. The several members of the body of Christ will in heaven be so nearly related to each other, and not be unconcerned in each others felicity. The future triumphant state of the church is often described in scripture as a kingdom, the city of God, the new Jerusalem; each of which implies a society. As one part of the saints' happiness, they are to come from the east and the west and sit down with Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; and therefore they shall not only know those great patriarchs, but shall take peculiar delight in their presence and converse besides, love to saints as well as to God, is a grace that never faileth. Yes, religion's bow of promise points his aspiring though humble spirit to the future, the glorious hope of meeting again those we have loved on earth. When we cast our eye back through the dim vista of the past, and recall to mind the friends of our soul, we are led to enquire, where are they? With all the numerous throng with whom we sported away the laughing and happy hours of infancy—whom we could finally grasp by the hand, and enjoy our innocent passtimes—how few now meet our wandering eye, some in their journeyings through the vale of human life have been called to other climes, to distant strange lands; others have gone to their final resting places the tomb; while others have been turned from us by the repulsive power of their cold feelings of estrangement. But there are a few choice spirits who still linger around us irradiating, like stars the sky of our being, diffusing a halo of delight through it rendering it brilliant with the light of hope and joyous expectation. These we link with a few departed companions of our early years who are gone from the trials and temptations of this sinful world to that happy home where we fondly trust we shall meet again in that pure and heavenly rest, where our souls may commingle together, united in the bonds of holy affections through the long and ceasless ages of eternity. It can not be, that those dear beings whose hearts once beat mutually with ours, whom the angel of death has hid from our gaze, and whose names with the cold and selfish world are destined to float for a while on the tide of rememberance and then pass away into the sea of forgetfulness, are fated never more to meet our views. No! there is a voice that comes from our blessed Jesus, "As my father has loved me, so have I loved you, there is a closer fellowship for it is that of spirit as well as of mind; for God, that is all love, would never have created hopes that are to be bounded by the grave, ours is an immortal friendship for it rests on an imperishable basis. It is not union so long as we travel together, but union too in our everlasting rest —

"A few short years of evil past,
We reach the happy shore
Where death-divided friends at last,
Shall meet, to part no more"

We feel that death puts an end to our friendship, but Christ's friendship only moves a step closer when mortality intervenes, it is not for a moment suspended. The Spirit rises to himself to the enjoyment of his presence, and to forms of intercourse and endearment which can not now be imagined. So it was in the history of Enoch: to-day, he "Walked with God," on earth—to-morrow he walked with him in heaven, "we shall meet again," and the endearing thought that thus it will be, cheers us on our pilgrimage through the dark wilderness of life, secretly admonishing us to beware of temptations—to shun the soul-destroying haunts of vice. Remember the words of our blessed Redeemer, "He that believeth shall not perish but have everlasting life." Cordial belief in Christ Jesus, God's own gift, brings into heart the first pulsations of the new existence, and we shall at last have meeting more blissful and transporting than all the joys of earth, never to end, where the union is at length consumated amidst the pealing "hallelujahs" of greatful triumph and everlasting love—a union never to be interrupted by one passing doubt, but ever to become more joyous and affectionate in the fruits of unbroken and mutual kindness of glory in the presence of God. Amen. RUFUS G. GISH.

Wasting Time.

Waste of time is seemingly not understood by many as well as it might or should be. We have but one minute at a time, and if we do not improve it as it passes, we can never return to gain it. I overheard a conversation the other day, as follows, on the corner of one of our street, by two intelligent looking young men. "John, I don't know how I shall kill the afternoon. His friend replied, "go and sleep." "I'll do that," replied John, and started off at a brisk pace, seemed in great glee as to having procured a plan to "kill the afternoon" as he called it.

Is it possible, that we in this enlightened age, have more time than we can make use of? I think not, but it seems that some people think so. We have heard it remarked on Sabbath mornings, "I believe I'll not go to church to-day, I am so tired and will rest, and be more able to go to work to-morrow." I should think while in church we are resting. We should not work so hard to accumulate dollars and cents, that we cannot sit still in church. It is not necessary. It seems natural for most every one to spend some of their time, which afterward they can see might have been improved to a better advantage. We should try to find out where and when we waste time, and avoid it. Perhaps there are few, if any, upon close examination that would not say, "they have wasted time, "and now feel the effects of it. When we have leisure time from our worldly duties, (which we all have more or less) we should employ it in reading the Bible, and other usefulreading matter, such as the COMPANION, and I think there will be no cause to regret, for having wasted our time.

Notice to Delinquents.

Since there are still a few churches in the Northern District of Ohio who have not yet contributed their quota of A. M. funds we take this method of informing them that; although the time when such funds should have been paid has long since passed, we still consider them due and shall continue to consider them so until they are paid. We now call on you to pay up prior to Aug. 1st, 1872, as we have set the time for a final settlement of our business, and report.

We urge a prompt compliance with the above request, as we do not desire to report any of our dear brethren as having entirely failed in complying with a plain duty.

By order of Committee of arrangements for A. M. of 1872.

Correction.

In No. 23 of the COMPANION, in the article on music, second paragraph, first sentence, read 'music is harmonious sound.' instead of "music is harmonious." In third paragraph, last line, read "to whom all honor is due" instead of "to whom all things is due." D. S. A.

Reply to Brother Forney, Sr.

Before entering into a discussion of this kind, it is due to myself to say that I am not fond of controversy, nor do I regard it in the least desirable. But inasmuch as I am challenged, I am necessitated to more fully expand my ideas. If what I herein present does not comport with good logic, I most frankly acknowledge my ignorance of scriptural phraseology.

Should my arguments, however, be based upon scientific principles, founded upon good logic, I want them to be accepted as the productions of one whose design is not to argue upon topics of no special interest, but one whose design is to be more fully instructed in the mysteries of godliness. "Prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good," is at this moment echoed through my pen, and will continue to echo until J. T. M. will be emancipated from the garb of mortality.

There are brethren who become so much confirmed in their own peculiar views, that, were they to believe otherwise from the productions of a mind of an unsurpassed logic, would not yield as to the least, and if the latter were demonstrated to them in the most rigid analysis of language.

That man (the genus homo,) is subject to "death in the midst of life"—mark you, life allotted—is evincible from the fact that we have good biblical authority to fully establish the fact; and he who maintains that he is not, has yet to learn what true philosophy is. That "in the midst of life we are in death," I admit is not a scriptural wording, but is a philosophical maxim.

Brother F. charges me with making a wrong application; and to convince me of the error, he puts it as follows: "In the midst of death we are in life;" meaning that, if the former is logical, the latter certainly is. I am really confounded at the brother's remark, whereas an impartial reading and an intelligent digestion of my article would have saved him the trouble of making his rejoinder no doubt designed to baffle away the strength of my arguments.

He says that according to my application, when in Nebraska we at the same time would be "in the midst of all the other States; because we are surrounded by them." This is another application of his that may be fully attributed to the weakness, may I not term it human precipitancy? What has my application to do with the one made by brother F.?

This very moment I am in Nebraska, not far from my worthy brother F., and purpose coming to him altogether, God willing, either to instruct or be instructed. The Urim and the Thurmim are what I am in pursuit of. If brother F. has any compunctions of conscience for preaching that "in the midst of life we are in death," is that a sufficient demonstration to at once demolish the practice? Verily not. Here then comes the diverging point, "brethren differ." Why do they differ? We answer, because they cannot see alike. Why then preach alike upon topics of this kind? By no means. Right here brother F. faults the ministers for preaching that "in the midst of life we are in death," from the simple reason that he thinks "every one, young or old, dieth at the end of life."

We shall notice briefly in a philosophical way who he says dieth at the end of life. All physiologists, however diverse in their theory, concur in this, that, according to our total organism, we are continually dying—fading away. In short, we cannot live as to our total organism, unless we are always dying as to our atoms; nor is there an instant in which death is not somewhere taking place. Every effort and every movement kills some portion of the muscles employed; every thought even involves the death of some particle of the brain. Hear what Job says, "Man dieth and wasteth away, yea man giveth up the Ghost and where is he?" Ghost (Anglo-saxon gast, Greek brodem,) shows its physical meaning in the cognate word "gust," as "a gust of wind;" also in the term used to designate the aeriform substance called "gas?" To "give up the ghost" is, liberally to surrender the breath. Hence we at once perceive that brother F. is wrong where he says "dieth at the end of life;" because end of life not only implies the act or position of dying, but means the cessation of the vital acclivities, having become incapable of performing their functions utterly in a state of inactivity we therefore no more say dieth, but is dead. What language could we employ to convey the idea more emphatically, of the uncertainty of death than that used? The reason assigned for not using it is simply this, "It is an unscriptural term, and contrary to the nature of the case, nowhere to be found in the gospel."

Just here let me ask, does brother F. preach nothing except he can find it written in legible characters in the Bible? Is his preaching of a "thus saith the Lord" and nothing more? Judge ye.

Are ministers more righteous, more holy, more just, and better than St. Paul, who preached things, and empatically declared he had it not of commandment, but by permission, using his own judgment. How much better are we? Not a whit. In preaching upon topics of this kind, not a word pro or con said of it, we are entitled to our own judgment? But brother F. says, we should not preach it. From this I infer he would not only regard such preaching as a mere mental aberration, but as saying the least sophistry. Come brother, I hope better things of you: The phrase "in the midst of lifewe are in death," is highly philosophical, and would imself that we may be in death before our appointed time. See Ecll. 1: 16, "Be not over-much wicked, neither be thou foolish, for why shouldst thou die before thy time?" What may be the lease of human life, is a question for which the Psalmist is acknowledged to have provided a final answer. "The days of our years are three-score and ten years." There are however plenty of examples of longevity far exceeding even the higher figures accompanied by retention of all the faculties and powers, the exercise of which forms the true life of man.

Arguing from these, it has been thought that by using proper means, an age of two centuries may be attained; less ambitious minds are content to hope for a century and a half. In Genesis itself one hundred and twenty years are fixed.

Buffon considered that the maximum need never be under ninety or a hundred, which "the man" says he, "who does not die of accidental cause, everywhere reaches."

Floiens, the latest writer upon the subject, conincides in the opinion of his famous countryman. "A hundred years is what providence intended for man." It is true that few reach this great term, but how few do that which is neccessary to attain it! The Psalmist says, "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days."

What is here meant in days is fully explained in that which is signified in life. Hence man declining at an intermediate period of thelife allotted, which is three-score years and ten, is said to have died in the midst of life.

In conjunction with this let me appeal to you in the words "Memento mori" remember death. It may be in the midst of life, which is to say, in the bloom of youth. "Therefore what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch, be ready, have your lamps well supplied with oil; for the cry is and has been, "The Bridegroom cometh." Behold, he cometh in an hour ye think not.

I remain with best wishes and brotherly esteem your unworthy young brother.

Little Things.

A little thing! How oft that word
We hear from young and gay;
Events which fill our daily lives,
Are "little things," they say.
Ah, did we know the weary pain
A little fault might bring;
We'd pause a moment, ere we dared
Call it a little thing.

It may be but a hasty word,
A cross or angry tone
The little woe that prompted it,
Ere it is spoke is gone.
But to the loving heart it wounds,
The sorrow long will cling,
The pain your thoughtless words impart
Is not a little thing.

Remember, too, the loving Lord
Looks very calmly down,
To give each action and each thought
His blessing or his frown.
That hasty word recorded is
Where holy angels sing.
Their sinless hearts are pained by it,
Is it a little thing?

A mother's kiss, a sister's smile,
A golden summer's day,
Appear but little things to us.
To cheer our onward way;
But love, and joy, and thankfulness,
These gifts were meant to win;
Your Heavenly Father sent you each,
Not as a little thing.

Oh! who can tell the wondrous chasm
Which on each act may hang,
Reaching from when their morning hymn
Stars of morning sang,
Through countless ages, till the time
Of which the angels sing!
Can any link of this great chain
Be called a little thing?

Know that each hour of life is fraught
With endless good or ill,
Not act but with its consequence
The universe may fill:
Then, till with angel's vision clear
We mount on angel wing,
Let us not dare to say of aught,
"It is a little thing."

Only One Childhood.

Mothers are sometimes over-indulgent to children, excusing themselves by saying, "My little ones have only one childhood, and I cannot bear to make that unhappy." And therefore willfulness is allowed its full bent, and selfishness is permitted to eat out the heart of budding manliness and womanliness. All that is asked for is given, and the lesson of self-control is left for a more convenient season.

The tender love which would forbear needless chiding, and would endure with preserving patience the thoughtlessness which belongs to early years, is not to be stifled. Rather let every parent water it with the dews of prayer, and guard it against the blasts of selfishness. But it is all too common to regard the present happiness of our children rather than their growing characters. We see only the pleasure which animates them and fills their little lives with sunshine, forgetting that we must prepare for sombre days, when their rejoicing must be in themselves alone, and not in a mother's indulgence.

That boy has only one childhood in which to learn how to curb his temper; how to be gentle; how to share his good with another; how to endure disappointment. That girl has only one childhood in which to be taught truthfulness, self-reliance, and womanly self-respect. There is only one proper seed-time in human souls; and, although belated sowing may not prevent the reaping, yet the harvest must needs be scanty. Let mothers remember, then, that the warm, moist spring-time must not be wholly given to juvenile license, to song and flowess, but that older heads must forecast the autumn, and prepare, by hard work and self-denial, for the ripe fruit in its season.

Truthfulness

Of all happy households, that is the happiest where falsehood is never thought of. All peace is broken up when once it appears there is a liar in the house. All comfort is gone when suspicion has once entered—when there must be reserve in talk and reservation in belief. Anxious parents, who are aware of the pains of suspicion, will play general confidence in their children, and receive what they say freely, unless there is strong reason to distrust the truth of any one. If such an occasion should unhappily arise, they must keep the suspicion from spreading as long as possible, and avoid disgracing their poor child while there is a chance of its cure by their confidential assistance. He should have their pity find assiduous help, as if he were suffering under some bodily dissorder. If he can be cured, he will become duly grateful for the treatment. If the endeavor fail, means must of course be taken to prevent his example from doing harm; and then, as I said, the family peace is broken up, because the family confidence is gone. I fear that, for some cause or another, there are but few large families where every member is altogether truthful, But where all are so organized and so trained as to be wholly reliable in act and word, they are a light to all eyes and a joy to all hearts They are public benefits, for they are a point of general reliance; and they are privately blessed within and without. Without, their life is made easy by universal trust; and within, their homes and their hearts they have the sincerity of rectitude and the gladness of innocence.

HARRIET MARTINEAU.

A Word to Young Converts.

Be not discouraged by varying frames of feelling. Do not compare your experience with that of others, as if yours must be like it to be genuine. Maintain calmness and steadiness of purpose. You must not count on singing joyful songs all the way to Heaven. Think not your hope a delusion, and your soul in the gall of bitterness if your song ceases. Keep up a stout heart. Look to Jesus, and not to frames of feeling as your surety. Keep in the beaten path of duty, listen not to doubt, seek not comfort in yourself, or in your works. When you have no sight, live by faith. When the stars are hidden, and the way is dark, when feeling is no longer satisfactory, look at the steady needle of principle, and go by that less inspiring, but more trusty, guide.

Much of the unhappiness of this world arises from giving utterance to hasty, unkind words.

Trust him little who praises all; him less who censures all; and him last who is indifferent in all.

There are two ways of going through this world. One is to make the best of it, and the other is to make the worst of it. Those who take the latter course work hard for very poor pay.

Christian Family Companion

DALE CITY, PA., July 2, 1872.

Signs of the Times.

We call the special attention of our readers to the department of the COMPANION headed Signs of the Times. In our advertisement it is said, "So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to a proper observance of the Signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming in cantact with the so-called Literary or Political journals."

This department has heretofore been too much neglected; and we purpose hereafter to pay more attention to it. We are living in a grand and awful age—in an age in which it is both sublime and fearful to live. The times in which we live are unsurpassed, if not unequaled, in physical, political, and religious convulsions and revolutions; and it is high time for Christians to lift up their heads and mark the progress of events. As the budding fig tree betokens the approach of Summer, so the strange yet foretold scenes that are now transpiring are certain omens of the near approach of the glorious reign of our exalted King.

We call upon our readers to assist us in making this department of our paper what it is designed to be, that it may tend to our intellectual, moral, and spiritual advantage.

The Editor.

The editor, and his traveling companions, Dr. Beachly and his daughter Emma, are still out on their Western journey. The latest we had from them they were still at Waterloo, Iowa, but expected soon to start to Minnesota. We hope they may be much benefitted; and we feel willing for their good to deny ourselves and labor a little harder at home; but we would like to have a little more editorial and correspondence from them than they have furnished for this number. We promise our readers more in number 27.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Gavazzi.

He proclaims himself an evangelist, and not a Protestant or a reformer. It is the province of a conquered party to protest, but he maintained that he belonged no longer to such a party. "Our party," said he, "is now the victorious party, and it is for the Pope and his adherents, henceforth, to protest, as they are protesting to-day. They are the conquered party now —not we." Nor did he profess to be a reformer, for what, in the Church of Rome, was there that he could reform? "You may cut off the gangrened finger of a man to save his hand; or a gangrened hand to save his arm; or a gangrened arm to save his body. But if his whole body be gangrened you will not cut it up into a hundred pieces to save—nothing. And the whole body of the Roman Church is gangrened. There is no soundness in it from the crown of the head, to the sole of the foot; and, therefore, the best thing that can be done with it is to hasten its death and burial, that its diseased and loathsome carcass may cease to pollute and poison the political, moral and religious atmosphere of earth, and to excite, as it does, the disgust of right-thinking and pure-minded men." Gavazzi heretofore, proclaimed himself rather, a destroyer than a reformer of the accursed system of Romanism, for there was nothing in it to reform. And this, as we understand the meaning of divine prophecies pertaining to this subject, is the destiny which ultimately awaits this system. "And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming; even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved." (2 Thess. ii. 8–10.)

Gavazzi asks American Christians to help the Evangelical Christians of Italy to establish and endow a biblical college, or theological seminary, in the city of Rome, where they can educate an evangelical ministry to evangelize Italy. And he will not ask in vain. The work will be done the theological seminary will become a fact in the capital city—the very city itself of Rome—from which, through so many centuries, the Bible and its special teachings have been excluded by civil pains and penalties inflictd upon any who would dare to introduce God's own word, where was set up the throne of Antichrist, and where Antichrist was supreme. Who, a little while ago, would have predicteed that this would be possible so soon? The Lord is working wonders in our day, and bringing to pass that which concerns the mission of his son Jesus Christ, in ways and by means which fill us with admiration and astonishment. The gospel is now freely preached in Italy, and a Bible Society Depository is opened across its Tiber from the Vatican, and the Pope, if he chooses to look upon so startling a spectacle to him, may, without the aid of an opera-glass, read the gilded letters that stand over the door-way of entrance into this Depository across the river from his papal palace! W. T. F.

"Signs."

Solomon said, many centuries ago, "even a child is known by its doings, whether his work is pure and whether it be right." When I see a boy in haste to spend every cent as soon as he gets it, I think it is a sign that he will be a spendthrift. When I see a child hoarding up his pennies, and unwilling to part hith them for any good purpose, I think it is a sign that he will be a miser. When I see a child looking out for himself or herself, I think it is a sign that the child will grow up a very selfish person. When I see boys and girls often quarrelling, I think it is a sign they will be violent men and hatefull woman. When I see a little boy willing to take strong drink, I think it is a sign he will be a drunkard.—When I a little boy who never attends to the service of religion, I think it is a sign that he will be a profane and profligate man. When I see a child obedient to his parents, I think it is a sign of great future blessings from his heavenly parent, and though changes sometimes take place in the character, yet as a general rule, he signs do not fail.

The Menonites in Russia.

We find the following in one of the Chicago dailies. Whether the information relating to our brethren in Russia is altogether reliable we are not able at present to say, but for the most part, we have no doubt it is correct.

"A letter fron St. Petersburg announces that the Menonite colonies in Southern Russia, comprising fully 40,000 persons, are seeking homes in the new world, to escape the obligation of military service, and have already presented petitions to the British and American Goverments, asking on what terms they will be received. This sect was founded in the low countries, in the sixteenth century, by Menno Simon, a priest who abandoned Catholicism, and taught that war was unlawful and military service sinful. In 1561, they migrated from Hol and to East Prussia. Here they were subjected to persecutions, which in 1789, culminated, in a degree forbidding them to purchase landed property. By invitation of Catharine II, the larger part of the colonists removed to the Lower Dnieper, in Russia, being granted various privileges; including freedom of worship and exemption from military service. The emigrants from Prussia until 1817. Under the protection and favor of the Russian Goverment, they have preserved almost intact their German character and institutions, and are noted as industrious, intelligent, and peaceful. Now that their privileges are infringed, and it is demanded that the Menonites render service in the field, they desire to place themselves and their children within the pale of free institutions and the guaranty of religious liberty. The laws of Russia forbid the emigration of a subject without the consent of the authorities, and it remains to be seen what course the Menonites canr safely adopt. The addition of a mass so compact and so virtuous to the industrial forces of Canada or United States would be of the highest benefit." —Herald of Truth.

A Letter from Brother Adam Hollinger

The following letter was read to the congregation at the Lovefeast in the upper Canawaga branch, in may last:

To the brethren and sisters of the upper Conawaga congregation, and all who may hear this; greeting.

My heart is with you upon the solemn occasion in which you are engaged. Hope Jesus may be in your midst. I also desire you unitedly to bring my case before the throne of grace, as I need it much: I am still confined to my bed, but am on the recovery, slowly I have a strong desire to eat the feast with you. As it is impossible, I desire you to save me some of the Lord's supper, and of the Bread and Wine that may be kept remaining.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

Wellsville, Pa., May 10, 1872.

Answer to Jacob Bare, of Lodi, Medina, Co., Ohio, as to whether there are any brethren living in the North West part of Lucus Co., Ohio, or the North Eastern part of Fulton Counties. I would just say that we have an organized church of the Brethren, in the Counties named by Bro. Bare. One of our ministering brethren, Richard K. Berkeybile, lives in the North Western part of Lucus Co. The brethren constituting our church (Swan Creek Church) are chiefly settled along the Air Line R. R. Have meeting every 3 weeks within six to eight miles from the place he desired to know. Would be desirous to have members move in.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brethren Editors:—Our Council Meeting here, in the Berlin congregation, came off to-day, June 7th. All the business was transacted pleasantly and in the fear of the Lord. The most joyful as well as the most important news I have for you is this, that those who were willing to obey the Lord, were baptized, and added to the Church here below; ten in number, from the young of sixteen to the aged of sixty. But you know we believe none to be too young and none too old to commence to serve God. Surely the christian has great cause to rejoice where he sees that the army of the Lord is reinforced from time to time. God has promised to be with his children. If he is, and we increase in number, surely the victory over Satan's army will be complete. But still we must remember that we are only instruments in God's hand. We may rejoice, but still we must not forget our duty. It makes our very hearts thrill with joy, when we see the church prosper; and we believe we can not be wrong in this. We read that angels rejoice when one sinner returns to God; consequently it can not be wrong for christians here below to join in with them. We like to see those outside enter the Church of God here below; but let us remember that our mission goes further.

Let us show to them, that we love to have their company on our way to eternal happiness. Let us march hand in hand through this vale of trials and troubles. Let us encourage one another under all difficulties. Let us keep our banners flying high, so that they may be seen from the banks of the enemy and soon some more will desert his army to become obedient to the God of all creation. But brethren let us also be careful to feed these little ones; let us by no means give them cause to become cold in the work which they have now commenced; let us bear in mind that, although some of them may be old in years, they are only babes in Christ. Do not put too heavy burdens on their shoulders at once. When you see them tremble, give them some wholesome food from the Master's table, so as to make them strong so as to be able to take up their crosses and follow the Lord cheerfully.

To you, my young brethren and sisters. Do not think that you are now beyond all danger. Watch and pray; for the temptations for some of you may be many and great. Others that were your friends will scorn you; those that respected you will mock you; but don't despair. Remember they have done the same towards the Savior. If you get into trouble beyond your bearing do not forget to communicate with older members of God's family. They will intercede for you, and God will help. But above all, show now by your works that you are sincere. I understand there are some among you who have left father, mother, brothers and sisters behind. They are yet standing out side; but by your walk and conduct you may convince them, that there not only is reality in the religion of Jesus, but also enjoyment. Do not forget to talk to them on the subject. Tell them that the door of the church is open for them; the ministers of Jesus are ready; the members of Christ's body will welcome them. They can have the bread and water of life without money and without price; and soon we may have the pleasure of greeting them as brothers and sisters.

Now brethren ministers, a few words to you yet. Your reward is awating you, if you work faithful in the Master's cause. Will you blow the gospel trumpet a little longer, and, if possible, a little louder, so that all may hear? Go to work with a determination to win as many souls for Jesus as is possible. Exert yourselves a little more in the good cause. Work a little more earnestly. Preach the word with power. Prove yourselves faithful ministers of Christ, and your reward will be great. Finally, brethren and sisters, let us fight the battle of the Lord together; work faithfully; be on our guard always; live up to our christain duty while here on earth; and the time will come, when we will be gathered home to praise him who made us free, and to him we will ascribe all honor and glory. Amen.

Waiting for the Train.

We viewed the crowd standing on the platform, waiting for the train, how eagerly each one is waiting and watching to hear the sound of the whistle, especially if there is a shower of rain approaching, thinking, when in the cars they are safe at least from the rain. But how true the remark of brother Wise who was standing at my side on the platform waiting for the train at Smithville Station, "What a blessing it would be if all were prepared and ready, and so eagerly waiting and watching for the train to carry us across the river of death." But alas! how few desire the approaching of the train. It is quite agreeable to nature to wish that that aproach of the train might be detained as long as possible. But how much better for us if we were all prepared with the necessary equipments for the journey, and had a good title to an inheritance in the kingdom of glory. The journey to our late Annual Meeting was one of more than common interest, taking all things into consideration, the advantages, privileges, and kindness, we received of kind friends, and most of all, the blessing of our kind Father in heaven. There was not any thing that I desired which was denied me in all the time I was absent from home, which was nearly four weeks, I felt sorry to part with brother Samuel Longanecker and family, but I tried to submit to that as best I could; I tried to console myself with the hope that the time will come, and perhaps before long, when the parting kiss will not be needed, but we will even remain together in that Holy City. And what an unspeakable joy, to meet all those dear brethren and sisters that were assembled in that large tent, and especially those dear faces we were so familiarly acquainted with. At our first starting point in Cumberland county, there was word sent a head of us by our dear sister Sarah Lamose to friend Samuel and sister Brenizen who are living near the place where the Annual Meeting was held, to provide a lodging for us and see that we were well taken care of; of which I can truly say we received not only in a full measure, but also pressed down and running over. If a cup of cold water shall not lose its reward, I hope that friend and sister Brenizen will receive a double portion for their kindness.

The thought occurs, how happy if our guardian angels who are always beholding our Father's face which is in heaven, and who are continually going and coming from his presence, would have the right to carry the news ahead that we are coming on the train, across the chilly waters of death; and then to find a place prepared for us among the redeemed in the city of the living God the new Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, the general assembly and church of the first born which are written in heaven. Oh, our Annual assembly of the church here on earth, what a sweet foretaste of the general assembly written in heaven! I really do feel sad when I think of the many attempts the adversary is making to control our liberty of attaining them. We hope it will never come to that. Some say they are getting too expensive there must be something done. Now if it was any of my business I think I could propose a plan that would at least be one third less expensive. No doubt the raising of such a large tent and the muslin to cover it amounts to a considerable sum. Would it not be best if each district would give a little towards buying canvas sufficient to make a large tent and stakes to stake it down, like they have at these large shows? This could be kept for a number of years, and could be shiped from place to place; and then if a shower of rain would come there would be no need to sit under a shower of sprinkling through a thin muslin canvasing.

Notes of Travel.

Dear Editor of the C. F. C:—By the request of many others, I will give you a short sketch of a vist of love, which brother S. C. Stump and the writer made. On the first of May, we started from home with my horse and buggy, went to the house of brother W. H. Sawyers, Brown county, Kansas. He is a young speaker in the first degree. Here we had meeting in the evening. Next day to Osawkee, Jefferson county, to Elder Christian Hollers. Meeting that night. Next day to Douglas county, to the house of brother Abram Flory. He is very feeble. Next morning we visited Elder John Bower, of Washington Creek church; met with the brethren in church council in the afternoon. Here one brother was restored again. Meeting in the evening at the same place. Next day, Sunday, 5th of May, met at Willow Spring school-house for public worship: one added by baptism. In the afternoon preaching at the same house. Monday met with the brethren in council, at the house of Elder Daniel Barnhard, Franklin county, Kansas. This was the State Council for Kansas and Nebraska. There we formed brotherly acquaintance with many of the members of Kansas, and enjoyed a pleasant meeting with them. Here a member of some single immersionist order, joined in with the church, and was baptized. Meeting in the evening at different school-houses. Thence we pressed our journey westward, where the Macadonian call is frequently repeated, "Come and help us." We got to Lyon county, Jacob Buck is the preacher of this district. We had meeting at night. The 9th to Marion county. Here we met with much disappointment. On account of rain and high water, we could not meet with the few members in this place. Brother Stump got across Muddy Creek on two trees, leaning together with top, and so visited a few of the Holloway families. Here is a nice country and lands cheap. Timber not so scarce as in other places where members are; but no pine timber in the county. Thence to Abilene, Dickinson county. Rain again, but a few out for meeting. On the 11th, meeting in the evening. 12th at brother Humberger's school-house; one added by baptism. In the afternoon met in council at the house of James Dehaven. Advanced J. Humberger to the second degree of office. Preaching again in the evening. On the 13th, started for Jewel county. Met on the 14th, at the house of friend John Chitty, near brother Zentry's. We also met brother Ives at this place, and had meeting that night. On the 15th, met at brother Allen Ives' house, on White Rock Creek; had preaching that evening. 16th, up Walnut Creek; met at the house of friend Hollenbeck; preaching at 2 P. M., and at brother Ives at night. 17th up to the forks of White Rock, to a place called Salem; had meeting at 11 A. M., here, brother Stump stayed for night meeting. At this place we also had meeting Saturday evening and Sunday forenoon; good turn-out for that country; also have good prospects for a large church, by faithful labor. Thence we made our way to Republican county, to the house of brother Richard Miller; had meeting that night in a school-house close by; here the Brethren did not get the letter of information, and hence, no appointments made, so next morning the 21st, the Brethren saw best, to divide our labors, to have the people supplied with meeting. Brother Ives then being with us, we then had three meetings that night, namely one at brother Wm. Lorgenbeel's house, at Cuby school-house, and at the house of brother Robert Edwards. At this place brother Stump baptized eight. Next morning we met again for worship, at the Cuby school-house at 4 P. M. One more added to the little flock, by baptism. The 23d had council meeting and organization. This body comprising Republican, Cloud, Mitchel, Jewel, and Washington counties are all in one district, and have but the one speaker in all that territory that we are aware of. We were informed by some, that there is a brother by the name of J. Switzer near White Rock City, Republican county, Kan., who they think is in the ministry. We hope if so, he will not hide the talent. In the evening of the third meeting again. 24th, two meetings. 25th, two meetings. Sunday the 26th, three meetings; and 8 souls more were added by baptism. Here our labors ended. The above named were nearly all members of the Methodist and Baptist denominations. A number more manifested a desire to come to the church if they could have meeting regular. We would advise traveling ministers, to make their way to such places. It is earnestly desired by the members of the above named county, that some able preachers would move in amongst them; and I cannot see any cause, why they should not be supplied, in each county. The country is nice and good enough for any man to make a comfortable home and living. Lands cheap and also homesteads to be had yet. Now come Brethren, you, who are in the ministry, and can be easily spared where you are, consider other's wellfare. Do not be afraid any longer to go to Kansas or Nebraska; the Indian will not hurt you. We have to travel about 700 miles in our last trip, and saw no Indians and only cost us $9 25 for all expense. We were welcomed, and felt at home through the trip; and the good Lord cared for us, and to him only we give praise for the same. Came home the 29th found all well, thank the Lord. Written in behalf of the Brethren.

I give the following addresses for the benefit of those who may wish to travel that way.

John Humbarger, Abilene, Dickinson Co., Kansas; Michael Forney, Abilene, Dickinson county, Kansas; Benjamin Horner, Abilene, Dickinson county, Kansas; Allen Ives, Burr Oak, Jewell county, Kansas; Richard Miller, Haddan, Washington county, Kansas; Nathan Miller, Cuby, Republican county Kansas; Wm. Luzenbeel, Prairie Plains, Republican county Kansas; R. Edwards, Clyde, Cloud county, Kansas.

There are now twenty organized churches in the State, with several additional bodies of members who will require organization before very long. At our last District Meeting the State was divided into two State Districts, making the Missouri river the dividing line, which gives the Northern District of Missouri eight churches with four elders, and the Southern District twelve churches with five resident elders and one more soon to move in.

The Brethren of the Southern District of Missouri also decided that hereafter their District Meeting will be held on the third Friday and Saturday before Pentecost, each year. We also hereby make known that the Mineral Creek church will hold a Communion Meeting on the 14th of September next, and extend the usual invitation to the churches, and hope that any brethren in the East contemplating a trip to the West will make arrangements to be with us at said time, and especially do we desire that brethren seeking a home in the West, come and see this country, as we think this country will commend itself to such. Any one desiring further information concerning prospects here will address as below.

S. S. MOHLER.

Cornelia, Johnson Co., Mo.

H. R. Holsinger—DEAR SIR: I have been taking the C. F. C. since the latter part of March, and I believe it to be the best paper I ever had the privilege of reading. When I have a leisure hour I interest myself by reading the COMPANION. I have gained more light on certain passages of scripture from the COMPANION than I ever did from hearing the word of God preached by any other denomination. I have not had the privilege of hearing the German Baptist's preach since I was a small boy. The ordinance of feet-washing, the Lord's Supper and the holy communion has been made very plain to me by the COMPANION. It has unraveled mysteries to me and caused me to read the Word for myself. I am not a member of the brotherhood, from the fact I am not in reach of any of them. If the Lord spares my life I expect to move my family to Perry Co., Ohio, then I will be within 8 or 10 miles of a congregation.

Respectfully yours,

S. W. WHITE.

Dear Brother Holsinger.—The COMPANION still comes to hand, full of good counsel and encouraging thoughts; so I thought I would try to write a few lines to my dear sisters in the Lord, who read it, to encourage them to faithfulness and prayer, fullness while passing through this world toward that better land beyond this vale of tears. We have had some very good communion meetings together of late. We have been encouraged very much indeed, by our dear old brethren's preaching, to live more faithful. And now dear sisters, let us not pray to the Father of mercies—pray for ourselves, for one another, and for our children, and our neighbors and their children. Here come to mind the beautiful lines of the poet:

"Prayer makes the darkened cloud withdraw, Prayer climbs the ladder Jacob saw."

Dear sisters, now is our redemtion nearer than when we first believed. We should be earnestly engaged in the work of the Lord, so that when we have to leave this world, we may not be found without a wedding garment on, and be found with the foolish virgins we read of in the blessed book.

"Pray, sisters, pray, we are on our journey home.

A few more days of sorrow here, and the Lord will call us home. To walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem.

Inquiry.

Dear Brethren Editors of C. F. C: Please make the inquiry through your paper, whether there are any Brethren (organized church) in Henry Co., Missouri. If so, where? And who are its ministers? If no church there, please and inform your sister where the nearest church thereto can be found, as it is important for me to know.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Blue River branch, Whitley county, Ind.; May 17th, of Diptheria, IVA P. ZUMBRUN; aged 4 years 1 month and 26 days. Funeral services by the writer.

In the same branch and family, and of the same disease, June 15th, SARAH A. ZUMBRUN; aged 2 years 6 months and 19 days. Funeral services by brother David Crider.

In the same branch, May 29th, brother BENJAMIN SKEELS; aged 48 years 2 months and 6 days. Disease, cramp colic. Funeral services by Jeremiah Gump and the writer. Joseph Zeigler.

In the Eagle Creek church Hancock county, Ohio, June 10th our beloved sister AMANDA KRABILL, wife of brother John Krabill and daughter of brother Simon and sister Isabella Rodabaugh, aged 20 years 2 months and 3 days. Of the subject of this notice we can say, she lived her whole life in the fear of God. She was baptized when just emerging from infancy—just a little over ten years old when she was led into the liquid stream, and was immersed. She lived a devoted christian, was a kind wife, and was beloved by all that knew her. During her sickness she expressed a desire to depart, and said she was "going home to the new Jerusalem." She leaves a babe two weeks old, and a kind husband, parents, brothers and sisters to mourn her daparture. Her remains were buried in the Brethren's grave yard at the church. Funeral discourse by brother Levi Dickey and others, from Revelation 22: 14.

T. J. Bosserman

In the Chippewa congregation, Wayne county, Ohio, May 29th, sister SUSAN COFFMAN, aged 48 years 6 months and 27 days. The deceased leaves seven children, the youngest of whom is seven years old. She was ill only 28 hours: sickness cholera morbus. Funeral occasion improved to a large congaegation of people from Matt. 24: 43. E. L. Yoder.

(Visitor please copy.)

In the Mohecan church, Wayne county, Ohio, May 10th, sister SARAH, wife of brother H. S. Jacobs, aged 29 years 7 months and 13 days. The deceased was confined to her bed with consumption nearly five months before she died, during which time she bore her affliction with christian patience. Some time before she died, she called for the Elders of the church and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord; she then called her friends to her bed side and bade them all farewell, telling them to meet her in heaven. She expressed an earnest desire for her unconverted brothers and sisters, telling them to make a start for heaven, that they should keep the strait road, that she had tried hard to keep it, and now she was almost to glory. Thus an other one has crossed the river; but while we mourn her great loss to us, we are glad to know that she has gone to meet her Savior on that shore where sickness and death never come, and may God help us to meet her there. She leaves a sorrowing husband and three little children to mourn her departure. Funeral services by brethren P. J. Brown and Geo. Flack.

H. S. Jacobs.

In the Smith Fork Church, Clinton county, Missouri, on the morning of the 4th of June, brother BATEN FITZGEARLS, in the 33d year of his age. Our brother though in the prime of manhood and vigor of life, was called upon to pay the debt we all have to, sooner or later. He came to his death by accident, starting after his horses on the 12th. It was ascertained about noon that he was thrown from his horse, after laying 10 hours. He was found still alive but unconcious. Four doctors were called to his assistance, but all in vain. He never spoke a word again. Forty-one hours from the time he was hurt, when the sun was just looming up the eastern horizon, calmly did his spirit depart, leaving us nothing but the cold form, which we took and laid away in the vault, till the trump shall sound, and the dead in Christ shall come forth. Brother Fitzgeralds leaves a wife with five small children to mourn their loss. In his death she has lost a faithful husband, the church a worthy member and neighborhood a good citizen. His remains were taken to the Brethren's burrying ground near Plattsburg. Funeral services by the writer and others, from Rev., 14: 13, to a large concourse of people who came to mourn with those who mourn; and weep with those that weep.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed; if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

All who wish particular information, and a large map showing correctly the Great West, and all its railroad connections, can obtain them and any other knowledge, by addressing General Passenger Agent, B. & Mo. R. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion, Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Answer to Query.

In COMPANION, No 24, Vol. 8, brother D. S. Dannel expresses a desire that some brother give his views on Rom. 8: 30; and 9: 15—18. I suppose the brother would like to have an explanation on predestination, as some from reading these passages, come to the conclusion that God has, unconditionally, foreordained some to eternal life, and some to everlasting destruction; but this is not the case, for such a construction of those passages would conflict with many other passages of scripture, such as: "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Ezek. 33: 11. and, "Who will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth." Tim, 11; 4. "And, whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. 22, 17.

Now the 30th verse of Rom. 8 is easily explained to harmonize with the passages quoted above, if we read the 29th verse in connection with it, which commences thus: "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate." Now God foreknew, from eternity, who would comply with the conditions of salvation, and those he predestined or elected to be conformed to the image of his son &c. see also 1 Peter 1: 2. God foreknowing that many would not except of the terms of salvation, is not unconditionally condemning them to eternal destruction, but those who will be condemned will be condemned on account of their rejection of the terms. Christ foreknew that many would walk on the broad road that leadeth to destruction; but this is not saying that it was impossible for them to walk on the narrow way that leadeth to life, it is their own choice.

The passages in Rom. 9: 15—18, as well as the whole chapter, refer to the rejection of Israel and the accepting of the Gentiles. If we read the latter part of the same and the first part of the 10th chapter, we can see plainly why God did reject the Israelites. It was because they sought the law of righteousness, not by faith, but by the works of the Law. For they stumbled at the stumbling stone, that is: They rejected Christ. They were ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish their own righteousness, and have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God. This was the cause of their rejection, they had all been invited. "He came unto his own and his own received him not, but as many as received to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe in his name." John 1: 11, 12.

'O Jerusalem, Jerusalem—how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Do these passages sound like an unconditional foreordination to destruction? I think not, I think they indicate that we have a Savior that is willing to save all that come unto him and are willing to serve God in his own appointed ways.

I have submitted the above, which brother Mc Dannel and all others whom it may concern, may receive for what it is worth. I hope others who are more capable will give their views on those passages.

Answer to Brother J. S. Neher.

Dear Brother:—I do not know that your query is quite a fair one, since we do not read how often we shall change. And any how since you are older than I am, I should needs learn of you. And had I known that you knew the Brethren had practiced feet-washing longer than I have, I should have been reluctant in answering your query in the first place. But now have I spoken once, twice will I speak; and only twice, since I can assure you that I have no desire to enter into any controversy with you or any one else about the mode of feet-washing. I do not know which mode you advocate, the single or the double, neither do I rightly understand what is your object in asking explanation. As for mysælf, I am not radical on either side, but see that the single mode is best supported by Scripture. As regards washing one anothers feet, I will try to explain. The word another is composed of an and other. and is equivalant to one other,and one another,limits the word to two persons. And hence one should wash one other's feet, and when that is done, he may wash one other's feet, and anothers, and if he wishes he may wash another's and change when he pleases, since the commandment does not limit the number. But then the wiping certainly belongs to the one that washes, since it is reasonable that if I make your feet wet, they are in an improper condition, then it is my part to wipe them dry again. Or do you suppose when I stoop down, telling you your fault, and wash your feet, my brother should come after me with his towel wiping your feet, and forgive you your fault; Would that be reasonable?

But the German translation is rendered unter einander die fuesze waschen. Now if the German translation is correct the English must be incorrect, and should read, ye also ought to wash among one another. And here is the point where most of the German brethren try to get ground for the double mode: but if you takeyour Greek Testament you will find that the preposition unter is not there, and the German version should read, so solt ihr auch einander die fuesze waschen. The passage, ye also ought to wash one another's feet, in Greek, reads, kai umeis opheilete allelon, and the German einander meaning ein, one, and ander other; plural andre, others, besides this, nouns pronouns in German as in Greek are mostly limited in number by the articles preceding them. Now if you refer to Heb. 10: 25, you will see that the word one another is italicised. Then, if you take a Greek Testament and refer to the same place, you will find that the word allelon which answers to one another, does not at all appear in that verse. But the translator seeing it would not make good sense without that word, supplied it in Italics, showing that it was not in the original. But in conclusion I will yet refer you to several passages in which the word one another appears in the original Greek. "But by love serve one another." Gal. 5. 13. "But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another." 15, Let us not be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another." 26. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." 6. 2. In these passages there is no limitation of change, we may change often, we may bear one another's burdens, and change as often as we please. Yours in love.

A Voice from the Grave.

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF AMANDA J. SHOEMAKER WHO DEPARTED THIS LIFE MAY 28TH, 1872.

Dear reader of the COMPANION, I will now tell you the sad story of our much beloved sister. The pale faced messenger has again visited that pleasant home, where scarce three months ago we stood around the bed of a dying saint. But now Amanda, she too is gone; there is the vacant chair. The familiar voice is gone, and the smiling face is inanimate and insensible; things have a new language, and when we look upon them, tears dim the eye, for they speak of those whom we shall never see in this world again. A thousand little things have grown great through a new aspect; and things trivial in themselves, a book, a picture, a lock of hair, have acquired a value which outweighs all the wealth of the world. Why do we hold them so sacred? They speak to us of the ways of life. With them this life story is ended. 'Tis the old, story, they are gone! the old old story, ever old, and ever new. "Man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the street." Those types of perishing mortality—those precious leaves have fallen. What sad music they make. But what of them? They have gone where winter never comes, nor sorrow, nor death; but in places of sad faces they now wear crowns of glory. Sister Amanda's life was brief. But she lived not in vain. She always gloried in the cross of Christ. How pleasant it was to talk with her about heaven, the habitation of the saints, and the abode of the just made perfect. But when we contemplate over her life, she lives in our memories as she never lived before. Oh! when we meet in the friendly community where we used to meet her, then we miss her gentle voice. But she has gone to join the angelic host, to begin to celebrate the marriage feast of the Lamb.

Me thinks when we get up yonder we will find her serving at the marriage feast. Oh! what a meeting of the spirits of the just made perfect. When we look around us the evening of this world is fast coming to all of us, and are we all ready, as was sister Amanda, that we can say, "Come, welcome death, I dread not the tomb, since my Savior has laid there I dread not its gloom?" For a few days before she died she was much rejoiced to think of the hour of her dissolution. She would call to her bedside her brothers and sisters and tell them of the goodness of God to her, and that she soon expected to join those who had gone before. But dear reader, dost thou contemplate the just dealings of God towards the children of men? How often he sends the messenger on the pale horse to call those whom we love most to himself, that they may draw our minds and affections from things of time, and give us a twofold treasure in heaven. It has been so with your unworthy writer. God in his providence has a second time visited our little circle and snatched the last little lamb from our midst that was dear to us as our own flesh—Our little son, Perry by name, (for it is now the dearest name I know on earth, and draws my mind to heaven at its first impulse). Here I will let my thoughts run for a little. It is my little angel I would speak of now. Jesus came to his cradle, beckoned to the little spirit to come away: You know it is hard to give up such a dear little treasure. But my companion and I saw we must be submissive to the will of the Lord. It gives sorrow of heart, at such times to say, "the will of the Lord be done, for he rules among the angels in heaven and amongst the children of men." Since the dear little spirit has gone to the realms of the blessed, how I have longed to have a look into the Holy City, the habitation of saints. Methinks I would know my two little angels. How I would like to call them by name, and see their little faces again. I am sure I would know them again. But God calls those tender lambs so that our thoughts may be continually in heaven, therefore let us profit by these things.

Prayer and Blessing.

When the sun rises, there is light. Why, I do not know. There might have been light without the sun, and there might have been sun that gave no light, but God has been pleased to put these two things together—sunrise and light. So, whenever there is prayer there is blessing. I do not know why. There might have been prayer without a blessing, for there is in the world of wrath; and there might have been a blessing without prayer, for it often is sent to some who sought it not. But God has been pleased to make this a rule.

For the Companion.

God.

The fool says in his heart, there is no God; yet he believes it, for the way is so plain that the way-faring though a fool shall not err therein.

An atheist denies the being of a God; which is worse than the faith of devils; because they believe and tremble. An Infidel disbelieves and denies the scriptures and Christianity; and he that provideth not for his own house, has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.

A deist believes in one God, and a divine providence, but rejects revelation; and because he rejects knowledge, the Lord will reject him.

A heretic is one who departs from the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and such a one is to be rejected after the first and second admonition.

It is night now, and here is home. Gathered under the quiet roof, elders, and children lie alike at rest. In the midst of a great peace and calm, the stars look out from the heavens. The silence is peopled with the past; sorrowful remorses for sins and shortcomings, memories of passionate joys and griefs rise out of their graves, both now alike calm and sad. Eyes, as I shut mine, look at me, that have long ceased to shine. The town and fair landscape sleep under the starlight, wreathed in the Autumn mist. Twinkling among the houses, a light keeps watch, here and there, in what may be a sick chamber or two. The clock tolls sweetly in the silent air. Here is night and rest. An awful sense of thanks makes the heart swell, and the head bow, as I pass to my room through the sleeping house, and feel as though a hushed blessing were upon it.—Thackeray.

The Borders of the Brethren.

All along the Alleghany,
Into Jersey eastwardly,
From the north of Pennsylvania,
To the south of Tennessee;
And o'er all the Western prairie
Wheresoe'er the Brethren dwell,
Heavy laden souls, and weary,
For the word are calling still.

Macadonian calls, in number,
Through Companion pages come,
For the Spirit does not slumber,
That would call its subjects home.
Bring us bread and living water,
Nourishment for hungry souls;
Is the voice of Zion's daughter,
And of Him who her controls.

There are sheep without a shepherd,
And the wolves are prowling there,
They are calling loud for pastors,
Who will take the flocks in care.
Scattered sheep, and yet productive,
Like good seed o'er country wide,
Will increase, and be promotive,
And, in numbers multiplied.

Brethren live in Carolina,
In the old Palmetto state,
In the "Tar state," grown with pines, aye,
And in Georgia too of late.
Brethren dwell in Minnesota,
Iowa and Michigan,
And they soon will reach Dakota,
From the land of Susquehann'.

Thence beyond the Colorado,
To the calm Pacific flood,
In the land of El Dorado,
Brethren preach the word of God.
There, a field for gospel preaching,
North and South is opening wide;
Where men human creeds are teaching,
And the gospel set aside.

Cries for bread end living water,
Sounded long from Oregon;
For the sons of Zion's daughter,
To be fed and nourished on.
But they seemed awhile neglected,
Waiting for the latter rain—
Now a voice came unexpected
From the sounding woods of Maine.

East and West are calls and queries,
More abundantly of late,
In the order, in the series,
Also from the "Granite state."
From the queen's "Dominion," northward,
Where some River Brethren dwell,
Came important questions forth, for
The COMPANION's page to swell.

Soon the gospel, by the Brethren,
Will be preached in all the states,
In the Eastern, in the Southern,
Where the welcome message waits:
And the nations will be learning
To obey the Savior's word,
From their human creeds be turning
To the precepts of the Lord.

Watchmen on the walls of Zion,
Does salvation's morning dawn?
Hungry souls for bread are crying
Where the darkness has withdrawn.
See the light effulgent, beaming,
Into darkness freely shine,
Where the morning light is streaming
Bright with glory all divine.

Go ye heralds of salvation,
And proclaim the rising day.
Preach the word to every nation,
Christ the true and only way.
Call to sinners, Satan serving.
To believe, be born again,
Lest they reap what they're deserving,
Endless woe, remorse and pain.

What Shall I do to be Saved?

O! what shall I do to be saved
From the sorrows that burden my soul?
Like the waves in the storm,
When the winds are at war,
Chilling floods of distress o'er me roll
What shall I do? What shall I do?
Oh! what shall I do to be saved?

Oh! what shall I do to be saved,
When the pleasures of youth are all fled?
And the friends I have loved,
From the earth are removed,
And I weep o'er the graves of the dead.
What shall I do? What shall I do?
Oh! what shall I do to be saved?

Oh! what shall I do to be saved,
When sickness my strength shall subdue?
Or the world in a day,
Like a cloud roll away,
Bnd eternity open to view?
What shall I do? What shall I do?
O! what shall I do to be saved?

Oh! Lord, look in mercy on me,
Come, O come and speak peace to my soul;
Unto whom shall I flee,
Dearest Lord, but to thee?
Thou canst make my poor broken heart whole.
That will I do! That will I do!
To Jesus I'll go and be saved.

For the Companion.

A Mother's Love.

The love of a mother for her children, is next to the love of Christ for the fallen sons and daughters of Adam. She loves and cherishes, yes, admonishes her children, and prays for them when they are thousands of miles away; and oh, when these thoughts come home to the erring son, in a far country, it stings his very heart to think of his mother's love! I will cite an instance from our neighborhood, of a young man from England. He said, "I traveled through thirty-four states in the Union; I came from England, I worked in the silver mines of the far west," &c., &c., all in all he seems to be a hard character, he drinks, and spends his money almost as fast as he earns it. But one Sunday a few weeks ago, he sat at an upper window, and sang such mournful songs, which gave occasion to ask him if he, too, does not feel that he should begin a better life. He answered, "I have a mother living in England, and since I am from home, I wrote to her frequently, and she seemed troubled about me, and admonished me often. At last I did not answer any more, and she probably thinks I have died; but when these things come to mind, it makes me feel something of my mother's love and admonitions, and of a necessity to repent, and begin a better life." "But," said he, "when I come into bad company, these things all pass away again." Oh! is it not a pity for such a young man? Yet it seems to me, if I could speak to that mother, I would tell her, pray on; yes, "pray without ceasing;" for your erring son, is not dead yet to love, and the remaining spark may be kindled, and the fire of love burn and destroy a multitude of sins. Oh, pray on; he is not dead yet, but living, and some hopes are left to reclaim him before it is forever too late. I would also say to the fathers and mothers of Israel, if your children yet live in sin and in the pride of this world, pray for them often, and doubt not, for the prayer of the righteous availeth much, and the ear of the Lord is open to our prayers.

Editorial Correspondence.

We left Cedar Rapids at 2 P. M. At Palo we were transferred to wagons and conveyed across the country about seven miles, to Shellsburg, where, after walking across swamps and floating bridges, we again took cars. The baggage wagons did not arrive for about two hours after. Thus the passage of five miles by rail road, required four hours by wagon.

Arrived at Waterloo soon after nine in the evening, very much fatigued. Were met at the station by Dr. G. G. Beachly, who kindly entertained us for the night. Next morning made the acquaintance of the family. Among the members, at present, is Mr. Geo. Moyer, formerly one of the editors of the Herald of the Coming Kingdom, and a Christadelphian minister.

Sunday morning, brother John Beachly took us to the meeting-house, where the evening before the brethren and sisters had enjoyed a communion season, and for which we came too late. This is the house at which the Annual Meeting was held in 1870. It is very large, and on this day it was well filled, with many outside. Brother Samuel Garver preached, and we tried to follow, but were so hoarse that we could not handle so large a congregation. There were a number of ministers present, but we could not get all their names, hence we omit all. The meeting was interesting, and we trust edifying.

After the meeting we had a fine time of hand-shaking with old friends and acquaintances. Among them was our Aunt Elizabeth Brown, and her husband.

Thence to brother Joseph Saylor's, where we spent a pleasant afternoon and evening. Brother (Dr.) Daniel Spicher, who had been elected to the ministry on the previous day, was in our company.

Monday, 17. A number of friends met us at the house of brother Saylor. The entire company took supper at brother Lewis Berkley's. It was a day long to be remembered. Such a company we will not have soon again. We lodged with brother Berkley's.

Tuesday afternoon brother B. took us to Waterloo where we took the cars in company with Elder E. K. Buechley for Linn county. After traveling by rail road, canoe, and wagon, arrived at brother David Watters, near Derry Creek, about nine o'clock in the evening, and were made welcome for the night.

Wednesday. Brother Watters took us to the meeting-house, where the Love-feast was appointed, to commence at ten A. M. Found the brethren already assembled, in a goodly number. The congregation is under the charge of Elders Jacob Watters and Abraham Stamy. Brethren Jacob Browder, Jacob Murray, C. P. L. Roberts, John C. Miller, and other ministers, besides our company, were in attendance. The meeting was interesting, and we trust edifying. In the afternoon two persons were immersed. We lodged with friend John W. Bonebrake, son-in-law to Elder Stamy. Mr. Bonebrake has the most comfortable home we have seen in the West, having beautiful running water. Hope the family will not neglect to secure a clear title to a home in the beautiful world above.

Thursday. Meeting in the forenoon. In the afternoon went home with brother Daniel Holsinger's, who moved from Franklin county, Pa., to this county last Spring. Nowhere were we more cordially received than by them, and we were made to feel at home. They moved from an old, thickly settled neighborhood into this new country, and are very happy to have friends come to see them. They live five miles east of Cedar Rapids, and within a few miles of Marion, the county seat of Linn county, Iowa.

Friday. This day was mostly spent in company with kind friends. Took supper at brother Thos. G. Snyder's. Preached at the Sand Hill school-house in the evening, to a full house. Lodged at brother Abraham Stamy's, now intermarried with sister Rachael Creger. Here we met a brother and a sister who are deaf and dumb. The family is pleasantly situated and are much concerned for the comfort of their guests.

Next morning we were taken into the carriage with brother Henry Goughenour, wife and daughter, for Waterloo. Called upon brother Thos. Harrison's, whom we found well. Had a very pleasant drive. Took dinner under an elm tree by the way, near Marysville, a meal long to be remembered. Supped with a Mr. Clark, near Enterprise.

Preached at a school-house, at Spring Creek, in the evening, to the smallest congregation we have met in the West. Nevertheless we had a few attentive hearers. Lodged with brother Daniel Deeter's, who lives somewhat isolated from the brotherhood.

Sunday, 21. We set out early in the morning for Waterloo meeting-house, twenty-one miles distant, which we reached in time for forenoon meeting. Found the house well filled, and the meeting opened, so we were set to work in a few moments from the time we entered the house. We felt interested if the congregation did not. Dined at brother Wm. Miller's. In the afternoon we immersed two young persons, in the Black Hawk creek, a most beautiful place for the occasion. Lodged at brother Henry Goughenour's, and made the acquaintance of the family, and of some of the neighbors, and enjoyed a refreshing season of rest; and here too our report may rest.

H. R. H.

Monday, June 24.—Received several interesting letters from home. With what eagerness we did peruse them, and what delight it did afford us to learn that all was well at home. But all was not good news, for in one of them was the sad intelligence of the death of our dear brother John D. Brumbaugh, husband of our sister Hannah. It is hard to believe that we shall see brother John no more. We shrink from the thought of visiting sister Hannah and not to meet brother John ; only herself and six fatherless little children ! How we shall miss his warm, christian salutation, for we did love each other in the Lord. But, although we sorrow for him, we do not mourn for him as those who have no hope, for we have a good, bright hope, that he has gone to the inheritance of the just, for he was a good man. May we all, like he, follow the teachings of our Savior, that we, too may have a good hope for one another and for ourselves.

After a pleasant ride to town and back with brother Goughenour we dined at brother E. K. Buechly's, in company with many friends. In the afternoon we had a fishing party. Caught nearly as many fish as there were persons. Some of them very fine ones. Lodged at brother Buechly's.

Tuesday, 25.—Three wagon loads of our friends went to visit Cedar Falls and the Soldiers' Orphans' School. Cedar Falls is a promising town on the Cedar river, seven miles above Waterloo. The Orphans' School is situated about a mile south of town. It is a four story brick building, and affords comfortable accommodations for over 300 orphans, and teachers, and attendants. The institution is in excellent order ; all the apartments being clean and tidy. Two hundred and seventy-three children, from the ages of six to sixteen, were in attendance. Out of the number only one was sick. We visited her and dropped a word of consolation. This was the last day before vacation, and many of the children were preparing for a visit to their homes. We regard Mr. Tucker, the principal, as an excellent man for the place. He at the same time commands obedience and respect. The state deserves much praise for establishing such institutions for the education and support of those whose supporters sacrificed their lives in defense of the country. Dined at Mr. Fisher's, who resides by the way, and has a hospitable heart, and a provident help-mate.

Toward evening brother H. C. Goughenour took us to uncle John Brown's, mother's sister Elizabeth. Spent a pleasant evening. Found all the living family reasonably well, but mourning the death of one of the members, whose obituary appeared in these columns some weeks ago.

Wednesday, 26.—Returned with brother Goughenour, and on the way called at the house of brother Henry Snyder, but the brother being out in the cornfield we would not have him called from his work, and made our visit short. In the afternoon brother G. took us to brother Michael Raber's where we lodged for the night. Three more of the family belong to the family of God than upon our former visit. May they all grow in grace.

Thursday, 27.—Brother Raber took us to brother C. P. L. Robert's, familiarly called Charlie. Dined with them. We had frequently stopped with this family in Pennsylvania. The sister is not yet fully reconciled to the West. Hope she may become so, for we think her husband is just in his element here. But he should get himself a home and settle down. Some women love a home of their own, where they can arrange things to their pleasement. We are acquainted with several such, and they are among the best of women.

In the evening brother John Buechly took us to brother Martin Buechly's, where we lodged. Have a partial promise of brother Martin to accompany us to Minnesota.

Friday, 28.—Brother B. took us to town, and thence brother John Buechly took us to brother David Knepper's, at Crane Creek, where we dined at about 3 o'clock, being delayed on our trip. Spent the evening with brother Daniel Spicher's, where we enjoyed a social meeting. Both these sisters are daughters of brother Buechly.

Saturday, 29.—Had a social dinner at brother Knepper's. Friend Ressler and sister Rosie, his wife, another daughter of brother B., joined our company. In the afternoon we returned with brother B., where we lodged. Received more cheering letters from home. The best of the news was that the Companion was likely to appear more promptly.

Sunday, 30th. Attended meeting and tried to preach at Orange Grove School-house, at Elder Buechly's. Had good attendance and attention. Dined at brother Samuel Cain's, in company with a number of christian friends. In the afternoon participated in an old fashioned singing school, at the school-house, which we enjoyed very much. In the evening we preached at the Fairview School-house, and were left without ministerial assistance. Lodged at brother Samel H. Miller's, son of Bro. Jonas of Dale City, where this report is being written. At the present time we are all together, brother Beachly, little Emma, and ourself, and all in good order. Health slowly improving, and spirits good.

We are anxiously awaiting the appearance of No. 25. Send it and its successors along speedily.

H. R. Holsinger.

Monday, July 1.—Brother Miller took us to the house of brother Jacob Cobaugh. Here we met brother and sister Gochenour, and brother Abraham Good. In the afternoon got up a fishing party, with the usual success: about half a fish to the man. On Wednesday we mean to try again, and then we will report more fully. Spent an hour with brother Jacob Murray's, across the road. Then lodged at brother Cobaugh's.

TUESDAY, 2.—Dined with brother Henry Mc.Cartney's. Here we first saw No. 25 of the COMPANION. It is certainly a good number, and appears in good order. Our assistants are making themselves quite a reputation during our absence, at least in our estimation. "See here" comes very near being a dun. Be careful, brother assisant, you might hit somebody. Then they would be sure to pay up and quit. The paying up part we would admire, but we cannot afford to lose any of our customers. But we must have the money, that you may boldly say, and we can testify.

Took supper with sister Gillin, a widow with an interesting family of children, who honor and respect their mother. In the evening brother Cobaugh took us to friend John Hildebrand's where we lodged. All the families reported in this visit are from Cambria county, Pa., most of whom we had visited in the east. They all received us very kindly.

WEDNESDAY, 3.—This day had set apart for a fishing excursion. Friend Hildebrand accompanied us with his conveyance. We were joined by three other teams, and our company numbered twenty-six persons, and was composed of men, women, and chidren. The literati was represented by two ministers and one doctor. We went up the North Branch of the Black Hawk, a distance of sixty or eight miles. Arriving at the place appointed, hooks, lines, and bate, were placed in order, and we patiently waited for the fish to perform their part of the sport. But it was soon very evident that it was not their sporting day. However, by "patient continuance" we (I) succeded in capturing one fine pickerel, and drawing another on the sand bank but failed in securing it. Our company caught about eighty fish, mostly of good size, sixty being pickerel. The sisters had made provisions for our wants, and we had a comfortable and palatable basket dinner. We had a very pleasant trip and enjoyed it very much. It was a day long to be remembered.

At four o'clock we returned from the fishing ground. Stopped at brother Daniel Wassum's, where we were entertained the closing meal of the day. In the evening we preached at the Hudson School-house. Fair attedance and good attention. Lodged with brother Daniel Watter's.

THURSDAY, 4.—After breakfast, as is our custom, we read the Declaration of Independence. This is one of the indications of our patriotism. Then brother Watters took us to brother Goughenour's where we dined. Thence brother G., took us to brother John Huff's, who are cousins to Dr. Beachly. The grandmother of the family, Sister Buechly, widow of brother Emanuel Buechly, and sister to Elder John Berkley of Penn'a, also resides here. Here we close this report. We are in good order. Expect this morning to start to Grundy county, to attend a lovefeast.

Harvest is rapidly approching. Most of the wheat is in heads. The prospects indicate an abundant crop, and farmers are much encouraged. For the last three years the crops have been rather a failure, owing to the drouth, and farmers have been very much discouraged. If prices will not fall too low now, grain raising will regain some of its lost repute. But we are made to wonder when looking over these vast plains covered with waving grain, where market can be found for it all. In amount it exceeds comprehension. We would suppose that Iowa alone would raise millions of bushels of wheat. Corn also, looks very well, and everything indicates prosperity.

We expect to return home about the first of August or sooner Adieu.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book

The above work is now nearly ready for market. The price will be $1 25, single copy, post paid. We have considerable of our means invested in the work, and should be pleased to sell several thousand copies for cash as early as possible. Will not our friends order them forthwith? First come first served.

Those who order by the dozen will receive one-third off, when sent by express, for cash.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper.

In our travels among the Brethren we have frequent inquiries for the above work, by brother Beer, as proposed to be published, and some are urging it very strongly. We inform all concerned that the work is delayed for want of means. To get the work out in good style, we would require a new font of type, which would cost about $200. Having several other works in press, and our means being very limited, besides having some $1500 in the hands of our patrons, we are often embarrassed in our business transactions. If any of our friends have money they are willing to invest in the work, they can facilitate its early completion, and aid in a good cause. Such can report to our office.

A Word of Advice.

BY ALICE CARY.

My little lad, I will tell to you
What things to do, what not to do,
If you want to grow up fine:
Arise when the day is breaking sweet,
And earn your breakfast before you eat.
And go to your bed at nine.

When you are called to meals, take care
To wash your and comb your hair;
And neither slur nor shirk,
But have your hat upon its peg,
Your stockings straight upon your leg,
And don't make eating work.

Say "Thank you," when you take your bread
Or smile at least, or nod your head,
And for coffee and tea likewise,
Or slice of toast, or Johnny-cake—
In short, for anything you take;
And "be excused" if you rise.

Don't talk and laugh and make rude jokes,
In presence of the older folks,
But speak both little and low;
And don't get angry, and don't swear
At anybody, or anywhere—
No matter where you go!

Whenever you know a thing is right,
Go and do it with main and might,
Nor let one murmur fall,
For duty makes as stern as claim,
As if an angel called your name,
And all men heard the call.

Little Sins.

A merchant of San Francisco, during the infant days of California, having escaped disastrous fires' grew rich and prosperous. He built a fine warehouse, partly upon the solid rock and partly upon piles, as it was convenient to have a portion of his establishment extend over the water of the harbor.

One night a messenger came to him with the intelligence that the whole concern had fallen to the ground and that bales and boxes of merchandise were thrown into the water.

What was the cause? A worm—a mere mite when young, but nearly as large as one's finger when grown and growing most rapidly, and multiplying in almost incredible numbers—had entered the piles. They had completely honeycombed the interior, rendered them incapable of sustaining any weight.

Is not this like little sins? Does not one beget another, and then another, multiplying to an alarming extent? A child does not become utterly faithless to his parents all at once. One small act of disobedience at first has led many step by step in the course of crime, even into the state's prison.

Another begins to deceive in little things. He does not become a notorious liar all at once, but commences by withholding the truth; then prevaricates; then utters small falsehoods; next larger ones, till his moral sense becomes sadly corrupt, if not entirely destroyed.

And thus, like the mite in the timber these little sins eat into the very life of the soul, destroying its soundness, its health, and making it a mass of uncleanliness, "whose end is to be burned." Beware, then, of little sins.

The above incident is also capable of illustrating another important truth. The merchant built his house partly upon rock and partly upon piles, and stored this precious merchandise upon this seemingly secure foundation. But behold the disastrous result! So some souls build their hopes of future happiness, partly upon Christ and partly upon their own supposed good works; but, as these cannot possibly be pure and perfect, they fail in the day of trial, and cause a loss irreparable and never-ending to those who have so foolishly trusted therein.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

"But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon."

Be Kind.

Dear young readers of the COMPANION, I say to you with all sincerity of heart: Be kind to each other. You cannot know how soon the angel death may come unto your midst, and take the dear one to whom you spoke so harshly but a short time ago; and oh! what sorrow, what anguish of spirit, what a lifetime of sadness will be yours as you reflect, conscious stricken, upon that last unkind word spoken in anger to a dear little brother or sister, or perhaps a kind father or mother, upon whom you look for the last time, and who now lies cold and motionless before you in the embrace of death! You had not time, or were not willing; to ask forgiveness; and now it is forever too late! Again I say, be kind to each other.

I love you; I desire to see you happy; I long and pray for your salvation. I hope also that all who read this paper, or hear it read, will also desire and long for eternal life; or, in the words of our Savior, "Hunger and thirst after righteousness." I often imagine that I see an older brother or sister reading aloud to the younger members of the family. This is a lovely sight to see. What is more pleasant to behold than a group of happy children united in love and harmony. It gives joy to the parents hearts, and their friends will all love them; God will be pleased with him, and will favor them with mercy and loving kindness all the days of their lives. May the Lord grant us all his peace while we live, and after death a rest at his right hand in heaven, is the prayer of your young brother,

N. S. DALE.

What is Your Duty?

A sick soldier, whose suffering was so great that he often wished he was dead, being asked: "How are you to escape everlasting pain?" replied, "I am praying to God, and striving to do my duty as well as I can."

"What are you praying for?" I asked.

"For the pardon of my sins."

"But now, if your wife were offering you a cup of tea which she had prepared for you, what would be your duty?"

"To take it from her surely."

"Do you think that God is offering you anything?"

"O, yes, sir; I think he is offering pardon to all, through Jesus Christ."

"What is your duty then?"

"Ah, sir," he said with much feeling, "I ought to accept it."

"And yet you keep asking him for what he offers, instead of taking it at once! But now, tell me what you really require in order to be this moment a pardoned man?"

"I only want faith in Jesus," was his answer."

"Come then at once to Jesus. Receive him as your Savior; and in him you will find all that you need for time and for eternity."

"I HAVE often thought," say Coleridge, "what a melancholy world this would be without children, and what an inhuman world without the aged."

June 22, 1872. }

Brother J. W. B:—According to promise made when last in your sanctum, I will now give you a brief outline of our trip. I am aware that the FAMILY COMPANION has received from its senior editor, in whose company we travel, all the main items of news as relating to the churches, and attended by him and us since we left home.

The main object of our trip west is to have rest from our business labors, and to recuperate lost health. With this object in view, by the urgent solicitations of our kind friends, we left Dale City and all that we held most dear belonging to this world, Thursday morning, 16th of May, accompanied by sister Beer and her two children, a blind lady friend—Miss Phaler, Aunt Sally, and Barbara Beachly, brother Henry, little Emma. At Pittsburgh we parted with sister Beer and Miss Phaler, they going east on a visit to their old homes. We had the pleasure of seeing the blind lady, Miss Phaler, comfortably seated with all the necessary arrangements made for her eastern trip. Poor, blind Kate, to you the outer world is all dark; but the good Lord has blessed you with a cheerful soul. I pray the good Lord, that your visit east to your old home and school mates, may prove pleasant. Miss Kate became blind when eight or nine years old. She is a poor, good girl. I bespeak for her, and all such unfortunates, the good will, sympathy, and aid of our brotherhood and all other right minded people.

Our train west leaving earlier than the one sister Beer wished to take for Kittanning, we could do no more than commit her to the care of the railroad employees. We were sorry to leave her and her two little charges; but she was cheerful, and felt confident that she could get to her journeys end without further aid from us.

This same day, in the evening at eight o'clock, we arrived at Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio, at this place we were taken in charge by brother P. J. Brown.

On the 17th he brought us to his home in Congress. Here, for the first time, we met sister Brown, and become acquainted with her interesting family. Her motherly kindness to our party, who had by this time become dusty and tired, is kindly remembered. At the house of brother Brown we met Grand-father Thomas, from West Virginia, uncle Elias Beachly, from Waterloo, Iowa, and others, who all with us shared the kind hospitality so cheerfully dispensed by the family.

My aunt Eliza Garber, lives at this place. We found her quite sick; but by a late letter from sister Barbara, who remained to assist nursing our widowed aunt, we learn that she is about well again.

On the 18th we were brought to the Garber meeting-house, a large plain building, finished rather better than our meeting-house, was well filled with an interested and intelligent congregation. We also had numerous other strange speakers here, some of which, although extensively known through the brotherhood, were strangers to me.

The next day Sunday 19th, we were brought to the Killbuck meeting-house where brother Henry filled another appointment. Here, too, he addressed the sunday-school which is under the superintendency of brother George Fleck, who is an intelligent and zealous worker in the good cause.

On Monday, the 20th, we were brought to Annual Meeting, a description of which, with its proceedings, has been laid before the readers of C. F. C., long ere this will reach you. As the meeting was national in character, the brotherhood was represented by almost every state in the Union. The arrangements for taking care of the delegates and visitors had to be of a corresponding magnitude.

The tent 220 feet long and and 80 feet wide, would comfortably seat several thousand people; but when subjects of great interest were being discussed every avoidable space for standing or other wise, was taken up. The order and attention was such as you would find in an assembly of christians. The one, waiting on the other. On the platform, erected for the standing committee and officers of the meeting, I noticed many venerable looking heads and faces, mostly old standard bearers, whose kind genial, intelligent countenances, and wise councils all indexed that they had grown old in the service of our divine Master. Amongst the Auditory, were seated, probably, six-hundred preachers, most of them young and middle aged. Many of these have a liberal education, self made and reliant, just the men, in my estimation, to carry forward the good work. It did my soul good to see such a body of young and resolute standard bearers enlisted under King Emanuel. In associating and commingling with these young giants, I felt both my spiritual and physical strength reviving, hope it may continue. I made many acquaintances, and received nothing but kind treatment; and should it please kind providence to spare me until our next Annual Conference, which is to be at or near Dale City, I hope to be able to do something in return.

At the conclusion of the meeting, in company with Elder Daniel Keller and brother Henry we took the cars at Wooster, Ohio, for Salem college, Ind. Here we found our children in good health, busy and glad to see us. Here we made the acquaintance of the faculty, friends and officers of the school. The curriculum of this school is such as is adopted at our best schools in the land. To me, coming from the mountains of Western Pa., where pure, sweet water goes rolicking down every mountain glen; and the mountain breezes are laden with the perfumes of the flora, incident to our section, the location does not appear desirable. The school, however is needed and has my best wishes.

According to plan, previously adopted, our young folks obtained a livery team, with which they gave us and themselves a very pleasant and desirable ride, through some fifty odd miles of the north western part of Ind. On this trip we passed through some fine country; passed several lakes, and crossed several streams and marshes. The roads were mostly heavy, and in some places, positively bad. We passed through the following villages, Warsaw, Oswego, Leesburg, Galveston and others of minor import. This trip occupied us two days. We stayed all night at a love-feast, here we enjoyed ourselves very much. The name of the brother at whose house the feast was held, I have forgotten. Elder Daniel Cripe is the house keeper in the branch. The congregation, though small in number, seems to lack nothing else. Here we had the pleasure to meet our beloved and aged brother Umstead, and made the acquaintance of many others, amongst them, Prof. Miller, formerly Pres., of Salem College, now teaching, I believe a select school at Warsaw. The surroundings at Warsaw are not bad; but I would not like the locality for a school. From Bourbon we went to Chicago, accompanied by our children. Here we remained the guests of Dr. Fahrney's family, of Panacea notoriety. After seeing the sights of the wonderful, and in many respects, new city, spending some time in the burnt district, hunting relics and looking at the effects and results of this wonderful and world-renowned fire, admiring the energy pluck and genius of the Chicagoans in rebuilding their splendid parks, draw-bridges, and tunnels, we also visited the lake shores at different points.

Dear Companion—I again feel for giving you some items from our, Berlin congregation. As announced through your columns, our lovefeast was to come off on Sunday, the 16th of June. Through the arrangement of an unworthy brother, a lay-member, (how bold some brethren are! but perhaps they do not know the rules by which some Christian professors would like to have the church of Christ to be governed. Be this as it may) brother Beer of the COMPANION office was sent for and preached for us here in Roxbury, by some called "The city of destruction." Just to think! it certainly is as uncommon for the brethren to preach in Roxbury, as it was for Peter to visit the Gentiles; but as the Gentiles were made to rejoice to hear the word of God preached, so depend on it, there are people in Roxbury, who listen to all who preach the Gospel in purity and with power. We had a good meeting and we are promised by another able brother to be visited ere long, and we hope for a happy result. On Sunday morning, brother Beer was conveyed to the place of lovefeast, and many were the disappointments that he did not impart the crumbs from the Master's table. But we are getting used to disappointment as we grow older in this life. Our anticipations are seldom realized, but hope they will be more so in our Father's house at that great meeting of the saints. Brethren Henry Meyers and C. G. Lint spoke to us from the words of Paul, Rom. 1; 16. As far as we were concerned, the inner man was strengthened well, we were made to feel that our foundation was a good one. We admire such preaching, particularly that based on the first line of the text. I believe it is worth a dozen Adam and Eve sermons, such as we are compelled to listen to so often, on such occasions. Brethren, go on in the good work, methinks, I can hear the apostle Paul say, Brethren preach some more such sermons, do your whole duty, show to the world that you are not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I say again, we cannot help but praise such brethren, who care not for their popularity in this world, only so they do their duty toward Jesus and his cause. Toward noon, a heavy shower of rain fell, to the refreshment of the vegetable kingdom, while the subject of God's kingdom were refreshed by the crumbs from the Master's table. The evening exercises came, all in good order, except the bretbren from a distance seemed to be ashamed or afraid to speak of the good cause. Brethren, you, who came from a great distance, and were so unwilling to put your shoulder to the Gospel wheel, we certainly cannot praise you. In looking along the long line of brethren, who call themselves ministers, I noticed some who seem bold enough to speak before kings and presidents. Brethren why is it that you do not make yourselves more useful in the call which it is said you have from God? If your call is from God, then speak of Christ and his cause whenever an opportunity affords itself; of course if your call is only from the church, then certainly you should obey her also. I also noticed some young brethren, who might have made themselves useful but would not, they were waiting on their elder brethren. The preaching was good, but as all depended on the few faithful and bold in Christ brethren, while at the same time numbers sat silent without making an effort. We certainly come to think that all cannot be right. I would say yet, in conclusion, brethren labor more faithfully; you all expect a reward and this is only promised according as thy works will be. Our lovefeast is now among the past. I have been requested to give my views on Love-feast which I will do at some future time, "How to have not" and "How to have a good Love-feast," will be the heading. May God guide and direct our every step, so that we may be useful members of Christ's body, and work together in harmony for the furtherance of his church and to the over-throw of Satan's army and power; and when we are done here below, we will be fully rewarded for all our efforts. For Jesus has promised, that where he is, his servants shall be also. Brethren let us remember this and all will be well.

M. HADY.

A Proposition.

Our Savior said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." And in order to do this the church, on which rests the responsibility of carrying out and filling this command, must have means, by which she may send preachers where the Brethren have not yet been heard to preach, and our practice unknown, that Zion may be enlarged and God glorified. This is the only command that other denominations can censure us of not fulfilling; and we think they have some reason for censuring us. I honestly believe, that we, as a church, are too inactive in this matter, too little concerned with regard to the extension of our Savior's eternal and ultimate triumphant kingdom. Now we propose, that we try and make a move in that direction, it certainly is an important step—a heaven-ward stride. And as means are necessary let this be the first step in order. We believe the means are within the church and brotherhood; and we farther believe, that we have a sufficient number of brethren and sisters within the pales of the church, who have the cause of Christ at heart, with so warm a desire for the extension of his church and kingdom, that if the proper course be taken, by the time of our next A. C. we can have a treasury of thousands to be used for that purpose. It is estimated by some that our members number about 100,000. Now, out of this number, there certainly one-tenth, who could spare one dollar, between this and next A. C., and give it as a free-will offering for the cause of Christ, and not miss it at the end of the year. I possess but very little of this worlds goods, and know many brethren who can or could give 50 dollars easier than we 50 cents. But just right here, we will give our proposition and plan. I herewith send my name to the editors of the C. F. C., which is to signify that I will pay one dollar; now let every brother and sister who will pay one dollar, send his or her full name, and when one thousand names are sent in and registered, let it be made known through the C. F. C., and I will send my dollar, and so let every one who had sent his or her name, and let the receiver deposit it in bank for safe keeping till next A. C., and let the names continue to be sent in, and when 500 more names are sent in and registered, let each one send his dollar, and so on. I cannot help but believe, that the receiver can make at least 8 or 10 deposits until next A. C. (I will here state, brother Henry, the brother to whom this money is to be sent, I will leave for you to name. I would suggest that yourself be the one, if you think you can keep it from getting mixed with other money which is received daily.) To give encouragement and interest to the subject embraced in the foregoing, I will here state what we know has been done in preaching where the Brethren had not preached before. Some 18 months ago, our beloved Elder Jacob M. Thomas, accompained by another of our younger ministers, took a trip up through W. Va., and they came into a community where the brethren were unknown, and they preached the word to them, and the people believed, and were baptized, and a church organized before they left them, in the short time of a few weeks, and is now a prospering congregation. Dear brethren and sisters, come one, come all, and let us put our shoulders to the wheels of the chariot of salvation, and let Zion move forth in her strength to the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

Minister's Pay.

Truth is truth, but as a defender of it, some one has understood me to be a cold advocate. Young writers need practice, else they will not always be understood.

Brother Meyers has criticised an article of mine that I hoped had found its way into the Editor's waste-box. However, so long as I feel eager to write, I will not object very much to a friendly criticism. The pen has hard battles to fight; and if mine gets engaged, I'll study how to best wield it in the good cause. I don't wish to boast, but I doubt whether there is a "young Dunkard" living to-day who has done more public writing than myself, (I say "young Dunkard" because—I blush to speak it—I was called that by way of reproach, while carrying some tobacco in my pocket for a tobocco chewer,) and, until recently have had no one to publicly criticise any of my productions. My views and those of my senior brethren must be much alike, or my compositions of so little value that no one has taken exceptions to them, except brother M.

Brother M, it was not exactly the preacher's money, or rather, the money that should be paid him for his work of zeal, that I had allusion to. We don't want our ministers to become covetous. There is danger in this, as has been observed with the money-making preachers of so-called christendom.

The Rev. Mr. S., of DeGraff, received annually a salary large enough to afford him luxuries such as kings love to dine upon. But his wife could wear more silk dresses, and furnish the house in style more readily, if he would accept of a situation where his already large salary could be increased at least one-third. Such a way of thinking, God forbid that our dear brethren shall fall into. We want our ministers to ever bear in mind the good of the cause for which Christ died. But at the same time we insist, as brother M will find we have already hinted in the article he referred to, that our brethren "bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." We don't want the preacher to work so hard with his own hands as to neglect the Lord's work. It made me blush when I heard of that good, old, gray-headed minister having to chop cord-wood, while some of our idle brethren were enjoying their own cheerful fireside. Yes, I say it is a shame that such old brethren, who have done so much for the good of Zion, to be compelled thus to labor. May the great God speed the day when the puny arms of his finite creatures will no longer be held up in opposition to what the church is now so eagerly laboring for—the salvation of the soul, at the expense of all human selfishness.

Church News.

Brethren and sisters in the Lord, having a desire to read church news, and to hear how the church affairs are prospering elsewhere. I will try to pen a few lines for the benefit of others, and tell them how we are getting along in the Ephrata branch of the church, in Lancaster Co., Pa. We held our Annual love-feast on the 7th and 8th of June, and had quite a good season of it, especially the second day. The word was dealt out to overflowing by the strange brethren present. It seemed we should never forget the kind admonitions, and the solemn warnings which were dealt out. But alas, for mortal man! ever forgetful of his duty, ever prone to do evil & to walk in his own way & condemnation. We have had several additions to our church this season; not so many as we would like to see, but are glad that so many were willing to turn with us, and hope the Lord will add some more before long.

Our siter church, the West Conestoga, also had a very pleasant love-feast the latter part of May, which was quite a refreshing season, to ourself, at least, if not to others; for we are always made to rejoice to see poor and weary sinners led to the water for baptism, and this was the case here. They have had quite a number of accessions this season, and we hope the Lord may be with them, that they may have many more also throughout the brotherhood.

If a person "faints," place him on his back and let him alone; he wants arterial blood to the head; and it is easier for the heart to throw it there in a horizontal line than perpendicularly.

Brethren Editors :—On the 22nd, I left home to attend a love-feast in the Middle Creek branch, Somerset Co., Pa. Met with the members that evening, and in feasting enjoyed ourselves very much Had the largest membership present I ever saw there on any such occasion, and better order among the friends than I ever saw there before, to my recollection. However our county is improving in that respect of late. At the same meeting we ordained Brother Tobias Meyers, as an assistant to Elder Adam F. Snyder. Preaching on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, well attended. Principal laborers present Eld. H. Meyers of Ill., E. S. Miller, of Hagerstown, Md. George Schrock of Berlin, and the writer. I returned home on the 24th.

On the 25th I started for Columbiana Co., Ohio, where I safely arrived on the same evening. Lodged with brother Bowman. Next morning, 26th, he took me to place of meeting. The name of this branch is "Sandy." Part of the members are in Columbiana, and part in Stark counties, Ohio. The ministers here are Lewis Glass, David Byers, J. A. Clement, Aaron Shively. At 10 o'clock the meeting opened for public services. By this time a large crowd of people were gathered together ; some to see and hear, others, to be seen. Here I met with my old brother H. Kurtz, and that, too, for the first time on an occasion of this kind ; and for the first time, to my recollection, that I heard him preach. Here the principal speakers were P. J. Brown, Eld. H. Kurtz and N. Longanecker, all of Ohio. Had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of Eld. H. Brumbaugh, Daniel Clapper, and J. J. Hoover. This was a good meeting, well attended ; and the members were much encouraged. There was one added by baptism. Brethren Lewis Glass and David Byers were ordained to the full commission, and Aaron Shively to the second degree. I shall long remember this meeting.

On the 27th I left this place to meet with the brethren in Lewis Co., W. Va. I safely arrived there on the evening of the 28th. Opened the meeting next morning, 29th, and continued over Sunday. Here we had what I call a very good meeting. True we had not as many members as we have in other places, but what are there are wide awake to the cause. The strange brethren at this place were Dan. Hays, John Friedly, and Joseph Houser of W. Va., and the writer. Brother Hays and I did the labor. At this place I was agreeably disappointed. : first, as to the country ; and secondly, in the roads. I was almost afraid to enter upon my journey thither ; but I am happy to say, so far as I came, the country is good ; not as level as are the prairies, but they have a good, productive soil, and not many stone to hinder them in the tilling of the ground ; and the road I traveled over is good. I would advise travelling brethren to sometimes call in and see the members of the West Fork branch, Lewis Co. Brethren, be assured your kind visits are not soon forgotten by the members there. O how they loved to tell about the good meetings they had when Eld. John Wise was among them, and at another time brother P. J. Brown. Brethren you made impressions there that will remain as long as the minds of those individuals remains active. God bless you for it. Now I am at home again, July 2nd, found my family all well, and myself in good health. This is becoming too long. I shall say to all my brethren at the places above mentioned, you have my sincere thanks for the kindness you bestowed upon me, while in your midst. May God bless you for it. Amen.

C. G. Lint.

Brother Holsinger :—Will you or some other brother give an explanation of the following passage of scripture ? "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead ? If the dead rise not at all, why are they baptized for the dead ?" 1 Cor. 15 : 20.

John J. Brown.

From Galesburgh, Neosho County, Kansas.

Dear Brother Editors :—We wish to be heard through the Companion. We have now an organized church in Neosho county, Kansas, called the Neosho county church, with twenty-four members, two speakers, one Deacon. We are under the Eldership of brother Isaac Hershey. We invite brethren emigrating west to give us a call. Ministering brethren are very much needed. If we would attend all the calls, we would be away from home the most of our time, which our temporal circumstances will not admit. There are brethren in almost every county in Southern Kansas, calling for preaching. How can their wants be supplied. You, brethren, who are rich in this worlds goods, and have ministering brethren to spare, think of us. We would not mind to spend our time in this service and do what we could, but what would become of our family who depends upon us for support ? All letters of inquiry promptly answered. Written in love in behalf of the Church.

Appeal to the Churches.

We call the attention of the Brethren and friends to our situation, circumstances and wants. We are situated in a locality where we are much in want of a Meeting-house. In many places we meet in School-houses, and sometimes in private houses and dwellings, which are too small and inconvenient for the congregations attending. The meetings generally are well attended, much interest manifested, and good order observed. The church here seems to be in a good and prosperous condition and the friends around us seem to manifest a strong desire for the prosperity of the church ; hence, we see and feel the great want of a suitable house for public worship ; yet considering the circumstances of the brethren and friends generally through our western country in a pecuniary point of view, (many at least), we find we are too poor, and not able to build, but all are willing to throw in their mites and do what they can to assist in the good work. We have therefore concluded to try at once and see to what extent our Brethren and friends in the various churches of the brotherhood where plenty abounds, will assist us in the good cause and aid us in building a suitable meeting-house in the Hamilton Branch. Here brethren is a call for missionary aid. Who will heed the call ? Truly your donations, contributions and mites will be thankfully received, and the Lord will reward you for your labor of love. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

Contributions can be sent to either of the subscribers who are appointed as a committee of arrangement. Time given for payments until December 1st 1872. If however, brethren or churches could certify to the amounts they will contribute, by August 17th next it would be considered a favor.

A beautiful 2 acre lot has been donated by brother Abram Sell for the M. H. and a church burying-ground, 4 miles North of the town of Hamilton.

Advertising alone does not prove success. The thing which is advertised, must have intrinsic merit, or else large advertising will eventually do it more harm than good, advertise it thoroughly, and you will be sure to succeed: if it is poor, don't praise it, for people will soon discover you are lying.

Such is the policy of the Burlington Route that runs to three great regions in the West: 1st, To Omaha, connecting with the Pacific Roads. 2nd, To Lincoln the capital of Nebraska, and all that beautiful region south of the Platte, field with R. R. lands and homesteads. 3d, To St. Joseph, Kansas City and all Kansas points.

The roads are splendidly built, have the best bridges, finest cars, the Miller platform and coupler and the safety air brake (to prevent the loss of life that is everywhere else happening); Pullman's sleepers, Pullman dining cars, large and powerful engines (to make quick time and good connections), and are in a word the best equipped roads in the West. So that if you desire to go safely, surely, quickly and comfortably to any point in Southern Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, or on the Pacific Roads, be sure that you go "By Way of Burlington."

The Christian Family Companion, Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lords Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the duties of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

X. Does the District understand the A. M. to mean that we should dispose of our likenesses entirely when it advises us to put them away? See minutes 1859, article 21.

Answer. The A. M. understands the phrase "put them away," to mean to put them out of public sight.

XI. What is to be done with a district of church that tolerates its members in taking Illegal interest for money loaned, after A. M. has decided again and again that it is wrong to do so?

Answer. This A. M. thinks that that church should be visited by the elders of the adjoining churches to set in order the things that are wanting.

XII. Is it according to the gospel and the order of the brethren for members of the church to teach instrumental music in public schools or elsewhere? We desire the dear brethren assembled in District Meeting to give us an answer on this subject.

Answer. While we know of no direct scripture on the subject, we can only give our advice on the query. And as we believe instrumental music to be of the world and not of the true church of God, we think members had better not engage in teaching it. But we submit our answer to A. M. This Annual Meeting confirms this answer.

XIII. Whereas the A. M. of 1866 in organizing District Meetings says, the District Meeting shall endeavor to settle all questions of a local character; and, whereas, it is known that questions of such a character have been settled according to truth and justice by individual churches, aided by elders called by the church. Yet there are always some members who are dissatisfied, and appeal to A. M. for committees from abroad at heavy expenses, &c., which are no more competent of deciding correctly than the elders on the district in which the cases occur. Therefore the District of Eastern Maryland petitions the A. M. to authorize the several District Meetings, to settle all questions and cases arising among them not of a doctrinal character.

The A. M. postponed this question.

XIV. Will the A. M. confirm or reject the answer formed by the standing committee to article 7 of the minutes of 1871?

Answer. This A. M. confirms said answer.

XV. Can brethren in the ministry who have fallen into the gross crimes mentioned by Paul in 1 Cor. 5th Chapter, ever be restored to their office? and if they can, in what way shall it be done?

Answer. We think they may under some circumstances, and the church having to act should judge whether such circumstances exist. But we think it should be by the unanimous consent of the church, and in the presence of at least three elders. But there are some cases so grievous that we cannot receive them into their office.

XVI. Will not this meeting urge a change in holding our A. M., as the present system is very unsatisfactory? A reconsideration of query 4 of last A. is desired.

Answer. This A. M. readopts the answer of query 4, 1871.

XVII. The following resolution contains the decision of the Meeting upon the subject of feet-washing:

Make no change whatever in the mode and practice of Feet-washing, and stop the further agitation of the subject.

XVIII. Whereas, both the new English Hymn Book and also the German are not used in some few of the churches of our brotherhood, and whereas, the use of the two books, the old and the new, causes at times considerable inconvenience, and for this and other reasons it is desirable that but one book should be used in our churches; and whereas the reason given by some brethren for not introducing the new book is, that the A. M. has never given them its sanction; and whereas, the English book had, before its publication, been presented to the A. M. for an expression of its judgment upon the character of the work, but for want of time no expression was given; and whereas, the new books, both the English and the German, have now been before the brotherhood for some time and have given general satisfaction; therefore, resolved, that this A. M. give the new books its sanction and liberty to all the members of the churches to use them.

XIX. Resolved, that the request of John Dannis, and his brethren of the State of Maine, in regard to a ministering brother being sent to them to preach the Gospel and make known to them the order of the Brethren, should not be slighted, but prayerfully considered by the A. M., and measures adopted to carry the same into effect.

Answer. We think the Minutes of 1860 and 1865 give the church ample liberty to make arrangements to meet the case above alluded to; We, therefore, refer the subject to the District Meeting from which it came.

XX. We desire the A. M. to correct the Minutes of last year, Art. 5, so as to read, is it right for a brother to swear his life against a man for any cause, instead of swear his life against a brother.

Answer. We adopt the correction.

XXI. Will this Meeting allow brethren, and especially ministering brethren, to engage in the banking business?

Answer. Not advisable for brethren to engage in such business. See Matt. 6: 3.

XXII. We desire the A. M. to reconsider the 31 Art. of the Minutes of 1844, and if the present answer may be adopted, then what shall be done with a brother who violates the decision?

The Query above alluded to, with the Answer, are as follows. Whether a brother may go to the Legislative Assembly as a representative of the people agreeably with the Gospel? Considered, that though we look upon the higher powers of the world as being of God, for the protection of the pious, &c., and desire to be thankful to God for the benefit we enjoy under our government, and feel it our duty to pray fervently and daily for the same, we cannot see how a follower of the meek and lowly Savior can seek and accept an office of this kind consistently with the Gospel he professeth. See Matt. 20: 25—28; Mark 10: 42—46; Luke 22: 25; John 17: 16, &c.

The Query was reconsidered, and the following answer given by this Meeting:

Answer. We readopt the answer to the Minutes alluded to and consider that any brother who suffers himself to be elected to such office as that named and to serve in it, cannot be retained as a member of the church.

XXIII. Which is the most in accordance with the Gospel and example of Jesus and his disciples, to close our Lovefeasts in the evening with singing or with prayer?

Answer. This Meeting thinks singing last is most in accordance with the Gospel.

XXIV. Requests for Committees to visit churches in the different districts, and which were granted.

MINUTES
ANNUAL MEETING
OF THE BRETHREN,

Held in the Chippewa Church, Wayne County, Ohio, on the Farm of Cyrus Hoover, May 21, 22, and 23, 1872.

On Monday a large number of elders collected according to previous arrangement, and conferred with one another upon the subject they met to consider.

On Tuesday morning the General Council Meeting was opened in the ordinary manner, by devotional exercises, and the reading of the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

In opening and examining the papers presented to the Council, it was ascertained that the following subjects were sent to the meeting to be considered. Accordingly they were considered in the fear of the Lord, and decided as herein stated.

I. Has the Church a right to pass resolutions and decisions and enforce them to the expulsion of members from the body without thus saith the positive law of the Lord?

Answer. The church shall not expel any member without gospel authority.

II. A request to consider Query XX. of A. M. of 1870.

There was a reconsideration of the query referred to, and the answer of 1870 was renewed, and ordered to be put on the present minutes. It is as follows: "This A. M. renews its disaprobation of the use of tobacco, and especially at the time, and in the place of divine worship, and believes it should be classed with other vain and useless things."

III. Are members justifiable in refusing to commune with Bishops of other churches who tolerate pride in their churches, when the A. M. makes it their duty to enforce plainness?

Answer. Not until it is understood that the elders who are said to have tolerated the evil alluded to, have been admonished and labored with to get them in order.

IV. Has the church the right to enforce her decisions according to Matthew, 18th chapter, in matters where the gospel is silent?

Answer. There may be evils of sufficient magnitude to require a resort to the extreme of the course we are directed to pursue in Matthew 18 chapter, though those evils for which members are dealt with, may not be specified in the gospel, but at the same time are clearly violations of the principles of the gospel.

V. Is the gospel a perfect law to govern the church in all things necessary to salvation?

Answer. It is.

VI. What is the ancient and established order of the Brethren, when elders are called to labor in another arm of the church? Are they to be taken in the private council with the laboring brethren of that church or not?

Answer. They may be taken into the private council.

VII. Is it according to the order of the Brethren in private council, that there be a unanimous consent of the "official brethren" concerning any matter before it can come before the church?

Answer. The official brethren should not bring a matter before the church if they are divided, until they have called the assistance of bishops of adjoining districts.

VIII. Can the church tolerate a member in the body, that is a member of the society or order called Grange or Patrons of Husbandry?

Answer. No brother or sister should have anything to do with such an order, it being a secret bound, and from appearance, a political association. And members who have united with it, and persist in it, should be dealt with as transgressors. See minutes of A. M. 1870.

IX. Is it right according to the gospel and rules of the brethren for one arm of the church to delegate to another arm the power of restoring back to the church a member who had formerly been disowned by the arm first named above?

Answer. It has the power by sending the charge with the testimony, in connection with the testimony where the member resides.

Humility.

Humility, as a Christian virtue, is opposed to arrogance and assumption. Men are apt to think too highly of themselves, and on account of adventitious circumstances, and accidental rather than permanant or inherent qualifications. The fact that you may have large wealth does not make you a better man. You may have an exalted position in society, but that will not give you excellence; it may be disadvantageous, in the giving of a greater prominence to your peculiaraties.

Humility is a true estimate of ourselves: of our unworthiness; of our weakness, of our insufficiency and entire dependence on God for wisdom, holiness, and happiness. Do you feel your unworthiness? This will lead you to think of the worthiness of Christ. Do you feel your weakness? In him is your strength. Do you realize your insufficiency? Your "sufficiency is of God." Then you can rejoice that "Christ is made to you wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

Humility is characteristic of true greatness. This is exhibited in the remark of Newton respecting himself. After astonishing the world by his discoveries in science, he observed that he had busied himself in finding on the shore a few pebbles a little smoother than others had obtained, while the ocean of truth lay unexplored before him.

Wesley' having traveled, toiled, preached, written, and endured for the benefit of others till the eighty-eighth year of his age, said, on his dying bed:

"I the chief of sinners am.
But Jesus died for me."

St. Paul's estimate of himself is, "Who am less than the least of all saints." And yet his labors were more abundant, and his sufferings greater, than the other apostles. All his talent, his influence, and whatever he had he considered as bestowed on him; and that which regulated, directed, and sanctified them in his great work, was the grace of God,—by grace I am what I am. John Fletcher sympathized with Paul in the practical idea of humility, seeking to be "the least, the last, and the servant of all." Are you reader, learning this lesson of losing yourself in the spirit of this grace, and yielding to its guidance in the service of God!

Behold in its perfection in your Savior, this characteristic of true greatness: "Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Referring particularly to this trait of humility, the apostle says: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." Pray for this, labor and strive for it, and you will assuredly find, in its posession and enjoyment, that the hight of Christian perfection is the depth of humble love.—Haven.

For the COMPANION.

Be ye a Separate People.

Dear brethren and sisters, it is our duty to examine ourselves to see whether we are actually a separate people, or whether we are still following the viles, vanities, fashions of this world, which will sooner or later pass away. Have we laid up treasures in heaven where moth nor rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through nor steal?

Now, dear reader, I am afraid, if we examine ourselves, we must all confess that we have come short of our duty—we have separated our minds and thoughts enough from the world and worldly affairs, and lived too much in conformity with the world. In Cor. 6: 14, we are admonished not to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," &c., and in 17th verse we are admonished to come out from among them and to be a separate people, and to touch not the unclean things, and he will receive us. If we have actually separated ourselves from the world, and have lived to the commands of our Lord and

Jesus Christ as we ought to, then we have the glorious promise that he will be a Father unto us, and we shall be his sons and daughters, and if sons and daughters, we shall be heirs, and joint-heirs with Christ Jesus. Therefore it is of the greatest importance to watch and pray that we may not fall into temptations, so that, when we come to die and leave this tenement of clay, we have a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens, where there will be no more troubles, trials, difficulties, and temptations to contend with, but where all will be peace and harmony forever and ever.

The Rise and Progress of Clergy—So-called.

The title of Clergy is an assumed title that they have appropriated to themselves. The original import of the word means heritage, God's heritage. Peter makes the proper use of the term when he says to the bishop, "he shall not lord over God's heritage." Then the term means the church of Jesus Christ and not the priests. Do the protestant priests assume that favor? Yes they do. Hear the language of Mr. Nevin, the president of Marshall College. In the Mercersburg Review of September 1846 pages, 137, 38, he says, "As among the Jews so still there are Levites who stand between the altar and the worshippers." The office of the ministry is a ministry not in name only, but in fact. The minister is the mouth of God to man, and the mouth of man to God. The office which he holds is the investure of ministerial grace and authority. He does not act from man, or by man; but by Jesus Christ for man. No man can take this office to himself. The people can not invest him with the power of a minister who is to serve them in the office. The gift must be received, as Timothy received it. When he is properly commissioned in his place, the minister can say I was not called to this place by the vote of members, but through the body. Now mark well the division. His meaning is the Clergy and not the church; a flat contradiction to the word of God. Then, according to Mr. Nevin the church of Christ is a mere instrument of convenience. "I came from God to man," this is the import of his argument. If it be so, I would advise all of that denomination to deliver up their Bibles to his reverence. The pope of Rome never claimed any more than to be sole dictator of the Bible, and Mr. Nevin claims the same. I see no difference between the church of Rome and the Protestant church; not a particle of difference. I claim no affinity to what is called the Protestant church, and think I speak the sentiment of the brotherhood in general. We claim no dictator but Jesus Christ and his apostles. They with John the baptist, were the only persons commissioned under the new dispensation. All others who claim to be sent of God contrary to apostolic usage and practice are nothing but self-deception, they protest against the commandments of Jesus Christ. Well may they assume the name protestant, it is their proper name. We hear it thundered from the pulpit, that they are protestants. They protest against baptism, the Lord's supper, and the washing of the saint's feet; which Jesus Christ rigidly commands his followers to observe unto the end of the world. I see no shade of difference between the church of Rome and the Protestant church. They both protest against the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apostles. Our first example was the claim of a minister of the German Reformed church, Mr. J. Nevin Our second example shall be selected from the Methodist Episcopal church. Her claims are officially announced that all powers, whether, legislative, judicial or executive, are claimed and exercised by the preachers. It was conceded by all her members, that their clergy as well as all others were called of God to expound the scriptures. This, none doubted; but doubts arose in the minds of many, whether the preachers had the divine right, to the absolute goverment of the affairs of the church, without control in any shape. The number of such persons who entertained these doubts were numerous, and in high standing in the church, and extended over the U. S. They therefore made a common cause of it, and united in petitioning the General conference, that being the legislative department of the church, and assembles every four years. It is composed exclusively of delegates from the annual conference of preachers. This G. C. met in 1828 at Pittsburgh, Pa. To that body numerous petitions were sent from all parts of the Union, humbly and respectfully begging for a participation in making laws that were to control them and their posterity after them. As members of the M. E. church, having freely aided in building churches and parsonages, and liberally supported the preachers, they humbly conconceived that they had some right over their own persons and property, more than being mere instruments for the preachers to work out their own purposes and interests with these God called preachers. After deliberating and viewing the whole matter, they replied to the petitions in the following language; We, being the divinely authorized expounders of God's holy word, and administrators of the moral discipline of his church are therefore in conscience bound not to permit our administrations to be authoritively controlled. Here you discover the popish claim to govern the church by divine right. To rule the conscience of her members. This is claimed by all of that class of God called ministers. The pope of Rome, never claimed more than to be the dictator of the scriptures; and to have the control over all the temporal concerns of the church. As the methodists have all their meeting-houses, their parsonages and their book Concerns under the control of the preachers, which is worth millions of dollars, held by trustees, at the control of the clergy. What we have written is strictly true, as we were eye and ear witness to the same, to our great mortification, to see men that dropped down from heaven quarreling and abusing each other about God and mammon.

Prayer a Key.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

Prayer is a key, for it opens to us the door to the knowledge of God. None can understand anything spiritually of the character and glory of God but those who go to Him to be enlightened. When we go to Him as the Father of lights and call upon Him, by the very act we place ourselves in the beaming splendor which goes out from Him. We come to the light, and He is ever ready to open to us the door, if we but use the key.

2. Prayer is a key, because it opens to us the knowledge of ourselves. Just as I bring an object out of the darkness into the light when I wish to examine it, so I bring my dark and spotted heart to the light, when I come to God in prayer. In the light of his holiness, and love, and joy, I see my own sinfulness, and shame, and misery. The nearer I go to him the more clearly I see myself, and know what I am. Prayerless men do not know themselves. They have never seen themselves in the light of God, and they think they are good and blameless; but praying men know the wickedness of their own hearts. "Now mine eye seeth thee," says Job; "wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes."

3. Prayer opens to the soul the glory of the natural world. A prayerless man does not know one in a thousand of the beauties of nature; and what he sees not, that he cannot enjoy, as the spiritual man enjoys it. "For Thou, Lord, rejoicest me by Thy works; I joy in the works of Thy hands. O Lord, how great are Thy works, and Thy thoughts are very deep. The brutish man knoweth not, neither does the fool understand this." God makes the hearts of these rejoice in His works, whose joy is so near to Him.

4. Prayer is a key, for it opens to us the clearest and most glorious knowledge of heaven. It brings us into spiritual harmony with the employments and enjoyments of the inhabitants of heaven, so that we can understand better what is the home of the blessed. Our faith is so strengthened that we obtain clear views of the eternal heights and the heavenly fields. No hill on earth is so high, no mountain summit is so near heaven as the mount of God.

The key which can open so many locks and throw wide so many doors, which can bring a man into possession of so many blessings, is within the reach of every man, if he only desires and takes pains to obtain it. Many young and poor, learned and unlearned, have found it, and enjoy it in the use of its unspeakable blessings; and are we not sure that every one who has this key, that opens the treasure-chambers of the Most High, must seek at his own door the blame for his shame and his misery?—Watchman and Reflector.

When the day of Judgment comes, and the books are opened, and eternity is beginning, even then the promises will bear all your weight; Christ will not let go his hold on your soul."

The defects of the understanding, like those of the face, grow worse as we grow old.

The Sword Sheathed.

"Shall the sword devour forever?" Not if prophecy be true. "And He shall judge among the nations and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah 2:4.

The day is coming, we believe, when, "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." However distant the time may be, and however long in coming, faith penetrates into the future and rejoices in the glories of peace triumphant. Though we may not now be permitted to enter into the Holy of Holies and offer incense upon the alter of universal peace, beholding the glory of the true Shechinah; yet the foreshadowings of its approach will appear, when all Christians shall uphold the standard. Peace! it is the holy calm in every truly Christian heart, the angel of blessing in the family circle, the bond of holy union in the Church of true believers, the crowning gem in the diadem that adorns the brow of our Christ who is the Prince of Peace, and of the increase of whose government and peace there shall be no end.

In contemplating this infinite increase, are not our hearts made to rejoice, and we led to exclaim, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men"—responsive echo of that song which, from angels' lips, fell upon the enraptured ears of Judea's shepherds near two thousand years ago? and may all nations catch that sound, and a million prayers ascend from every corner of the globe, united in one universal anthem of praise: the fruit of that prayer, "Lead me, O Prince of peace, into thy paths which are all peace; sheathe forever, O Lord, the sword drunk with the blood of men." May we not, even now, hear in faith, one grand diapason sweeping up from coming ages, Amen and Amen; and a great voice of much people in heaven saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ—the sword hath ceased to devour?" Glorious day, delectable earth, millennial era, vista, seen through the thick carnage and dire confusion of contending armies on the field of bloody battle.

Hoping, believing and trusting that the day will come when war shall be swallowed up by peace, we live and act in a time when the murderous work of war drains the very life-blood of nations, to glut the institute vengeance of miserably blinded princes who are treasuring up unto themselves and their subjects wrath agaist the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgements of God.

War is the product of man's, not God's will, and often the will of but one man, seldom of the will of many; and that man wearing the insignia of office, or invested with the supreme authority of the government. Such a prince or ruler, under some slight pretense of national honor insulted of national rights disregarded, cries out for redress of grievances, and proclaims war. Soon two whole nations are seen marshalling in arms, to decide by brute force some trivial question of rights, where reason and judgment should be employed, and will be ere the question is permanently settled. For seas and oceans of blood may be shed, millions upon millions of treasures may be wasted, and after all, resort must be made to some pacific expeditions to settle the dispute. Then why not appeal to these first, and avoid the terrible evils resulting from a national struggle?

The means, then, by which war must be put down are not carnal, but spiritual. The will of man must be reached and acted upon, and it must be reached through his reason, his understanding, his conscience. The human mind is molded for a time in a peculiar form, and when the time has elapsed it bursts that asunder in order to secure a new one. The time for conquerors is past; the human mind needs remolding. This must be done by Christian education, which is the most efficient means for revolutionizing society. This can make the warlike peaceful, the ignorant intelligent, and the superstitious enlightened. The great object of education, then, should be to stamp, on all kinds of society, the peaceful character; to educate for peace and not for war; to "drive the monster, war, home in his lair, and there transfix him with reason and with love." But, some will say, nations can not exist unless protected by sword and gun. But what have been the effects of such a protection upon an ancient empire? Everywhere may be traced the devastations caused by war. The strength of powerful empires has been destroyed. Persia, Assyria, Greece, and Rome are but moments marking its desolating track. The first command, according to sacred authority, was, "Increase and multiply." But, in those ancient abodes of men, nothing is to be seen but the fearful consequences of the violation of that Divine decree. The whole history of antiquity exhibits to us many arrayed for destruction. If increase be the law of humanity, then war is its most dreadful enemy. War has diminished instead of augmenting; pulled down instead of building up; and instead of promoting the progress of our race, has changed civilization into barbarism. "I have visited," says one, "the ruins of Nineveh, of Babylon, of Palmyra, of Thebes, of Memphis. These cities, formerly so powerful and renowned, superior in extent, in population and in wealth to the most flourishing of these times, present now only heaps of ruins, over which a few lonely shepherds wander. They are enshrined in the silence of death."

If we come to countries now inhabited, we shall find Greece, whence the enrapturing pages of Homer's songs, and the soul-stirring eloquence of Demosthenes have come. There is Athens, formerly the glory of the world, that occupies so high a place in our memories and imaginations, so illustrious in the arts and sciences, now fallen into decay and almost contempt. A writer of the sixteenth century, in alluding to the condition of this city, exclaims: "O, tragic change of human power! A city once so mighty in walls, shipyards, buildings, arms, wealth, men; so flourishing in prudence, and all wisdom, now reduced to a small town, or, rather, hamlet; once free, living under its own laws, now under the yoke of slavery the cruelest of brutes. Go to Athens, ye warriors, and instead of the most magnificent works, behold piles of rubbish and lamentable ruins."

Rely not too much on your own strength, but put trust in Him who saith, "I am the Lord thy God." And it is a most remarkable fact that those who have trusted in God have been miraculously preserved and delivered. Where shall we find a more striking example of the truth we are now advocating than in the fate of Rome—the mistress of the world, an object of admiration to the learned on account of the riches of art it contains, and the historical interest connected with it? This city presents to the traveler, who now roams among the wonderful remains, the destiny of people who based their power on war. Rome, after having almost subdued the world, was in her turn swallowed up by conquest; and impressive example of the declaration, "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." The old legion concerning Rome is, that Romulus showed himself to Proclus in a vision and announced to him that Rome should attain her power by conquest, and that war would be the principal occupation and object of her children. Rome obeyed these commands of her founder and reaped the rewards of this obedience. Chirstians also have their legend and their vision; but that vision was a retinue of angels who proclaimed over Bethlehem, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men."

Such is the christian legend, and the precepts of his holy religion command him to love his brother and to proclaim universal fraternity. But this cannot be done as long as nations persist in armed defense. How long will man be in learning that this dreadful system of war will never cease to exist until the gun and sword are forever banished and the fiery-throated cannon forever spiked?

James, the Apostle, says: "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." We would say resist war, strive against it, and it will flee from you; rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded, than allow the miseries attending war to be visited upon the nation.

"War is a monster of most frightful mien,
Which to be hated needs only to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity then embrace."

It is the murderer of nations; the scourge of humanity; the blood thirsting cannibal, while yet reeking in the blood of slain thousands, is still crying, Give! give! and never satisfied. How long must we wait for peace to cry out Enough! enough! How long must we wait for the standard of the Prince of Peace to be born aloft, and all nations, with trumpet sound, proclaim, Peace hath triumphed? Let us now enquire what reasons there are for expecting that peace shall supplant war. The prophets have prophesied concerning it. Micah says: "And they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit, every man under his own vine, and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it" The mere existence of this prophecy of peace is a sentence of condemnation upon war, and stamps a criminality upon its very forehead. It is in accordance with the principles inculcated by Christ, and the only result when obedience is given to his commandments. It is said the "knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea."

Now, we find two eras prophesied of; the one a universal spread of the knowledge of God, the other universal peace: neither of which, we can conceive to exist without the other. The two we would blend into one; they must co-exist; then let them be co-workers, and he who would aid in the spread of the one, neglect not the advancement of the other. The glorious results of the union are most clearly and forcibly illustrated by the rapid spread of the religion of Christ during the first century; and the question might now be asked, why is it that, at the present time, more than two-thirds of the entire population of the world are immersed in heathen darkness? The true answer is, most unquestionably, because professing Christians were known to those heathen as men of blood—with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other; or, more commonly, the sword conspicuous and the Bible unseen, they were recognized by those heathen as ruthless butchers of human beings. If there were no other reasons for the rejection of war, the removal of this bar to the conversion of the heathen would be an all-sufficient and overwhelming one. If the implements of human destruction had not been carried by English and American colonists to Liberia and the Cape of Good Hope, the dark clouds of Paganism which hover over Africa might have been fast clearing away before the present year. And may we not believe that but for a similar drawback in India and China, genuine Christianity, with its labors of love to the afflicted and suffering, and its consolations to redeemed sinners, would now generally be spread among the hundred of millions of immortal beings which now people these wild districts? "Learn of me," says the Divine exemplar, and do we learn fighting from Him? His conduct was always pacific. The life of Christ was one full stream of love from fount to sea. Love was the vital stream which circulated through His holy soul and gave impulse and direction to the ceasless activity of his life. When human malignity had reached its climax, and he hung suspended on the tree, his innocence converted into crime, his name cast out as a reproach, his life betrayed by suborned and perjured witnesses, and his last agonies mocked with derision and scorn, even then his love faltered not. Not one gleam of vindictiveness flashed from his eye; not one feeling of revenge agitated his bosom; but he spent his last expiring breath in a prayer for his enemies: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." If this be the example which the Christian is to follow, by what ingenuity of logic, by what perversion of right reason can we argue ourselves into the conviction that it can ever be lawful for us, the followers of Him who lived and died thus, to contribute to the maintenance of a system which is the mother and nurse of all the darkest and foulest passions of man's nature? We must cast these truths into the pulic mind; we must enlighten public opinion and rouse the national conscience, and gradually prepare for a time when, if the people are again menaced with war, they will lift up a voice of remonstrance so indignant and emphatic that no government shall dare to precipitate them again into this vortex of cost and crime. We must have the courage with a bold hand to tear away the mask which it has thrown over its face, and, regardless of the pomp and circumstances with which it is attended, and the sounding phrases of honor, patriotism and glory with which it is wont to conceal and varnish over its real character, we must present it to the eye of the world as it really is—a gigantic murderer, drunk with ambition and lust, and hideously stained with the blood of its myriads of victims. We deplore the curse of war because by it thousands are sacrificed and untold sufferings are produced. The numbers slain by war and its attendant evils are immense. Here the Charybdis and Scylla are united into one great destroyer, swallowing up the millions of earth. It is the foaming mountain torrent—"the river of desolation"—hurrying thousands into an untimely grave. Since the beginning of the world, twenty-five billions of human beings have been slaughtered by war. Jenghiz-Khan's spirit feasted on death; he caused thirty-two millions to be sacrificed in forty-one years on the Moloch shrine of war. Napoleon six millions, one million were slain in Jerusalem, five million by Xerxes in the invasion of Greece. Four hundred thousand of the enemy alone were killed by Julius Cæsar in a single engagement; three hundred thousand on the battle-field at Arbela, eighty thousand at Borodino. In the battle of Chalons there fell two hundred thousand of Attila's army. The Saracens occasioned the death of sixty millions, and the Crusades alone, forty millions of nominal Christians. The suffering, the torturous death of the wounded, and the cries of the innocent are all lifting up their voices to the God of mercy. The suffering, distress, misery and woe occasioned by lengthened sieges and the extremities to which the besieged are reduced, all beggar description. The streets of populous cities have been made to flow with blood, the houses burned to the ground, and the inhabitants brutally murdered. The wine-press of war has been trodden till blood has come out of the wine-press, even to the horses' bridles. Would to God that the lessons taught by fifty centuries of blood might be duly pressed at length upon a warring world. Take them, ye heralds of the cross, and proclaim them aloud to the multitudes that hang upon your lips. Let the press send them forth on wings of steam through all the world. Ponder them well ye who hold the healm of State. Come hither, ye millions of oppressed and starving poor, come and learn the chief cause of your woes; his brand is upon your brow, his manacles on your limbs; the blight of his withering curse upon all your pursuits and interests. War has covered the earth with bones of unburied men, and fertilized her soil with the richest blood of her own sons; it has defied the claims of justice and outraged the spirit of humanity. It has precipitated millions of men into the dread presence of their eternal Judge, with their hands all dabbled in their brothers' blood, and their spirits desolated by the fiercest and foulest passions.

Is this the fruit of war? "Ye shall know a tree by its fruits." If the fruit be corrupt, the tree must be evil. When we reflect on these things, does it not seem strange that any one should be called upon in this, the nineteenth century of the Christian era, to prove that such a system as this is, and can not but be, is in direct, irreconsilable and everlasting antagonism to the whole genius and spirit of the Gospel? But some affirm that war is sometimes an instrument of good. The apostle says, "Let us not do evil that good may come." And christians can not fight, for it is written: "Thou shalt not kill." How opposed to this have been the action of heroes. Napoleon would not sue for peace until blood had been shed. Listen to that fatal announcement to his opposing concil while deliberating concerning an attack upon Moscow: "Blood has not been shed, and Rusia is too great to yield without figting. Alexander can only negotiate after a great battle. I will proceed to the holy city in search of the battle, and I will gain it. Peace awaits me at the gates of Moscow."

Instead of peace he found destruction. His invincible legion, two hundred thousand strong, by that dreadful retreat from Moscow, and the terrible passage of the Berizana, was reduced to a miserable remnant. And all this frightful disaster, this untold suffering and miserable havoc of men's lives, for what? To exalt a poor worm of the dust. This is not an isolated instance. The pages of history are stained with the blood of men sacrificed to the god of war. Thousands and thousands of lives have been offered upon altars of ungodly ambition; and all the means of which ingenuity can invent are employed to delude the unfortunate victims, and make them believe that with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Even professed ministers of the Gospel of Christ have been so deluded as to preach that those who die in battle would be sure of heaven. Thus, their minds having become inflamed, their passions aroused, multitudes have been led captive. Trusting in their own arm and in their own strength become weakness: they have fallen by that devouring sword, which shall only cease to devour when men shall cease to do evil and learn to do well. How many of all this mighty multitude, when weighed in the balance of eternal truth, were fulfilling the object for which they were created, and for which life is continued? War was then deemed the pastime of master spirits, the sole pathway to glory; now it is fast coming to be held in universal contempt and abhorrence, as fit only for brutes and barbarians. Once it formed the main business of nations: now it is professedly their chief aim to avoid it. Once it was their only theater of competion: now the scene has changed to manufactures, commerce and other sources of improvement, comfort, wealth and power. Public opinion on this subject is rapidly changing. The time-hallowed delusions of war are vanishing; its strange and guilty spell is losing its hold of five thousand years upon the popular mind; men are beginning to reflect upon the inculpable waste of blood and treasures, on the fearful accumulation of its crimes and its woes. Now, a voice unheard before has come up from the "vasty deep," loud and terrible, that war shall be no more.

Complimentary Epithets.

I have for a year or two past had a desire to enter the lists as a champion of the faith once delivered to the saints, through the medium of the COMPANION; but hard work, and want of practice for nearly the last twenty years, have made the task of writing seem to me as did climbing up the hill of difficulty to Bunyan's Pilgrim; but now, at length I have broken a long silence; being excited thereto, by the discussion of a subject, which I deem of very great import, in a late number of the COMPANION. The subject is that of using complimentary epithets, such as Duke, lord, Mr., Sir, &c., in our address to our fellow men. I shall first consider the signification of those words, giving sufficient authority for the same. Secondly, give the Savior's commands concerning them. And thirdly, I purpose to show how the use of them operate against the growth of this saving gospel Christ brought from heaven, and how these have kept down, or altogether cut off, some of the most heavenly features of the divine life and have damaged the general growth, and have well nigh brought into the valley of the shadow of death the hope of the world's regeneration.

Mr., is the contraction of the latin word magister, (master.)

Sir, is the short way of saying sire; this means father, progenitor, or chief of clan or tribe; and kings are often addressed by the word sire, as well as majesty. Any person who has a dictionary, can see that the word master carries with it the idea of authority, or ownership of real estate, chattels, or fellow beings. I will group the passages of Scripture which express the Savior's commands on this subject, "Be ye not called Rabbi (master,) for one is your Master even Christ; and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth; for one is your Father which is in heaven:" Matth. 23: 9, 10. Again: "And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, came unto him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall desire. And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you? They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory. But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism I am baptized with? And they said unto him, we can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and be baptized with the baptism of which I am baptized: But to sit on my right hand, and on my left hand, is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it shall be prepared. And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with Simos and John. But Jesus called them unto him, and said unto them, Ye know that those who are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But so shall it not be among you; but whosoever shall be great among you, shall be your minister. And whosoever will be chief, shall be the servant of all. For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many." Mark 10: 35—45. Now what has this politeness, as your correspondent perhaps may call it, to do with religion? Is it not the effect of true and undefiled religion that you be courteous? You will be favored back, by those to whom you are courteous. Well, I will tell you This Jesus of ours, was (as you see above) hard against all your politeness—what I call flattery and man-worship. In the above passages, you see his command to his follower. In the passage which is to follow, I shall show you how the Savior practiced his preaching: "Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain and showed him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them: and he saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Matth. 4: 8, 9. This is enough for my purpose to establish the position which I take. If a heathen jailor, at Philippi, said, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" we will excuse the "sirs," for the sake of the "What must I do to be saved?" and also he, being a greek pagan, as I guess from the fact of his holding a government office, we would not expect from him to understand the language of etiquette now in use, among the citizens, of the kingdom of heaven; of the New Jerusalem. Now what consistency does exist in the brother or sister, wearing plain clothes as denoting the inner spiritual life, if he or she goes in word against the Captain of our salvation? Against the command of Christ did men give, and receive, adulation, and flattery until those who thought themselves fine china ware, while they considered their fellow mortals as only common crockery, thought they would do away with feet-washing, as unbecoming their quality and condition: thought they would do away with the agapae, or a feast of love, or Lord's supper, as acts denoting humility, equality, and brotherly love. How could it be otherwise? Could an oriental lord wash feet i. e. acknowledge himself servant on account of any spiritual blessing promised therefore? Could he eat in common with men he expected on the marrow to bow down and worship him? For the doctrine of the "Man of Sorrows" was he killed by the Jewish Sanhedrim. Should he have come like Solomon, in all his glory, with chariots and horses and clothed in soft raiment, which he had not, and giving hopes to the chief men of Israel, of seats on "his right, and left hand, in his glory," they would feel more like making him King, after their own fashion, than stoning, or crucifying him I would not think so unfavorably of a person being called by his name, and the office he fills, in an explanatory way; as, David, the King; Joab, the General; Peter Forney, the Elder; Thomas Jones, the Tailor, &c I think that such were the usages of the Bible The Germans call everybody, "Herr," which in the English is, "lord," and the latin word "dominus" means the same Pliny, the philosopher, speaks with execration of the word "dominus," as being synonymous with tyrant. See Gibbon's Rome, vol. 1, page 215, in a note at bottom of the page. And in the text of the same page: "When the Roman princes had lost sight of the Senate, and of their ancient capital, they easily forgot the origin, and nature of their legal power. The civil offices of consul, of pro-consul, of censor, and of tribune, by the union of which it had been formed betray to the people, its republican extraction. Those modest titles were laid aside; and if they still distinguish their high station, by the appellation of Emperor, or Imperator, that word was understood in a new and more dignified sense, and no longer denoted the General of the Roman armies; but the Sovereign of the Roman world. The name of Emperor which was at first of a military nature was associated with another, of a more servile kind. The Epithet of "Dominus or lord," in its primitive signification, was not expressive of the authority of a prince over his people, but of a master over his slaves. Viewing it in that odious light it had been rejected with abhorrence by the first Cæsars. Their resistence insensibly, became more feeble, and the name less odious; till at length the style of our Lord and Emperor, was not only bestowed by flattery, but was regularly admitted into the laws, and public monuments. You see that your word "Herr" is very gratifying to poor, frail humanity—to flesh and blood, which cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven.

Resurrection.

"He is not here ; for he is risen as he said, Come see the place where the Lord lay." Matthew 28 : 6.

"'He is not here.' Here, indeed, you laid him ; here you left him, and here you thought to find him as you left him ; but you are happily mistaken : "He is not here, he is risen." By which we understand that Christ raised himself from the state of the dead. It was the Divine nature, or Godhead of Christ, which revived and raised the manhood.

Here is also a plain confirmation of Christ's resurrection, and that, first, from Christ's own prediction : "He is risen, as he said :" he foretold that which I declare to be now fulfilled. Let it not therefore seem incredible to you.

Secondly, by their own sight : "Come, see the place where the Lord lay." The grave hath lost its guest, it is now empty ; death hath lost its prey, it received, but could not retain him : "Come, see the place where the Lord lay." Hence our Lord Jesus Christ, by the almighty power of his own Godhead, revived and rose from the dead, to the terror and consternation of his enemies and the unspeakable consolation of believers.

That our Lord Jesus Christ, though laid in the grave, was not lost, but the third day revived and rose again, is a truth confirmed to us by many infallible proofs. As Luke witnesses, Acts 7 : 3, we have testimonies of it both from heaven and earth ; from heaven, we have the testimony of angels who cannot deceive us. The The angel tells the two Mary's in the text, "He is risen." We have also testimony of it from men who were eye-witnesses of this truth, to whom he showed himself alive by the space of forty days after his resurrection, who confirmed their testimony with their blood ; so that no point of religion is rendered more infallibly certain than this before us. And blessed be God that it is so ; for if it were not, then were the gospel in vain, (1 Cor. 15 : 14,) seeing it rests the whole weight of our faith, hope, and salvation upon Christ as risen from the dead. If this were not so, then would the holy and divinely inspired apostles be found false witnesses, 1 Cor. 15 : 15 ; for they all, as with one mouth, constantly affirmed it at the risk of their lives. He was risen again for our justification, Rom. 4 : 25. Whilst Christ was dying and suffering, he was paying our debt—the price of our redemption ; hence the whole force and weight of our justification depend upon his resurrection. Moreover, had he not risen from the dead, how could all the types that prefigured this have been satisfied, and all the predictions of his resurrection, so plainly foretold, all been fulfilled ? Had he not risen from the dead, how could he have been installed in the glory he now has in heaven, and which was promised him before the world was, on account of his death and suffering ? "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living," Rom. 14 : 9 ; and that, in this state of dominion and glorious advancement, he might powerfully apply the virtue and benefits of his blood to us. So then, there remains no doubt of the fact of Christ's resurrection. Instead, therefore, of attempting farther to confirmation, I will proceed to explain the nature and manner of his resurrection.

Christ rose from the dead with awful majesty : "And, behold, there was a great earthquake ; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it, his countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow ; and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men." Human infirmity was not able to bear such heavenly majesty, as attended the scenes of that morning. Nature sank under it. This earthquake was a sign of triumph, or token of victory, given by Christ, not only to the keepers and the neighboring city, sent to the whole world ; showing that he had overcome death in its own dominions, and like a conqueror, lifted up his head above all his enemies. Again Christ's body was raised from the dead to be glorified and crowned with honor. Oh ! it was a joyful day to him ; and so will the resurrection of the saints be to them the day of the gladness of their hearts ; it will be said to them in that morning, "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust," Isa. 26 : 19.

If you are regenerated, born in a new nature to God for we are "begotten again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Christ's resurrection is the ground-work of our hope ; and the new birth is our title or evidence of our interest in it, so that until our souls are partakers of the spiritual resurrection from the death of sin. We can have no assurance that our bodies shall be partakers of that blessed resurrection to life, "Blessed and holy is he, that hath part in the first resurrection. On such the second death hath no power." Let not unregenerate souls expect a comfortable meeting with their bodies again Rise, they shall by God's terrible citation, at the sound of the trump, but not to the same end that the saints arise, they, and they only, who are sanctified by the Spirit, shall have a joyful resurrection, if you be lead with Christ, you shall live again by the life of Christ. "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection," Rom. 6 : 5. Some refer to the Jews and Gentiles who grow together like branches upon the same root, but I rather understand it with reference to Christ and believers, who are in other scriptures said to suffer together and be glorified together ; to die together, and live together ; to be crucified together and buried together ; all showing the communion they have with Christ, both in his death and in his life. Now, if the power of Christ's death, that, is the mortifying influence of it, has been exerted upon our hearts, killing their lusts, deadening their affections, and subduing their appetites, then the power of his life or resurrection, shall come upon our dead withered bodies, to revive and raise them up, to live with him in glory. If your hearts and affections be now with Christ in heaven, your bodies in due time shall be there also and conformed to his glorious body, "for our conversation is in heaven from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his own glorious body." Phil. 3 : 20, 21. The body is here called vile, or the body of our vileness, not as God made it, but as sin marred it, not absolutely, and in itself, but relatively and in comparison, with what it will be at the resurrection. Then those scattered bones and dispersed dust, will be in the best and newest fashion, even like to Christ's glorious body, whereof we have this evidence, that our conversation is already heavenly, the temper, frame, and disposition of our souls is already so; therefore the frame and temper of our bodies in due time shall be so. If you strive now to attain the resurrection of the dead, no doubt it shall be yours. This was Paul's great desire that by any means he might attain unto the resurrection from the dead. Phil. 3 : 11. He means not simply a resurrection from the dead, for that all men shall attain, but that complete holiness and perfection which shall attend the resurrection of the just; so it is explained, verse 12th, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life." The person, matter, manner, and end must be good. The apostle Paul closing his argument, in behalf of the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, with this solemn exhortation, 1 Cor. 15 : 58, with which I also close, "Therefore my beloved brethren be ye steadfast unmovable always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord. Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift."

An Explanation of Corinthians 11: 16.

"But if any man seem to be contedtious, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God."

This language of itself is not hard to undertand; but to reconcile it with the construction which brethren put on the preceding verses, is beyond my ability. The phrase "seems to be contentious" literally means to disapprove off, disagree with, dislike, and it may signify to attempt to inforce without authority. The churches of (authorized by) God were the Jewish and Christian. "We have no such custom" as whom? As the Jews and Greeks had; not a religious custom, or ordinance, but just such a custom as fifty years ago constrained every mother in this country to provide a cap for her babe, and every bride one as a part of her wedding costume—a fashion that constrained their women to be vailed, which in Paul's time was looked upon as an emblem or token of their submission to their fathers or husbands, and was probably laid aside by those who left the Jew and embraced heathenism; thus it would be a custom in contradistinction to heathenism. Paul was a Jew and long acquainted with the custom, and seems to be partial toward it, probably from the above consternation, and partly because he saw reason for it in our creation; but certainly he did not intend to have it established as a custom or ordinance to be observed by Christians. This idea is in harmony with the 13th verse, "Judge in yourselves, is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?" As looks best to you so do Otherwise Paul must have intended to call contention a custom, ("If any man seem to be contentious we have no such custom"), which is not likely; for customs are things established by a more or less common usage and consent, while contentions are incidental.

I have seen three, and only three, translations of this 16th verse. The one in our common version I have tried to explain. Here are the other two.

"But if any person puts himself forward as a defender of these points, let him know that we have no such custom either among the Jews or the churches of Christ."—Bogster Cottage Bible, page 1272, note.

"But if any one thinks to be contentious in defence of such a custom, let him know that it is disallowed by me, (literally, that neither I nor the churches of God admit of such a custom) and by all the churches of God. —Life and Epistles of St. Paul, page, 446.

We understand by this that they had no such custom as any part of their worship or devotion; for history asserts that there was such a custom (fash on) among the Jews and Greeks, as is above referred to, and Paul in this chapter, virtually admits enough to prove the history correct.

What I write, I write in the love of truth; and if any one can prove me wrong in love do so; but it will depend on the spirit and merit of your proof whether I reply.

I am not one of those who oppose investigation; for if we hold a doctrine or custom that will bear investigating in the light of the Gospel, it will gain by being investigated; if it will not, it is only a stumbling block, and had better be dropped at once.

Brethren, one and all, let us be "Determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified."

Under the word Lutherans, this language occurs, "The Lutherans, however, of all Protestants, are said to differ least from the Romish church." This in my estimation is entirely a mistake. I have been at Catholic, Episcopal, German Reformed, and Lutheran meetings, saw their modes of worship, heard their men preach, and I am led to believe that both the Episcopal and the German Reformed churches come nearer the Catholic than the Lutheran; and of the two, the Episcopal comes next in order to the Catholic.

The Episcopal, or what in Europe is called the high church in England, I think is rather a change or revision made on the Catholic. In both churches a preacher is a priest. In the German Reformed and Lutheran, he is a minister. Among the German Methodist, or united brethren, and, and German Baptists, or Brethren he is a preacher.

Curiosities of the Bible.

A man who was condemned to solitary confinement for life in a prison, relieved the tediousness of the years by ascertaining the following facts:

The Bible contains 3,586,489 letters, 773,692, words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books. The word "and" occurs 46,277 times; the word "Lord" occurs 1,855 times; the word "reverend" occurs but once, which is in the 9th verse of the 111th Psalm. The middle verse is the 8th verse of the 118th Psalm. The 21 verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the Alphabet with the exception of the letter J. The finest chapter to read is the 26th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The 19th chapter of II Kings and the 32d chapter of Isaiah are alike. The longest verse is the 8th chapter of Esther The shortest verse is the 35th of the 11th chapter of St John. The 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st verses of the 107th Psalm are alike. All the verses of the 126th Psalm end alike. There are no words or names of more than six syllables.

Behind Time.

For some weeks past we have been several days behind time, in getting our paper to press, and consequently also late in mailing it to our subscribers. This irregular appearance of the COMPANION, though unavoidable, gave rise to considerable disappointment, dissatisfaction, and complaint. We are indeed sorry that it so occured, and are doing our utmost to regain the time, and we hope soon to do so; meanwhile we beg of our readers to bear with us. A few words of explanation in regard to the numbering and dating of the COMPANION may relieve some of our readers. Numbers 20 and 21, through mistake, were both dated May 21. Those who look only at the date of their papers, paying no attention to the numbering, supposed that they had missed a number of the COMPANION, when they really did not.

Again No. 24 was dated June 11; and No. 25, June 25. Thus we passed over, or missed, one week in June: on the 18th of June we published no paper at all. Missing this week, and being detained more than a week besides, by the giving out of our boiler and engine, made a longer interval than many of our readers could endure, and hence we have had the opportunity—if not pleasure—of reading quite a number of complaints. These complaints, many of which were unnecessary, useless, and out of place, are no doubt as unpleasant to us as the irregular appearance of the paper is to our readers. Besides this, we could not control the circumstances which gave rise to this irregularity, while, on the other hand, complaints are subject to the will of him who makes them, and can be modified to suit his spirit. May we not hope for less of it?

If any numbers are missing, we hope our subscribers will notify us of the fact, always stating the Nos. that are missing, and if we can, we will supply them cheerfully.

Information Wanted.

Jesse Kauffman, of McVeytown, Pa., left his home about the 30th of May, with team and wagon to purchase wool for Frank & Son, of Lewistown, Pa. He left his team at Newton Hamilton, saying he had to go to Huntingdon for some money, and would return on the next day; but up to this time he has not been heard from. Search has been made, but in vain. Fears are entertained that he has been foully dealt with. ANY information concerning him will be thankfully received by his wife, Sarah Kauffman, McVeytown, Pa.

A Paper for the Masses.

The (Pittsburgh, Pa.,) Real Estate Register comes to us this week enlarged to a beautiful sixteen page, sixty-four column, illustrated weekly, with the name changed to the AMERICAN LAND AND LAW ADVISOR. The original features introduced into the old paper by its publishers caused it to be sought after by persons in all parts of the United States, and thus encouraged by public patronage, the publishers determine to give to the people a paper every way worthy of the name they have chosen for their new weekly. The AMERICAN LAND AND LAW ADVISOR is a "Weekly Journal of Real Estate, Finance, Building, and Popularization of Law." The issue before us is absolutely a necessity to every landed proprietor or real estate owners in the country, as well as to every citizen in the United States that wishes to keep posted on that indestructible element of value—REAL ESTATE. The law department of this excellent weekly is edited by the ablest law counsellors in the country, and answer, free of charge, all questions of law submitted to the paper with clearness and accuracy that makes them understood by men of the most ordinary intelligence. This feature alone should cause it to be taken by every farmer and land owner in the country. The illustrations on the first page of original designs for cottages and suburban residences, got'en up expressly for this journal is also a feature that commends itself to those about to build, and if we are to judge the future by the first issue, now before us, we should say it alone was worth many times more than the subscription price. The weekly correspondence from the General Land Office at Washington, D. C., giving the latest laws governing the Public Lands, Homestead and Pre-emption, as well as those from all parts of the country,—is also a valuable feature: to say nothing of its news and general information found in no other journal in the United States. To crown all, the enterprising publishers offer, by way of inducing an examination and subscription, a beautiful $5.00 Chromo, of either of the following subjects: "The Lost Babe," or "The Unwelcome Visitor"; all for the exceedingly low price of $2.50 a year, embracing a beautiful parlor picture and over 800 pages of useful reading matter, and illustrations. We would say to all our readers, send stamp for a sample copy. Address CROFT & PHILLIPS, Publishers American Land and Law Advisor, Pittsburg, Pa.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

J. W. BEER, My Dear Brother: Allow me once more to lay some church news before the many readers of the C. F. C., of which you have the honor of being the chief editor at this time, which must be quite a notable position, especially when the paper is behind time. If you receive as many letters proportionately from the many subscribers of the COMPANION, inquiring after its whereabouts, as I do in my visits among them, you cannot help but receive letters sufficient to keep the assistant editress engaged all the time in reading and answering letters. I might offer my services in the office, but I think I can do more outside in pacifying your patrons. I however learned yesterday that you are about getting all things into good working order again; the boiler and engine are now working nicely; and I understand the water arrangement is also in working order again. Now then, since this is so, had you not better take the time and give your readers a short history of your troubles. I think we, as the disappointed readers of the C. F. C., could bear with your mishaps in the machinery, &c., better. Think not that I am dictating because I think you know not your own business: I do this, because I have at heart the prosperity of the paper, and I, for one, my dear brother, am willing to help bear with you the dissatisfactions and the censures that are coming up almost from all quarters in regard to this matter. I would say to the patrons of your paper, (in this case especially), "Let patience have her perfect work;" all will come right again soon.

But, my dear brother, when I took up my pen it was with the intention of giving some church news. After I returned from W. Va., I remained a few days at home, and then took up my baggage for a trip to Westmoreland Co., Pa., to assist in holding a lovefeast with the brethren there. Brother Beer, of the COMPANION office, was to assist me. He left Dale City on Thursday morning, the 4th, to meet his family at Pittsburg. I started on Friday morning, the 5th, expecting to meet brother Beer at Broad Ford, a station on the P. W. B. R. W. I arrived there about an hour and a half before the train that he was to be on arrived. When the train stopped, Brother Beer did not make his appearance. Soon after this I took the train on the Mt. Pleasant branch, and at 11 o'clock I arrived at my brother's house, all by myself, to attend to a big meeting, and not well in body. In the afternoon I attended a Council Meeting. Business came off nicely and satisfactorily. Returned to my brother's again.

Next day we repaired to the place of meeting, which was on the farm and in the barn of brother —— Meyers, (I think John, generally called Coke Meyers, from the fact that he is largely engaged in that business). People commenced gathering from all quarters, but no strange preachers until after the examination services were over, when brethren D. D. Horner and James Bennett from Indian Creek branch arrived—brother F. Murray from the same place was there before services commenced, but being a youth in the service, he declined laboring.

It was said, by some, that the Brethren could not hold a feast at this place, from the fact that Bridgeport, a village principally made up of miners, &c., and Mt. Pleasant, were near to the place, and perconsequence the order would be bad. But to the credit of the citizens of both place and vicinity be it said, a more orderly Love-feast Meeting it was never my lot to attend before. It was a remarkably good meeting. Just in the same way was the conduct in all our meetings there among those people. May God bless them abundantly for the same. The members had quite a refreshing time among them, and I trust there were some impressions made among those people that may result in good to their souls. On Monday I returned home, arrived at 1 o'clock P. M., found all well. Brethren & friends of Westmoreland & Fayette counties, accept of my heartfelt thanks for the kindness and respect you manifested toward me while in your midst.

The ministers at the above place are A. Summy and F. Winter; both somewhat young in the ministry. It would be very acceptable on their part, and on the part of the church, if some of the traveling ministers would tarry with them and preach for the brethren at Jacob's Creek. I do think some good would result from it. The church is in a healthy condition at the above place. Brethren go and see for yourselves.

C. G. LINT.

Brother Editor: I see in the present No. of the C. F. C. that brother H. R. Holsinger is travelling for his health. We would be much pleased if he would pay us a visit on his way home, as I have some matters of business with him; and besides, we want to hear him preach. We live 6 miles North of Vincennes, Ind. Please let me know when you would be there if you possibly can come; for if the Lord spares me and my family, we want to start for California and Oregon in the Spring; and I would be much pleased to see you before I go. May the Lord strengthen you, both spiritually and physically, is my prayer.

J. B. ALLENSWORTH.

Dear Brother: I also take this opportunity of asking an explanation upon the supper which we eat before the communion, as I am at a loss to understand perfectly whether this should absolutely be practiced in the church or not, and whether the supper which Christ and the disciples took before washing feet was taken in or out of the church. Please give me an explanation upon 1 Corinthians 11: 20—34, as I understand by this portion of scripture that it is not proper to eat in the church, or that, if we eat to appease our appetites, we should eat at home, &c., not despising the church of God.

Also concerning the cap which the sisters wear. Please point me the portion of scripture from which this is taken.

Also give me an explanation upon the 5th, 6th, 10th, 13th, and 15th verses of the chapter above named. In the first place I understood these things as they are practiced in the church; but upon a reconsideration I am bothered to look upon it in the same light. Perhaps I do not understand correctly, but I am very anxious to have your explanation.

Yours respectfully,

ROSS R. KING.

Brethren Editors:—This fine Sunday morning finds me alone in my tent on the shore of the mighty Pacific, and thinking I might write something of interest to your readers I embrace the opportunity. You see I am in the most remote part of the United States, far in fact from any place, for our neighbor's live at least seven miles, these being the closest. I, like the children of Israel, dwell in a tent, and find it a pleasant and interesting domicile in fine weather; my occupation being that of an aid to the U. S. Coast Survey, under Captain A. W. Chase. Do not infer that this is of a belligerent nature, but one of peace, the object being to "map the coast" so as ships may know how to avoid rocks and bars. Ship masters look well to these charts, and will not come close to the coast without one; they being wiser than most of mortal men who have the gospel chart, the New Testament, to guide them; but alas! how few is the number that look well to that well-established and glorious map of the road, the dangerous places on the road to that celestial port, but go, as it were, with a map and chart of their own invention, and sooner or later are wrecked, not on the rocky cliffs of the ocean, but in the gulf of "dark despair," where no anchor and stay can ever be of use to them, and where the lamp of the light-house, Jesus, can never more be a beacon to warn them off from the dangerous places, but their vessels are wrecked and they are lost! lost! lost! How recreant men are to their highest interest. How opportunities are spurned, and how at the end of the voyage the roarings of the awful sea of eternity must sound in their ears as they near the breakers and are engulfed in woe without end!

I wrote you last from San Francisco, in which I gave you a short account of my journey to there. After remaining in that "Sodom" for 12 days, I took ship for Crescent City, California, and had a very rough voyage, but landed safely in the port, and since have been on terra firma, for the fact is I have no affinity for a "life on the ocean wave:" it makes me sick That man, I can't recall his name now, but he was a Spaniard, who first viewed this ocean and called it Pacific, was certainly an idiot. Pacific; yes, yes, if you call anything pacific that roars like thundering, jostles the vessels so that they rock fore and aft, and bunk up and down, and ever and anon a huge wave dashes over the boat, the waves rising like mountains and making all manner of fantastic gyrations, then I don't know what pacific means, for in order to meet the facts about this ocean you must make or give another definition to that word. I have heard people say that a ride on the ocean was so pleasant and exhilarating. Now my experience is that it is bosh, for of all places in the world, and of all manner of locomotion, that of the sea to me is the least desirable, but there is no accounting for tastes, but I think that I know mine and that is, I like land travel, and shall not indulge much if I can help it in travel by water, unless I have an assurance of calm weather.

I can as yet give no description of this country, for I have seen but little of it. The valleys in this part of the State are small and not very productive, most of this country being mountains, the coast range extending up the coast, but is at intervals of ten to twenty miles, in passes, back of which lie the valleys. This country of mountains has but one redeeming quality, which is so desirable, and that is it is quite healthy. The days are pleasantly warm, and the nights almost cold, for you will have to use quite thick covering to keep warm; but this is pleasant, for sleep you can with pleasure, which is not the case in the states. This country has another great drawback—"the rainy season." I will say no more of the country at this time, but that I am well pleased with it. So far, my health has improved very much. I have traveled over a great deal of country this spring, and have had a pleasant time, no accidents in the 2500 miles. I am a stranger in a strange land, but have found some new friends, but I sometimes wish I was back with my friends in Missouri. Thoughts of "home" with my old friend Judge Froman and others, often come to my mind; but I am far away from them, and may see none of them this side of eternity. Have as yet seen none of the Brethren. Will brother D. Bowers write and give me his address? I do not get the COMPANION now, for I am on the move most of the time, but would like to hear from the brethren or friends. Please write to Crescent City, Delnorte County, California, that being my nearest post-office (40 miles.) I will write again in a few weeks. Love to all.

J. S. MCFADDEN.

Letter to Brother Jacob A. Miller, State Centre, Iowa.

Dear Brother and Family: Your letter of recent date, came duly to hand; and in reply will say that I should indeed be very happy to meet with you at your contemplated love-feast, if time and means would allow, but the distance is too great to go, as I would have to neglect too much of my work here. I am doing dentistry alone again and consequently I am a good deal tied-fast. I will however try to say a few things to John S. in regard to the Seventh-day adventists. First, the advent doctrine, that is the second personal coming of Christ, to reign on the earth, is, and always has been, a doctrine that the Brethren believe in just as strong as any set of advents in the world; in fact, if that doctrine is not true there is no truth; for there is nothing more plainly taught in the Bible. Hence, he can gain nothing in that direction by joining them. But as regards the Sabbath-day, I cannot see what he would gain in that direction; as the fact is, if you come down to a nice point, there is not one syllable in all the New Testament directly requiring us to keep any day as a Sabbath. And when men come prating around, and judge us in regard to the Sabbath, they expressly violate a positive command in the New Testament which you will find in Col. 2: 16, where Paul classes it with other things, "a shadow of things to come." I would here say, that Paul does not mean any of those festival days of the Old Testament as is generally claimed, for a correct reading is simply the Sabbath. The word days, is in italics, a mark that it was added by the translators and is not in the original text. We however read that the disciples came together to worship on the first day of the week, see John, 20: 19—26; Acts, 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 2, and many other places. The inference is clear that they did this in memory of the glorious resurrection of our Lord. Again, we are commanded by Paul, in the 13th of Romans, to be subject to the rulers or higher powers, and as the law of our land requires us to abstain from labor on the first day of the week, we deem it entirely necessary to do so.

Taking all things into account, I don't see what any of us would gain in uniting with the advents. But, on the other hand, is there not much danger of losing much? Do the advents keep the other commandments of the gospel? Do they for instance keep the Feast of Charity, which we hold as a New Testament ordinance in anticipation of the very event that is so intimately connected with the glorious advent of the Lord and his kingdom? Here I must quote a few verses entire, for their special benefit; for I am persuaded they dont understand their own ground, see Rev. 19: 6—9, "And I heard, as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thundering: Saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the Marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, white and clean; for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints. And he saith unto me, Unite, Blessed are they which are called unto the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God." Now let us ponder in our minds: are those who style themselves the adventists, really the true adventists of the gospel? Do they keep the type in their organization that shadows forth the glorious event of which they have so much to say? The foregoing is only one of the many passages that I would refer them to if space would permit; but I think it is enough to show to friend John, that here is one thing at least he may lose by uniting with them. And I would further appeal to his candor, whether there are not many more things he might lose, while it is quite certain there is nothing to gain. Tell him to read Ephesians 4: 14, as follows, "That we be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the slights of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."

P. J. BROWN.

Congress, Ohio.

Brother H. R. Holsinger: I am pressed to say something that may lead to the destruction of chewing and smoking tobacco. Should the article come before the readers of the COMPANION, those that use the filthy weed; that troublesome plant, so disgraceful in the minds of good society. May the day come that all will be enlightened to worship the only true one, God, and lay aside all filthiness of evil spirits. May the article not be disreputed, I hope something may be profited. I will for a moment but descend in the scale of worshipers, and the gods they worship. Go with me across the way. There stands upon the shelf the decanter, sparkling with liquid fire; and around it more than a score of worshippers; some well dressed, others in tatter and rags. One says, "I have drank liquor for twenty years, and I never saw that hurt me. I have chewed tobacco for so many years, and I never saw that it hurt me." I think that if it has not hurt him, perhaps it has his poor old, tattered coat, or his poor wife and children at home. The god tobacco has become one of the most exalted gods of the age. It is worshipped by men of every caste, the high, the low, the rich, the poor, the free, the bond, the male, and the female. This god, though thousands of human victims are offered annually upon his altars, has a daily-increasing crowd of devotees. Let us look this thing in the face. Let us suppose a case. Here is a minister that has an appointment to preach. He is strongly addicted to the use of tobacco. Take it from him twenty-four hours beforehand, and what sort of a sermon would he preach? The church appoints a prayer-meeting, and the members are tobacco users. Take it away from them twenty-four hours beforehand, and what sort of a prayer-meeting do you suppose they would have? The lawyer has a case in law to plead. Take away his tobacco, and what sort of a plea would he make? The judge is upon the bench. Take away his tobacco, and what condition would he be in to administer justice? The physician is called to the bedside of the sick. Take away his tobacco, and what condition would he be in to deal out medicine to his patients? Now the consent of all is, that they could do nothing. They would be in no condition whatever to engage in the duties or preceding, mentioned. Then what is the propelling, soul-inspiring spirit upon which they depend? It is the spirit of tobacco. Then tobacco is their god. What then? Tobacco preaches; tobacco prays; tobacco pleads law; tobacco executes justice; tobacco deals out medicine; and we have a tobacco administration, civil and religious. Therefore, dear friends, it is no wonder that Justice has run riot, and equiety has fallen in the streets. When we see the God of heaven, the Creator of all things, rejected, and his law, the ten commandments which are a perfect rule of right, set aside, and the faith of Jesus, which is the only remedy for sin, set aside, and in their stead all these gods of earth, of science, of literature, of merchandise, of agriculture, of alcohol, of tobacco, &c., brought in. It is no wonder that the ignorant are condemned, and they quietly go free. Now let us contrast with these, a community of real Christians who worship the only living and true God, by keeping his commandments, and the faith of his Son Jesus Christ. Who love God with all their heart. And their neighbors as themselves. What a union! What peace! What a desirable place to live in! All looking upon others as better than their own. There is no lying, no cheating, no stealing, no murder: But all is peace. On the other hand, in a community of the worshippers of the various other gods, selfishness prevails, each exalts his own god, all is confusion. They riot; they kill; talk about other people or their neighbors; they steal; they lie; they cheat; they get drunk; they wallow in the filth of their tobacco. What a contrast! Yet this last is the state of things as they exist at the present time. Oh tobacco! tobacco! TOBACCO! Thy spirit is the god of remorse. And he who is deceived by it is walking in the path of error.

Brother Henry: Will you, or some other brother, inform me through the C. F. C. whether there is any established church near Bunker Hill, Russell Co., Kansas. There are eight members of our fraternity living between Bunker Hill, and Wilson Station, at a place called Pennsylvania; and we would be very glad to have some ministering brethren to call and preach for us.

Any person wishing to emigrate to Kansas, would do well to call and see our land. We think we have good land and water. We dug 10 wells from the depth of 12 to 40 feet. There is still some land for homesteaders or pre-emptors. Also railroad land for sale. We hope and pray that some minister may settle here, and preach for us.

Yours in love,

WM. B. HIMES.

To the Churches Composing the North Mo., District.

Inasmuch as our State has been divided into two districts at last State District Meeting, it will be necessary to make some arrangements for our next District Meeting to be held in the northern part of the State. The Missouri river is the dividing line; hence all the churches North of the Missouri river belong to the North Missouri District, and all South of the river to South Missouri District. We have 9 or 10 organized churches within the bounds of the North Missouri District, and in one of these organized churches our next District Meeting should be held. We therefore offer a few suggestions:

1. A church as central as we can find should call for the meeting.

2. The time and place should be made known as soon as convenient.

3. Our District Meetings should be held at least from 4 to 6 weeks prior to the time of our A. M.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us pray for the prosperity of the church, the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom, and the promotion of peace love and union, until we all shall be permitted to meet in the kingdom of immortal glory with all the redeemed and sanctified, through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

GEORGE WITWER.

Dear Brother: Please announce that, if Providence permit, there will be a communion meeting in the Cowanshannock district, Armstrong Co., Pa., on the evening of Oct. 12th, to which there is a general invitation extended to all who may desire to be with us on that occasion, and especially the ministering brethren. By order of the church.

J. P. HETRIC.

JULY 1st, 1872.

Dear Companion: Feeling induced, sometime ago, to visit certain of our dear brethren, and for the first assumed the prerogative of talking a little for Jesus, I merely wrote out a few references, that I might not lose my connection in a peculiar train of thoughts marked out, originated for the benefit of those who might be willing to hear me. I have since discovered that there has been more unfavorable comment upon the few harmless references, which did not engage my attention very closely, than upon the substance derived by their assistance, or the wholesome doctrine I brought, in my weakness, for our mutual benefit and the edification and salvation of souls, yet breathing under the blighting influences of sin and iniquity. I am inclined to think we observe the bitter shell without appreciating the flavor of the kernel. Prejudice often destroys the virtue emanating from the effort conscienciously used by others, in whatever character it may be employed, too frequently where no cause for it exists.

I stand firmly in opposition to read sermons, and just as firmly in favor of some matured preparation of thought upon some especial subject, so that, if called upon we may be enabled to investigate it properly without having it disconnected, thereby rendering it unintelligible and ineffectual in producing the desired results.

The expression of disapprobation does not intimidate me in the least, as I feel no compunctions of conscience from any strictures emanating from a thus saith the Lord; believing that whatsoever we do heartily as unto the Lord, in giving those whom we may address the benefit of our solemn reflections, there are adversities of gifts but, the same spirit; and there are differences of administration, but the same Lord, that worketh within us to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Hence if I indite a few references with the assistance and direction of this same Spirit, that should attend us in all our administration of holy things, and if in our efforts we employ this means to assist a treacherous memory, who can object or impute it to any undue motive, or characterize it with the loss of efficacy, or defend their disapprobation from an evangelical standpoint.

I anticipate your response in some degree—"Take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour speak ye; for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost." This might be overwhelming evidence against my position, had it not references to an especial event which the Lord knew would occur; that they should be delivered up to counsels, and in the synagogue they should be beaten, &c. Hence I do not regard this as having any relevance at all to the case, as the Lord only endeavors to comfort them under these trying circumstances, by giving them the assurance that the Holy Ghost should give them utterance, not in any peculiar formation of words, but that the substance was given them to clothe in their own language We must not forget that he was talking to his inspired mediums, who afterward indited the scriptures as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, which gave them utterance on the occasion referred to. We do not claim inspiration in the same measure the apostles enjoyed it. Our hearts are inspired with a sense of gratitude and duty, through God's holy, revealed will, given by the mouth of inspiration. Whilst their instructions were direct from God, ours are received indirectly through his divine witnesses; hence we have his written word, from which we are to make our deductions, from the language in when it has been clothed to the best of the abilities the Lord has given us, asking the assistance of the Holy Spirit to enlighten us, that we may be filled with a knowledge of his will, in all wisdom, and spiritual understanding. Does the Spirit bid you declare his word without any premature thought or preparation? all right, no objection; and if the same Spirit's administrations induce me to make some preparation for the same divine purpose, as the propositions occur to my mind, for fear I may lose sight of them, I indite them upon a strip of paper, that they may recur the more readily to my mind. In my effort to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation, must I stand condemned in the estimation of my brethren who may not think as I do—who may be perfectly honest in their deductions? Still I think such preconceived opinions should be open to conviction. Such uncontrovertible prejudices savor a little of inconsistency, when examined from a divine stand-point, and fall harmless at my feet. Feeling happily conscious of having done no violence to my feelings, or the word of God, I rest content Not wishing to be circumscribed within such narrow and contracted limits, I am fraternally yours,

PETER S. NEWCOMER.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Buffalo Branch, Livingston county, Ill., May 28th, ORLANDA WILLIAM, infant son of brother Abraham and sister Elizabeth Dale, aged one year 3 months and 8 days. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, from Matthew 19 : 13, 14.

Jonathan Swihart.

In the Black River congregation, Van Buren county, Mich., July 2nd, CALFINIA W. GRILLS, daughter of friend Henry and sister Susannah; aged 2 years 5 months and 23 days. Disease scarlet fever. Funeral occasion improved by J. D. Mast and the writer to a good attendance.

J. W. Gephart.

Lower Conawago church, York county, Pa., July 6th, sister MARY, wife of Elder Joseph Meyers; aged 59 years 19 days. She was the mother of six sons and one daughter, all grown and married; three are ministers in the church. Her disease was something like consumption, lingering nearly a year. She bore it patiently till death took her away. The church can say, we have lost a good mother and a dear sister. She was buried in the brethren's burying ground at the Bermudian church. Funeral services by Elder Andrew Miller and the writer, from Rev. 19 : 9, to a large concourse of people, who came to mourn with those who mourn, and weep with those that weep.

Thomas Gray.

In the Clover Creek branch, Blair county Pa., June 13th, brother JOHN D. BRUMBAUGH; aged 57 years 4 months 20 days. Deceased was a son of Elder G. Brumbaugh, and son-in law of the writer. Disease, typhoid pneumonia, of which he had the fourth attack. Being naturally delicate and brashy, he saw but little pleasure in this world, so far as health and prosperity are concerned; for affliction and disappointments were almost their daily family guests. He served faithfully in the office of deacon some 6 or 7 years; leaves a lonely widow and six small children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. Funeral services by brother G.W. Brumbaugh, from Isaiah 38 : 1.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "L., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Grave.

How soothing is the thought of death to earths weary traveler, when life's gayest scenes have departed, and gloom of years hangs heavily over the past! Yes, the thought falls softly upon us, when in life's decline, as dew on the earliest flowers of spring, or the memories of childhood on the heart-stricken wanderer; as calm, too, and refreshing in its kindly influences as they.

In such moments, when we read on the page of memory those things we vainly strive to forget, how often do we turn to the grave for consolation, pleased with the reflection that grief enters not the tomb. When the heart is tired of the sorrows which beset our path; when the generous feelings of youth are chilled by the frost of time, death is shorn of its terrors, and we look to the grave as the mansion of a friend.

In early life we deem this world beautiful—its scenes are those of pleasure and delight. Hope, the fair deceiver, springs up in the breast and whispers her flattering tale. By her skillful lures we seem what we are not; but experience soon teaches that all our fancied enjoyments, in their very nature, are transitory and unsatisfying. Such thoughts as these are but too well calculated to cast a shade over our brightest hours, and even in youth to impress upon our imaginings the seal of age, to blight the promising harvest of expectation, and cause the buds of hope to wither ere they blossom.

The dim realities of the past seem to be brought nigh; the present is beclouded. By the remembrance of happier hours; all the bright illusions of the future seem formed to fade. Pleasure, the object of our fond pursuit, has ever eluded our grasp—promise has ever ended in disappointment; and, weary of life, its turmoils and cares, we look forward with complacency to that period when the tomb shall receive us and close its no longer gloomy portals over humanity's pale wreck. The grave! how peaceful its rest! how congenial its silence! There the head is softly pillowed at last— the brain no more sends forth the busy legions of fancy—the voice of dreams cannot penetrate its recesses; for there the reveries of the dreamer shall cease forever.

Reader, art thou familiar with thy last resting-place? does the contemplation excite no bitter emotion? Or have you drunk deeply of the cup of sorrow, and feel that the bitterness of of death is past? Have you been the sport of passion, the mock of wayward fortune? Here is rest, child of oppression, here is your refuge. The crowding recollections of the past intrude not here—the fleeting chimeras of the present, and the "thick coming fancies" of the future are alike unknown—silence, deep and universal, holds here its unbounded sway. And yet the the grave is not terrible—we should not shrink from its chill embrace; for there we may find the tranquility which has been the object of our fondest desires—the rest for which we have so often yearned.

It is true, there is something appalling in the preparations for our last journey. The sombre hues of the mourning garb, the sound of the deep toned bell, breaking on the still air as a requiem for the departed spirit; the sobs of those we love, the measured step of friends in the funeral train, are all calculated to make the soul shrink back to its citadel, and the desires of life to be again renewed. Yet why start? When we become the cause of this solemn pomp we shall not heed it, not a single emotion will be awakened by the sorrows of those who mourn. The grave yard will soon be deserted, the tears of affection will soon pass from the cheeks, and amid our silent companions we soon shall be forgotten. The dead are all around us—the garrulous tongue of age is as silent as that of the infant at his side, who passed to the tomb ere the tongue knew its office: the husband rests listlessly near the wife of his youth; and even the lover has forgotten the charms of her whom he adored, whose dust now unconsciously mingles with his own. The solitary is now a recluse among thousands the retirement of his cell is now exceeded by the silence which broods over him. Pride has forgotten its dignity, and humility its preserver. Wealth asks not the homage of thousands, but seeks as lowly a bed as poverty itself. No clamor for place or distinction—all here is equality, silence, and gloom. All earth's myriads are fast thronging that path; its portals are thrown wide to receive the travelers who are passing their way to its dreary mansions. Time flies, earth fades, and they sink into its cold recesses. The aged man, leaning on his staff, looks wistfully for his long-sought rest; sprightly youth and manhood's prime tend thitherward, and the grave is the last goal of human attainment. O grave! thou art a solemn teacher, thy warnings far transcend all other voices. Yet welcome, thrice welcome; we die but to live—we slumber but to wake in a cloudless day; for the death of the body is but the birth of the soul.

For the Companion.

The Gates of Hell.

What did Christ mean when he said to Peter, "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it"? Math 15: 18. Did the Savior mean that the powers of darkness in this world should not prevail against it? If he did, then how are we to understand the prophet Daniel, when he speaks of the fourth beast that he saw in his vision? Speaking of the fourth beast, which is the last beast, whose look was more stout than his fellows, he said, "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most high; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom," (which will be after the resurrection). Daniel 7: 21, 22. Now these two passages of scripture seem to contradict each other. The Savior says, "Shall not prevail against his church," and Daniel says, "they shall, till they posess the kingdom, which will only be possessed after the resurrection." Hence we are forced to the conclusion that the Savior did not mean, that the power of darkness in this life should not prevail against the church; for he always agreed with the prophets, and said all that they have spoken must be fulfiled.

How then, shall we understand what the Savior meant? I see of no other way than to understand the Savior to mean the grave, when he said, "The gates of hell." For David in speaking of Christ says, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither will he suffer his holy one to see corruption. "Hezekiah, who was sick unto death, said after his recovery, "In the cutting off of my days I shall go to the gates of the grave;" and David calls the grave hell. Having these two saying of the prophets together, we can prove the gates of hell to be the grave. But Christ, who knew all things, knew how the wicked would prevail over his followers, and persecute them even unto death, and knowing that death was an appointment which they all had to fulfill, gave Peter that encouragement that the grave should not always hold them; for he had the power over the grave, and that the gates of hell,(meaning the grave) shall not prevent him from establishing his church here on earth, when he comes to reign a thousand years; for when he arose from the dead, he unlocked the gates of death and hell, and took with him the keys; for when he appeared unto John on the Isle of Patmos, he said, "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold I am alive forevermore Amen: and have the keys of death and hell." And when he comes again, he will bring up his people out of their graves, and place them in the land promised to Abraham. Then will we "come to Mt. Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born which are written in heaven." Now we think that "the assembly" of his church, here spoken of, is what the Savior meant when he said the gates of hell should not prevail against it. If Peter had understood the Savior to mean that the powers of darkness which then were in the world should not prevail against his church, of which he was a permanent member and bishop, what must he have thought when, by that power, he was crucified with his head downwards? Next is the nineteenth verse of the same chapter, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingodm of heaven." This he did when he gave the understanding of the gospel of the kingdom; for he said it was given to them to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God. But they did not do as the lawyers and Pharisees did, take away the keys to pre vent others from entering into a knowledge of it. O no! they went every where preaching the word; and when they believed Phillip's preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. And Peter got still a further knowledge of the kingdom of God on the Holy Mount, and he afterwards tells his brethren, that he had not followed cunningly devised fables, when he made known unto them the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; but that they were eye-witness of his majesty, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, this is my beloved Son hear him. "And whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." We believe that the power to bind here spoken of is the same power spoken of in Acts 1: 8, "But you shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and the power here spoken of seems to be an understanding of the times and seasonss of the kingdom they had been inquiring about. And after the Holy Ghost came upon them, then they were fully qualified to be his witnesses, and to write the gospel, and whatsoever they made binding in it, while they were here on earth, was bound in heaven; and whatsoever they loosed in it, while here on earth, was loosed in heaven. But some say—brethren and sisters, too—that the church to-day has that power, and always has had it, from the apostle down. I would like to know how these brethren and sisters get along when they come down the stream of time the Council of Nice. They surely will not let the Catholics have it! and I do not see how they can avoid it. LEAH CRONCE, Mechanicsburg, Ill.

Live as you Teach.

The Rev. J. F. Sergeant, writes an article to the London Sabbath School Teacher, upon the importance of following up the teachings of the life. After some examples of inconsistency among clergymen, he says:—

"As Sunday-school teachers, it is well to remind you that everybody speaks by his life as well as by his tongue. Your life will make itself known. In these times men are rated at their real value. A moral police is abroad, and it tracks you with its hundred eyes everywhere. Your sholars cross your paths at almost unlooked for moments. Here one as a page waits upon you at an evening party: there another serves you as a waiter at an eating-house; a third who is an errand-boy at the book-seller's brings you your periodicals; a fourth distributes programmes at a lecture or concert room.

"Now I do not say to you that you should study appearances, and carefully guard against being accounted as a hypocrite. I say rather that you should study realities, and seek to be everywhere and at all times a real and attractive disciple. If you are addicted to the pleasure of the table, or are irritable and cantankerous at your home, or you are vain in dress or person, or hard or unfair in your money dealings, or vindictive and fierce in your behavior to your friends, it will all come out, and every scholar connected with you will quietly apply to you the proverb, 'Physician, heal thyself.'

"I knew a teacher, wealthy and talented. His fault was that he was too eager for money, and it was the less excusable as he had no family for whom he needed to lay by. A blight seemed to rest upon his work, and when at last he invested a considerable sum in purchasing a public-house—property which was of a very low character morally, but which yielded a good return for his money,—his influence sank down to an utter cipher. I shall never forget the contempt with which one of his scholars spoke to me about him. Had he been an avowed man of the world there would have been nothing in him to be despised. But his professed aims and hopes were higher than those of the worldling, and it was humbling to him to be looking for an increase to his gains in the gutters of excess and vice. 'Perhaps he meant to improve the public-houses by introducing better tenants, and checking all bad language and bad habits.' Thank you, dear reader, for that kindly surmise. Perhaps he did; but perhaps he didn't. I dare say, however, he meant it. The devil will not in the least object to a man meaning well if he will stop there.

I know this much, that the respect of a circle of intelligent lads who gather around us to listen to what we can tell them of God and righteousness, is worth more than interest at ten per cent. upon our money investments. Pity that this good man did not know it too.

"If, however, evil example tells, so does good. The fragrance of the ointment will make itself known. An upright, loving, generous man speaks in his every act on"

What are You Going to Do?

O WHAT are you going to do, brother?
Say, what are you going to do?
You have thought of some useful labor,
But what is the end in view? [hood,
You are fresh from the home of your boy-
And just in the bloom of youth!
Have you tasted the sparkling water
That flows from the fount of truth?
Is your heart in the Savior's keeping?
Remember he died for you!
Then what are you going to do, brother?
Say, what are you going to do?

O what are you going to do, brother?
The morning of youth is past;
The vigor and strength of manhood,
My brother, are yours at last.
You are rising in wordly prospects,
And prospered in worldly things—
A duty to those less favored
The smile of your fortune brings:
Go, prove that your heart is grateful—;
The Lord has a work for you!
Then what are you going to do, brother,
Say, what are you going to do?

O what are you going to do, brother!
Your sun at its noon is high;
It shines in meridian splendor,
And rides through the cloudless sky.
You are holding a high position
Of honor, of trust and fame—
Are you willing to give the glory
And praise to your Savior's name?
The regions that sit in darkness
Are stretching their hands to you;
Then what are you going to do, brother?
Say, what are you going to do?

O what are you going to do, brother?
The twilight approaches now—
Already your locks are silvered,
And winter is on your brow.
Your talent, your time, your riches,
To Jesus, your Master, give;
Then ask if the world around you,
Is the better because you live.
You are nearing the brink of Jordan,
But still there is work for you;
Then what are you going to do, brother?
Say, what are you going to do?—Sel.

The Crosses of Life.

As a general thing, it may be expected that all christians will find themselves able to bear the great cross of life; because they come with observation; they attract notice by their magnitude, and by putting the soul on its guard gives it strength to meet them. But happy, thrice happy, is he who can bear the little crosses which ever lie in wait, and which attack us secretly, and without giving warning, like a thief in the night. While we admit that it is a duty, of ever bearing the cross, we are to remember that we must bear it just where God in his providential dealings sees fit to impose it upon us; without assuming the responsibility of either seeking or shunning it. We shall find that God has placed it in the whole course of life, and at precisely the right place, and all he requires of us is to bear it with a faithful heart when we meet it. It is good to take up and to bear the cross, whatever it may be, which God sees fit to impose. But it is not good, and not safe to make crosses of our own, and by an act of our own choice, to impose upon ourselves burdens which God does not require and does not authorize. Such a course always implies either a faith too weak, or a desire to have our own way. Many persons think they are seeking holiness, when they are in fact seeking the loaves and fishes. To be holy is to be like Christ, who as the captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. We must be willing to bear the cross, if we would wear the crown. In seeking holiness, therefore, let us think little of joy, but much of purity; little of ourselves, but much of God; little of our own will, but much of the divine will. We will choose the deepest poverty and affliction with the will of God, rather than all earthly goods and prosperities without it. It is God we seek and not happiness. If we have God he will not fail to take care of us. If we abide in him a residence in hell could not harm us. A fixed inflexible will is a great assistance in a holy life. Satan will suggest a thousand reasons, why we should yield a little to temptations by which we are surrounded. But let us ever stand fast in our purpose. A good degree of decision and tenacity of purpose is of great importance in the ordinary affairs of life. How much more so in the things of religion? He who is easily shaken will find the way of holiness difficult, perhaps impracticable. A double minded man, he who has no fixedness of purpose, no energy of will, is unstable in all his ways Ye, who walk in the narrow way, let your resolutions be unalterable. Think of the blessed Savior's words, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!" Though he was momentarily forsaken, at least so far as to be left to anguish inconceivable and unuterable, his heart nevertheless, was fixed and he could still say, "My God, my God." If we wish to rise high in God we must be willing to sink low in ourselves. It may seem like a contradiction in terms, but it is nevertheless true, that there is no elevation in true religion higher than that of profound humility. "He that would be greatest must become the least. He who was equal with God condescended to become man; and it was the beloved Son of the Most High who washed the feet of the disciples. If we would walk perfectly before God we must endeavor to do common things, such as are of every day occurrence and of but small account in the eyes of the world, in a perfect manner. Some persons are mentally so constituted, that they could more easily undergo the sufferings of martyrdom, than properly regulate and control their feelings in their families, during twenty-four hours. How dreadful is that delusion which excuses itself in its imperfections, because in the providence of God it is not permitted to do or suffer some great thing. Happy is he, who can do God's will in the solitary place, and who can win the crown without going to the stake. Many who do not love God with the whole heart, say, that they desire, that they wish so to love him. Oh blinded ones how can this possibly be! when you are obviously unwilling to renounce the pursuits and pleasures of the world, by which God is offended and separated from you? Often the water that is enclosed in a glass vessel appears to the unaided eye, clear and pure. But if a ray of bright light suddenly strikes the vessel and illuminates it, we at once discover various impurities which before escaped our notice. So our sins have many hiding places which conceal them from the natural conscience. And we should ask light from God, a clear heavenly illumination, that we may find them out. When by the instruction and admonition of others, we have done our duty faithfully, we shall be willing, if we are in a right state of heart, to leave the event with entire calmness of mind, in the hands of God. We know not what shall profit whether this or that; but we may be assured that God will do his part. Amen

The Christian Race.

"Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain." 1 Cor. 9: 24.

The apostle in addressing himself to the brethren at Corrinth in the language above quoted, is kindly, yet sharply reproving them, as they had apparently fallen into a state of lethargy, negligence, and lukewarmness. He is trying to arouse them, to stir them up again to a sense of their christian duties. They no more manifested that zeal that they formerly did. They had become contagious, they were divided and split into parties and faction. For every one would say, "I am of Paul! I am of Appolos! I am of Cephas and I am of Christ!" Paul reproved them of this, as much as to say, "Brethren, this will not do; speak the same thing, let there be no divisions among you, but be ye perfectly joined together in the same mind, in the same judgement. Has Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? know ye not?" The apostle here was directing their minds to something that they were all familiar with, namely, to the running of a foot-race a kind of sport that the Corinthians were very much addicted to in their carnal state, as race running was one of the most popular games practiced by the Corinthian athletics. It required action, fleetness, strength, endurance, sobriety, patience and perseverance. A man that would run in this race with any possible assurance of success, would necessarily have to be in possession of the foregoing qualifications; and besides all this, he must be clad and shod suitable for the occasion. To have heavy, slovenly clothes on his body, and clumsy, heavy shoes on his feet, would obviously obstruct his speed: in fact, everything that may be a hinderance or burdensome, anything that might in the least obstruct or slacken the speed and agility of the runner, must now be laid aside. The race is for the prize (crown). The term "race," as here referred to, implies an inclosure—running within certain bounds, marked out, staked off, made smooth and level, for the very purpose of running foot races. At the end of this race course, the prize, or crown, is in reservation for the one that wins—for the one that comes out first and best, will be awarded the crown. Any and every one that puts in or pays his wager, or portion, has an equal privilege with all those that are running. But all must be subject to certain rules—must run within the race course, within the stipulated bounds. Getting off the course, or even setting one foot out side, would be a forfeiture of the crown; consequently the expert runner will look well to his feet, lest he should stumble and fall. He will not stop, or stay to gaze at this, or that, or any object by the way, no matter how enticing or attractive it may seem to be. He is running in a race, he is running for a prize, for a crown of great value. This crown, his reputation, in short his all is at stake. He will run with might and main; he will exert himself to the very utmost, straining every nerve in the body. He is looking forward, for the crown is at yonder end of the race-course. You must get to yon end, and that foremost, too, if you expect to "obtain the prize." After you have obtained the victory, you will have time to rest, to breathe, and to enjoy your crown. So run, then, and make sure of the prize.

Dear readers and christian friends, you perceive how these are running in the carnal race, with all their might, with all their energy; each one trying to come out best, and to obtain the prize, the crown, at best but a corruptible one. Dear christian friends, we that have set out to serve the Lord are also running in a race for a crown, for the prize, for an incorrupitible one—for one that is of far greater value than gold or rubies—one that is lasting as eternity. And in this heavenly or christian race we can all obtain: here we can all win. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." But be sure that you are running in the right direction, in the right way. Have your faces Zionward. We might run over so fast in the wrong direction; ever so circumspect, but in the wrong way; and, instead of getting nearer the crown we would most assuredly get further from it. It is therefore all important that we "so run"—not this way, or that way, or any way that fancy or your carnal nature, or even your preacher, or any other creature, may dictate; but be sure that you enter in by the door. "I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." Again, "I am the way, and no man cometh unto the Father but by me." "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross."

Dear reader, there must be a following after Christ, and in doing so, we must necessarily deny ourselves of ungodliness, of all the sinful and foolish pleasures of the world, and daily take up our cross, and follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, as well through evil as through good report. "So run." The faithful runner will not slacken his speed, but will run with might and main, well knowing that his all depends upon his running. Then dear reader, "So run that you may obtain." Jesus Christ is our Forerunner. His command is, "Follow me." Getting on his track, (the race course,) let us then follow Him in humility, in obedience, in holiness: let us then follow Him in all his ways. He saith "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Here, then, are no nonessentials; everything that the Lord Jesus Christ commanded is essential to our salvation. Look well to the way-marks; the christian race-course is so definitely marked out, that the way-faring man, though a fool, may not err therein; providing he takes heed to the way-marks, and looks well to the Forerunner, and follows Him in his foot-steps, not turning this way or that way and turning a deaf ear to all the allurements of sin and Satan. "Having your loins girt about with truth; and having on the breast plate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, &c.." Eph., 6: 14, 16. Cross-bearing, self-denial suffering, persecution, &c., are undeniable, and sure way-marks for the Christian runner to go by. "So run," then, as the man in the carnal race, independent of all out side attractions and allurements, no matter how enticing and attractive soever they may be; for the enemy of souls will, in many different ways and forms, try to divert the christian man or woman; will hold out many inducements, such as "The lust of the flesh,the lust of the eye, and the pride of life ;" and others without number, and the most dangerous are those that come under the garb of religion. Satan transforms himself into an angel of light ; thousands of Satan's employees are out preaching, or rather perverting the gospel, speaking lies in hypocrisy, and for a pretense make long prayers. These pretenders have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof, wolves are they in sheep's clothing, devouring widows houses. The author of our text saith, "If any man preach any other gospel unto you, than that ye have received, let him be accursed. And if even an angel from heaven preach any other gospel let him be accursed." "So run that ye may obtain." Paul saith, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Thus we perceive it requires a pressing, a running, a striving, a fleeing, wrestling, and a continual warring against sin and Satan, in order to obtain the inestimable prize. "So run that ye may obtain." This prize is of such great value, though a man had the whole world, it would be no comparison to the crown under consideration, it is of incalculable and intrinsic worth, the longer it is worn the brighter it becomes. "Eye hath not seen, ear has not heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man &c." Then dear brethren let us so run, let us not become weary. The crown is at the end of the race. Let us run patiently, diligently, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not ; we shall then rest from all our labors, troubles, trials and toils, when Christ himself will wipe away all tears, where we shall bask ourselves in eternal glory and happiness. When we shall see,and meet with Abraham,Isaac and Jacob, and all the blood washed throng, in short, with all those who have made their robes white and clean in the blood of the Lamb. All this, dear reader, is promised, and even more, to all those who "So run that ye may obtain." I am inclined to think, dear reader, that one hour in glory and happiness in heaven, at the right hand of God, with Jesus and the holy angels, is worth all our running,and striving, and persevering, and short sufferings, &c. But thank God, it is not only to last for an hour, but throughout the ceasless ages of eternity. We will then sing "When we've been there ten thousand years," &c., &c. May God help us then, to "So run, that we may obtain."

I would now, before I close this article, say a few words to those who have not as yet set out to run in this race ; who are as yet unconcerned as to their eternal destiny ; who are running in the downward road of sin and folly, as fast as the unlocked wheels of time can roll them along, "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, &c." I would say to those, with Moses of old, "Stand still." Bethink yourselves, sinners, before it be eternally too late. Do not run one step farther in sin and wickedness. Death may, and surely will, sooner or later overtake you ; and if you die in your sins, where God is you can never come. Reflect upon it, sinner, the farther you go on in sin, the farther you will have to return, and the more to repent of. If ever you will turn unto God, the longer you persevere in sin the shorter time you will have to repent in. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" Consider and ponder your ways before it may be eternally too late. In Luke 16th chapter you can read of one who put off his repentance until it was too late. After he had opened his eyes in hell, he commenced to pray, and groan, and sigh ; but alas, alas, it was too late ! Therefore, dear sinner, whoever you may be, commence to-day : "To-day, if you hear his voice, harden not your hearts ;" to-day is the day of salvation. You have no promise in the word of God for to-morrow. You may not see another morning sun to rise over you. Every moment you spend, every step you take farther in sin and folly, brings you nearer destruction, and farther from God. Will you persist and still run on in sin, with all your might, with your mind and heart set against God and His word ; making all possible speed for destruction you possiblby can, as though hell could not be obtained at a slower pace ? O, sinner ! take warning before thou art plunged into that awful abyss, into hell, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. "O, turn ye ! O, turn ye ! for why will you die ?" May this be a warning to all those who are still running on the broad way of sin and folly, leading to everlasting destruction and misery, and a word of comfort and consolation to those who are running with patience the race set before us. Let us then "so run that we may obtain," for we shall "See Him as He is."

Editorial Correspondence.

FRIDAY, July 5th.—Brother Michael Reber took me into his carriage with himself and two daughters and brother Henry Goughenour took brother Urias with himself and two daughters, and we set out for a love-feast in Grundy county. After a pleasant ride we arrived at the house of brother Henry P. Strickler, where we lodged, with a number of other brethren and sisters.

SATURDAY, 6th.—We had been under the impression that meeting was to commence at 10 A. M., but there was no appointment until 1 P. M. So we had the whole forenoon to ourselves, which we employed almost exclusively in singing from the Christian Harp, and Brethren's Hymn Book. The place prepared for the meeting was a shed of boards without any windows, except air holes. The floor was composed of prairie hay. And yet it was quite comfortable, and at the appointed time it was well filled with attentive listeners. The ministers in attendance were, brethren Samuel Garber, Benjamin Buechly, Benjamin Ellis, H. C. Goughenour, ———Trostle, and perhaps some others, besides their own ministers, which are Henry P. Strickler and Jacob B. Shirk. Had a good feast. Perhaps one hundred members communed, near forty of whom it was thought were from Waterloo branch. The congregation in Grundy is young and small, but gives indications of prosperity. We lodged at brother ——Moore's.

SUNDAY, 7th.—Meeting in the forenoon. Good attendance and attention. The afternoon was spent in religious conversation and singing. In the evening tried to preach at a school-house in the neighborhood. Lodged at brother Daniel Sheller's, formerly of Franklin county, Pa.

MONDAY, 8th.—Started upon the return trip at about 8 in the morning. Enjoyed a very pleasant ride, except a superabundance of prairie dust. Grundy county has some of the finest country, and scenery, it has been our pleasure to look upon. Plenty of room for new-comers. Took supper at brother Coughenour's where our pleasant little company that had been associating for four days was obliged to separate. We shall never have another such a pleasant time in the same company, in this world. Hope we will all try so to live that we may meet in the better land, where we will unite in singing still sweeter songs of gladness. It was a trip long to be remembered, by us at least. Returned to brother Reber's where we spent the evening pleasantly and had a good night's rest.

TUESDAY, 9th.—In the forenoon brother and sister Raber took us to town, where we received several letters, from our postmaster, brother C. P. L. Roberts, also the use of his No. 26 of C. F. C. The letters were from home, and the news was good. Taking the COMPANION and letters together it would appear that the paper was pretty much in the hands of the sisters; a sister, chief editor, and another publisher and proprietor, pro tem, with a fair proportion of correspondence from the pens of the sisters. Very well, so they continue to get out good papers, as at present, we shall acquiesce.

Thence brother and sister R., took us to brother Abraham Hochstetler's, where we dined and talked. Saw brother Martin Buechly, who lives just across the road, and perfected our plans for a trip to Minnesota. Thence they took us to brother Joseph Saylor's. This is our head-quarters, sister S., being sister in the flesh to Dr. Beachly. Here we lodged.

WEDNESDAY, 10th.—Brother Abraham Hochstetler took me to uncle Brown's, where we dined, and had a few hours of friendly, and, we trust, edifying conversation. On our return took supper at brother Wm. Ikenberry's. Hochstetler and Ikenberry are both ministers in this congregation. Thence to brother Saylor's again where we are lodging, and where this report is being closed. In the morning, at 5, we expect to start for Minnesota, by private conveyance, in company with brother Martin Buechly and wife. So our next will likely be dated from Minnesota. We are in usual health.

NOTE. When we met brother Garber at Grundy, and when in conversation with him in regard to West Branch congregation, Ills., our memory recalled brother John Diehl, when it occurred to us that we had made no reference to our visit to his place, in our report, at the proper time. We were taken to his home after the love-feast at night, and remained until next morning about 8, and spent a few hours very pleasantly. Should we have slighted any other of our friends similarly, they will not take it ill against us, as we will make it all right at some time or other. Adieu.

"Lights and Shadows of New York Life, or, the Sights and Sensations of the Great City." A work descriptive of New York City in all its various phases. Its Splendors and Wretchedness. Its High and Low Life; Its Marble Palaces and Dark Dens; Its Attractions and Dangers; Its Rings and Frauds. Its Leading Men and Politicians. Its Adventurers; Its Mysteries and Crimes. By James D. McCabe, Jr.

What Paris is to the Frenchman, or London to the Briton, New York is to the American. It is not only the Metropolis but it is the chief attraction upon this continent, the great centre to which men and women resort for both business and pleasure, and as such is a source of never-failing interest. Of late years several attempts have been made to reproduce its varied attractions in book form. The most successful result of these efforts is the book now before us. The author has had unusual facilities to see every feature of the great city, and has written the work with an enthusiasm which is apparent in every page. He has not merely produced a sensational story, but has given us a record of actual facts, of which he is personally cognizant

The book is as fascinating and absorbing as a novel, and were it not for the evidence he furnishes, we should be tempted to believe that he has carried us into the realm of fiction. He tells us the history of the great city which has grown to be the most remarkable in America, and relates its old traditions with zest and humor. He introduces us to all classes of people, and initiates us into their ways and manner of life. He brings us face to face with great merchants and bankers, actors, editors, working men, ballet girls, thieves, gamblers, sailors, quacks, firemen, and a host of others. He delights us with his sketches of the better and brighter side of city life, of the genius, enterprise, charity and humanity of the great city, and appals us with his thrilling accounts of the darker and more terrible side of the life he is delineating.

A truthful picture of New York life cannot be otherwise than deeply interesting. Our author has succeeded admirably in his task, and we predict for his book a large sale. It is brim full of useful information, brilliant and fascinating, and an emphatic warning against the vices of the city. It is pure and lofty in tone, and while it discusses fully many of the darker sides of city life, it does so with delicacy and candor. An interesting feature of the book is a powerfully written history of the Tammany Ring frauds with sketches of the actors therein.

It is comprised in one large octavo volume of 850 pages, illustrated with nearly 200 fine engravings of noted places, life and scenes of New York, and published by the National Publishing Co., of Philadelphia.

The low price at which the work is issued, brings it within the reach of all, and no one who wants to know New York as it really is, should fail to buy this book. It is published in English and German, sold by subscription only, and agents are wanted in every county.

Trust in God.

Yes, the little birds find shelter,
And hum their evening prayer.
And close their weary eyelids,
Without a thought of care.
They drop their glossy heads
'Mid the feathers on their breast,
And leaving God to watch them,
Thus sweetly fall to rest.

Dear cherished little sleepers,
Their merry song is still—
No care for morrow's lodging,
Their gentle bosom's fill.
Guardian angels round them,
Watch with a silver rod,
For they've left their every sorrow
All in the care of God.

And if birds so trust our Father,
Who giveth them a home,
Why should our hearts murmur
When evil shadows come?
If God will feed the raven,
And think for all the birds,
Will he not love his children,
And listen to their words?

Aye! let us trust his goodness,
His promise and his love,
And, like the birds, be happy
With his blessing from above.
Have not a thought of trouble,
While future paths are trod,
But keep our hearts from evil,
And leave our care with God.

What One Sinner Can Do.

It is said of John Newton, when on board the Harwich, that he corrupted a youth previously free from open vice, and that this young man soon arrived at maturity in guilt. Years after they met. Newton was changed, and desired to rescue his former companion from the evil into which he had plunged him. As he no longer felt infidelity to be tenable, he strove to undeceive his victim. His usual reply, however, was that Newton was the first to give him an idea of his liberty, which he would not now forego. And so he got worse, and spurned all restraints, and gave loose rein to every passion. His excesses threw him into a malignant fever, of which he died without hope and without mercy. One drop of filth will pollute a whole cup of clear water, but a foul cup could not be cleansed by the mixing of a thousand drops of clear water. A sharp pain in the tooth or toe will sometimes rack the whole body with torture, but one or a dozen sound teeth or toes will avail nothing if there be one in pain. One dead fly in the cup of the apothecary will ruin the ointment, and so it is true that one sinner destroyeth much good. One seed of a thistle carried by a bird to some distant isle or continent will spread until the whole be covered. One oath from a thoughtless man may corrupt a dozen boys into profanity; and so, too, of almost any sinful act.

"An Oak is not Felled with one Blow."

BY D. B. MENTZER.

This is an old maxim. It fitly illustrates the great truth that we cannot accomplish any very important object by one word, one action, or one effort. It proves that all that is done for us, or that we can do, is but "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little."

It is the steady, patient, repeated blow that brings the old monarch of the forest sweeping, dashing, crashing to the earth. Not one blow only, but the woodman strikes again, and again, until his giant victim lies stretched on the earth before him. This teaches us the very important lesson of perseverance in whatever we may undertake. We must not "grow weary in well-doing." Always be sure you are right, and then go forward unto achievement and victory. The crown is for him only who wins the battle.

The oak did not become an oak in one day. It was first the kernel of the acorn, which germinated, and grew up the tiny plant, and after long years of continued growth, became a gigantic oak of the forest; then came the woodman with his keen-edged ax to fell it, but it could not be felled with one blow.

The flower does not become a flower in one day. First the tender plant then the bud, and then the blooming flower.

One drop of water does not form a river: it is the aggregate of innumerable little drops which unite and compose the mighty, rushing stream, whose onward flow has not ceased until it mingles with the deep, deep sea.

This beautiful earth was not made in one day. Human hands or human skill could never have made it. It was the patient, continued work of the all-wise and all-sufficient Creator, that spread around us all the wonders of the universe, and painted all the sublime and beautiful objects in Nature.

Then, my young friend, do not expect to obtain an education in one day or by one effort. Do not expect to achieve any great and noble object instantly. The acquirement of an education is the work of many hours attentive, diligent, intelligent study and observation. Let us go forward, then, with incessant effort in every good and ennobling work, for even "an oak is not felled with one blow."

In a land beyond the seas, a minister met a mother in Israel, whose life had been lengthened out beyond the period usually allotted to man.

Talking with the aged disciple of the wonderful ways in which God had led her, the minister found her heart a temple of praise to Him who had loved her and given Himself for her. The service of God had been to her a delight. Eigty-two years she had walked in the footsteps of her Leavenly Master, having given her heart to Jesus when but fourteen years of age.

Before the minister bade adieu to this aged saint, she said: "I want you to tell the children of America, when you return to them, that it will save them from a thousand snares to mind religion young. Tell them you saw an old lady of six-and-ninety years, who has spent her life in the service of the blessed Redeemer, and she has no such source of real joy as the remembrance that she early gave herself away to Jesus."

From many of the follies of youth and the sins of maturer years she had been preserved, because that in life's early morning she had sought and found the Savior. Bitter have been the regrets of many a heart, that, waiting for a more convenient season, life's best years were spent in the service of Satan; but no one ever regretted that life's earliest, best years were given to Him who has said, "Those that seek me early shall find me."—Messenger.

From Dr. U. M. Beachly, continued from No. 27.

After we had seen the most important sights of this modern Venice, having a little more spare time before train time, we visited the Foundling Hotel, or Home. This institution was founded by some Philanthropists, for the purpose of preventing infanticide. They have in the hall a small room, or depository, containing a downy crib. At this depository door, the latch string is constantly out. Here the poor unwelcomes are brought and deposited at all hours. The entrance is private. An ingeniously arranged alarm bell gives notice to the night watch whenever one of these little "God sends" finds its way into the crib. Imagine the hopes and fears of these wretched mothers. The institution is open to visitors two days in a week; and hither come, not unfrequently, the mothers, in disguise, to meet their offspring. The lady matron informed me that many of the little ones have private marks on their bodies: Sometimes initials made with Indian ink. They had only thirty-five of these foundlings at the institute when we were there. From two to four are kept in one room. The children and the rooms are nicely kept. The oldest child there was only ten months old; the youngest, two days. Some of these dear little innocents are very pretty. When you talk to them they laugh, and seem to say, "We are ever so glad you have come to see us! Please deposit a dollar or two for our benefit before you leave." In this way they appeal to your generosity, and thus we were led to deposit our mite. My little Emma, who thus far accompanied brother Henry and I wherever we went, suggested that we get some of these pretty babes and send them home to our childless neighbors. The good people here, however, take them away very nearly as fast as they are brought in. Persons wishing to obtain one of these little wards must come well recommended, and adopt them as their own. At three P. M. we took the cars for Ashton, Ill., and bade good-bye, for the present, and perhaps forever, to Chicago, and our kind entertainers, Dr. Fahrney's Family, and all the many attractions, natural and artificial, of this wonderful metropolis of the great west.

We arrived at Ashton at 8 P. M. Here we were met by my cousin, C. M. Hicks, who took our party to his home, where we were kindly entertained for several days. From here Brother Henry left us, to attend several Love feasts; the first at Cherry Grove, near Lanark. In the meantime we visited in the vicinity of Ashton and Franklin Grove.

On Sabbath we attended meeting near Ashton. Here the Brethren have a fine meeting house, well furnished; the seats comfortable, and nicely painted. The house stands on land obtained from brother Daniel Suter, who keeps it and the ground in splendid order—everything nice, clean and tasty—as a house should be where christians meet to praise their God and build each other up. Brother Jos. Layman and Elder Deardorf preached for us. Brother Deardorf is quite aged, but still preaches with a loud voice. Brother Layman is a young man, seemingly full of energy and zeal for the good cause. We remained over night at brother Suter's, and the next day were taken to Dixon, a small city amongst the Sand hills and in the woods.

Dixon is located on Rock River, which here has sufficient fall to yield motive power that drives some four or five manufactories, and several flouring mills. After visiting the old man Dixon, the Court House and the schools, we also visited the dwelling-house formerly occupied by brother Jonathan Lichty and his family. We found this house on the extreme suburbs of the city, standing at a very lonesome place in the woods, uninhabited by living creature unless by rats and owls. After finding our way to the main road, we started for Dutch Town. This justly celebrated town is a congregation of three or four farm houses, built in sight of each other. The friends here are not partial to the name; but to me, and many others, the name has a much wider significance: with it are associated generosity, hospitality, kindness, and brotherly love; and to me, the town extends and includes from Ashton to Waddam's Grove.

At this latter Grove we attended a Lovefeast. The meeting-house here is located on the lands of brother P. Wetzel, formerly brother M. Raber's farm. At this place the Annual Meeting was held in 1846, at which place and time Eld. John Berkly and many others were present, who long since have gone to their reward. Here we had an excellent meeting—most excellent order. The preaching here was mostly done by Eld. Umstead, Martin Meyers, H. R. Holsinger, and Daniel Miller. Brother Enoch Eby is house keeper here, and conducted the meeting very successfully.

The next feast we attended was at Dutch Town. Here Elder Martin Meyers conducted the meeting; Enoch Eby, H. R. Holsinger, Paul Wetzel, and others did the preaching. The second day, at noon, we were taken away from the meeting-house by brethren Joseph and Samuel Fike, and brought to Sterling, where we took the cars, at 3 P. M., for Waterloo; but on account of heavy rains the rail-road was much injured; many bridges destroyed, and washed away. In one place, we were mounted on mud wagons, and had to ride and walk seven or eight miles. We had eighty-five passengers on our train, men, women, and children. Across the streams and sloughs we had to walk, carry the baggage, &c. It took us thirty hours from Sterling to Waterloo, a distance of about one hundred and eighty miles. The next morning we were taken to the Brethren's meeting-house, five miles South of Waterloo. At this place the Annual Meeting was held in 1870. We find here a beautiful prairie country, not quite so old or far advanced as the best parts of Ill.; but Iowa is steadily gaining on its older sister, and in five or ten years hence will be one of the greatest States in the Union.

In concluding my narrative, I will yet give you a few general observations. Knowing that brother Henry has given and will give you, in his editorial notes, all that is interesting as regards church and State seriatim. My remarks must necessarily, not to repeat the same story, be disconnected. Our meeting-houses in the West, intended to hold lovefeasts in, are an improvement on anything I have seen in the East. They all have a basement story, in which the cooking and eating are done. As soon as the meeting adjourns, you are invited to the basement where ample provisions are prepared for all. The benches on the second floor are so constructed as to fold over, when they form tables. The Lord's Supper and the communion being prepared and partaken of on the second floor.

New churches are being established on all sides. Many are added to the church. Our western ministers, as a class, are zealous energetic, warm-hearted christians; and the laity back them up and encourage them, by practicing what they are taught. Tobacco, whiskey soul-sleeperism, and such other abominations that a few years ago flourished in some localities have nearly died out, and are becoming so extremely unpopular, that their adherents and slaves only practice their black arts in secluded spots: all decent and sensible people have discarded them as pernicious and dangerous to soul and body The soul-sleepers now call themselves Christadelphians.

We have thus far visited Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa. These states are notorious for their vast wheat and cornfields. The crops at this writing, July 10th, are very promising. Barley and oats are about ready to harvest; and some of the earliest wheat will be ready to cut in a few weeks. I have traveled in the east, in Washington and Fredrick counties, Md., Franklin, Cumberand, and Lancaster counties, Pa., and seen as fine wheat fields and corn patches as you could wish to see, so far as the quality is concerned; but in breadth, or quantity, the Eastern fields and farmers compare with the West as a lake does with an ocean. And the flour made of first quality Western wheat makes equally good bread with the best white winter wheat.

Schools, manufactories, and everything here seems to swell and spread. The poor have equally good land to farm as those that are able to purchase farms. The roads mostly are in excellent condition. From fifty to eighty miles is not an uncommon drive in a day.

As we are about leaving the state of Iowa for Minnesota, I will close this communication with a notice of a visit to the "Soldier's Orphan's Home," at Cedar Falls, and the Cemetery near the Brethren's meeting-house near Waterloo.

This Cemetery is on the lands of Bro. Wm. Miller, containing over one acre. It is laid out in squares, with a nice drive through the centre and on four sides. Here lie the remains of our dear old grand-father, Abraham Buechly. The inscription on his tombstone reads, "Born Jan. 31st 1780, Died Oct. 30th, 1865, aged 85 yaers 9 months." Also the remains of our dear sister Eliza, wife of brother S. H. Miller. Her inscription reads, "Born, March 16 1840; Died, Oct. 26 1865; aged 26 years 7 months and 10 days. Sister Mary Saylor too has two loved ones here. Willie and Emma. Many others of our near kindred are sleeping here on this far off prairie mound. Peace to their ashes. The Orphan's home is situated on a rise about one mile from Cedar Falls. Here we found 272 children, 145 males, 127 females. They were just at their noon meal when we arrived. They have a good home here, and are taught all the ordinary branches taught in public schools. If they wish to take lesson on the piano their parents must pay extra. A school year lasts 10 months. They consume in one school year 60 thousand pounds of bread, 12 thousand pounds of beef and mutton; 25 barrels of fish; 12 hundred bushels of potatoes; 5 thousand pounds of butter; 1 thousand gallons of syrup; 7 thousand gallons of milk; 15 barrels of sugar; 50 barrels of apples. Vegetables, canned fruits, &c., in proportion. They cultivate 40-acres of ground. They have 30 assistants mostly females; 5 teachers, and one principal, H. F. Tucker. Prof. Tucker seems to be the right man in the right place. He treated us very nicely. Our party was conveyed by three carriages. We had Uncle Elias K. Buechly, Aunt Sally Berkly, Samuel Kane, Matthias Miller, and their family, H. R. H., Emma, and myself. The Superintendent took us all through the institution, explained all its workings. Their library contains 509 volumes. They have Sabbath-school and preaching every alternate Sunday. The most of the party went on the cupola. This is ninety feet higher than the ground. Here we were handed a large opera glass, and had a fine view of the surrounding country. Those acquainted with the different farms and their owners, could point out localities from 10 to 16 miles off. After we had spent an hour very pleasantly, we were invited into the parlor, where one of the orphan girls played and sung for us the "Gates Ajar," and how they came ajar.

Dear Brother: I received your statement of accounts sometime ago, which I suppose to be correct, and thought I would have sent you the money before this time, but the subscribers live so far apart that I have not been able to get to see them all. Some have paid for some other paper, and some that I have seen say they cannot pay now, but will soon. The subscribers live in four different counties. I hope all brethren and friends who subscribed for the COMPANION through my agency, will please settle for their paper immediately, by forwarding or bringing me the money, that I may settle with our brother editor, who, I have no doubt, is in need of his money; for, if he were not, he would not have called for it. We should not expect for him to spend time, labor, and money in publishing a paper in which we love to read so well, and which brings such wholesome food for the soul, and then wait till our year is out for the pay. For my part, the C. F. C. is a welcome visitor. I love to peruse its pages, and hear from the different parts of the brotherhood; though, sometimes it grieves me to see brethren criticise one another so sharply in their views on different matters. Brethren, we should be careful that we do not offend one of these little ones; better that a millstone were hanged about our neck, and we were drowned in the sea. I have thought, sometimes, that our feelings were too easily hurt by our brethren, when, at the same time, they did not intend to hurt them. Brethren, we should bear with one another, live in peace, that the God of peace may be with us.

To All Whom this may Concern.

As I made an appeal some over one year ago for aid to go to California and Oregon, and as some money has been contributed to my aid, and the amount contributed has been mostly from the humble sisters, perhaps those that have been so liberal mas think I am making slow progress toward going to Oregon. But brethren and sisters bear with me. I am making all the efforts I can to get off by the first of October next, though my means will be small. My circumstances have been so that I could not get off sooner. If I had been blest with this world's goods, as some of my brethren are, I would have been gone long ago, as I receive calls from my brethren to come and preach. These calls I cannot bear to hear any longer; I must go. My Discipline, the New Testament, says, "Go;" so I must go, if I have but small means.

"But," says one, "why don't you get the church to send you? Why don't you ask me why I don't go to the Pope of Rome? Which has the most power, the church or the words of Christ? If I had faith that I could remove mountains, and if I lived ever so close to the commands of Christ, yet, there are brethren that would doubt my honesty—they would fear I might enlarge Zion's troubles by sending me out to Oregon to preach, because I have not got a certain cut ar fashion of garments, or because I have not got the title of Bishop. One of the organs of the D. C. of Southern Ill. made a bold hint concerning brother A., that he lives in the District of Southern Ill., a District compased of 21 churches, yet but little is known of him. He says many are afraid to send him out to Oregon; for, instead of enlarging Zion's borders, he might enlarge Zion's troubles. This is judging the tree without knowing anything about the fruit. I would just soy to those that are so terribly afraid of brother B., as long as he takes the New Testament for his guide, I don't think he can be much out of the way. Hdnce brother A. rejects all creeds, articles of faith, and disciplines of human invention; believing them to be a direct transgression upon the wisdom of God; for he has given us a perfect law to govern us in all things. If this perfect law was let rule in the hearts and lives of all Christians, we would not have so much trouble: each would pull the beam out of his own eye, and then he could see clearly to full the note out of his brothers eye. But as long as we live in glass houses, we will see others faults and not our own. I fear there are many things brought into the church, and traditions made out of them that are not gospel. Oh let us watch.

I would just say in conclusion, all those that want to assist me on my mission to California and Oregon, as I expect to travel when I get there, I will need all I can get; and as I claim nothing but the New Testament; and the order of the brethren, as far as consistent with the word or commands of Christ, I am with them, I preach that, I practice that. If you wish to know further of my walk and conduct, I will refer you to Brother George Obencaine, Jacob Gerhart, deacons; Mills Calvert, Brother B. R. Gerhart. Any one that wishes to correspond with me can address me by writing to Vincennes, Lock Box 30, Ind. This I have written by the request of some of the brethren. I want to start by the 1st of October if I possibly can, if the Lord is willing, and we all keep well. If I do not get off soon, I must refund the money that has already been paid in. May God lead, guide and direct us all in the knowledge af the truth. I hope none will become offended at what I have written.

In Memoriam of the two Sisters.

Two sisters in the flesh, two in the church, two in heaven. Whilst the last remains of sister Cook were being handed down to their last resting place, the spirit of sister Miller winged its flight to join its kindred spirit in the realms of eternal bliss, where sickness and sorrow, pain and death are feared and felt no more for ever. Farewell, sisters, your loss we deeply feel. No more will we enjoy your communion and fellowship in the church militant; but may God give us to enjoy richly of his divine grace, that we may all finally enjoy sweet communion and fellowship with God, where our hearts and voices may be blended sweetly together in ascriptions of more perfect praise around his throne in heaven, where all is joy and peace forever more.

May God sanctify this afflicting dispensation of his providence, toward the spiritual promotion of the large circle of surviving, bereaved ones, who are mourning the loss of wives and mothers; and whilst the dew drop of affection's tear moistens the green mounds that covers the casket of their once dear earthly ties, may God, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, breathe the inaudible whispers of love into your disconsolate hearts softly admonishing you to so number your wisdom; that, whilst your mother dear is basking in the sunlight of his countenance, the holy aspirations of your souls may be attuned in harmony with the will of him wo doeth all things well; remembering, that behind a frowning providence he hides a smiling face. Whilst he calls away the dearest objects of our earthly affections, he is making bare his arms of love and mercy to reclaim the subjects of his afflicting hand. May he entwine the tendrils of his divine love around your desolate hearts, until the bright sunbeams of conviction lead you to rejoice in the new found objects of your affections, who will lead you by the still waters, by pouring the oil of joy and comfort in your wounded hearts, so that when death casts its last flickering ray of sombre gloom over your dying couch, bright angels may stand waiting to escort your spirits home to mingle in uninterrupted association with those gone before.

"And when I have safely past
Through every conflict but the last,
Still, still unchanging, watching beside
My bed of death—for thou hast died;
Then points to realms of endless day,
And wipe the latest tear away.

Unity.

Dear Companion: I feel like offering a few thoughts to the C. F. Companion this evening. While assembled at Annual Meeting, and hearing the discussion on a certain subject, some one remarked that they did not know what to change to. Oh do let us all search the scriptures by day and by night that, the next time we meet in council, we may be united as one band of believers in Christ, and all speak the same thing, that there be no schisms in the body. And as the apostle says, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" And if we cannot judge between ourselves the things that pertain to this life, oh, how shall we judge angels?

Change of Address.

Brother Samuel Longenecker has changed his address from Montandon, Pa., to Panora, Guthrie Co., Iowa.

From Panora, Guthrie Co., Iowa.

According to promise to many dear brethren and sisters and friends, I will give a brief sketch of my journey with my family to Iowa.

We left our home at Montandon, Northumberland Co., Pa., on the 1st of April. Visited a few of our neighbors at Montandon, till the morning of the third. Then we took the train for Mechanicsburg, Pa. Were met at that place by brother D. Nisely's team, and brother Brindle. Were taken to brother Nisely's house at Churchtown, Pa. Filled two appointments at that place. Visited in daytime, and attended meetings in the evening. Had full attendance and attentive people.

On the 6th were conveyed by brother Nisely and brother Brindle to Adams Co., Pa., to the house of my dear sister, Margaret Deardorff. Attended meeting on the 7th at the Latimore meeting-house. Remained at that place, visiting relatives, brethren, and friends, till the 11th, when, through the kindness of my nephew, John Gardner and brother Daniel Longanecker, we were conveyed to the house of brother Daniel Longanecker.

Twelfth, were conveyed to the house of brother Solomon, Sister Annie, and Catharine Longanecker, (the place that gave me birth). Many thoughts of bygone days came to mind. When entering the room where my father had erected the family altar, many prayers offered by my kind father and mother in behalf of their children and the church, came fresh to my mind; and O God, may their prayers, and the prayers of the children of God, now avail, that the church may be kept in the unity of the faith, in the unity of the Spirit, and in the bonds of peace and love.

On the eighteenth, were conveyed by brother Samuel Pfoutz from Carroll Co., Md., to the Beaverdam congregation, Md. Filled two appointments of that place. Were met there by brother Jesse Roop and conveyed to his house in the Buck Creek congregation. On the evening of the 20th, filled three appointments at the house of brother J. Roop. Preached to an interesting congregation. Sister Roop, being my sister in the flesh, we tarried there, visiting brother J. D. Trostle and others till the 25th, when my companion and I were taken by brother J. Roop to Union Bridge, to fill an appointment at that place. Full attendance and attentive people. Our daughters remained at brother J. Roop's with their cousins. After meeting, went to brother E. Stoner's over night. On the twenty-sixth were taken to the Pipe Creek meeting. Filled two appointments at that place. After evening meeting were taken to brother J. Yon's.

Twenty-seventh, were taken by brother Yon to Taneytown, where we took the train for Hanover, Pa. We took dinner with sister McMaster, living at that place. Afternoon took the train to Golden's Station, near my old native home, at which place we arrived in the evening.

Twenty-eighth rested. 29th was taken by brother Daniel Longanecker to Cumberland Co, Pa. Attended the Middle Pa., District council. Returned to the home place on the evening of the 2nd of May. Were met by brother John Newcomer, from Franklin Co., Pa. Went with him home on the 4th, his wife, sister Sarah, being a sister of mine in the flesh. 5th attended meeting at Brown's meeting-house near Greencastle. Evening meeting at Nepton. 9th returned to the home place again. Were met by brother Jesse Roop who brought our daughters, in company with two of his daughters, to that place. We were made to feel happy to meet with our dear ones, after an absence of several weeks; and we truly felt to thank God for his protection over us while separated. And how happy we were to meet with our dear brethren and sisters to whom we are bound by the near and dear ties of nature, as well as of the Gospel! Oh, dear reader, it reminds us of the time of which we live in hope, which is our privilege to enjoy, when parents and children, brethren and sisters, shall meet—shall meet to part no more, on Canaan's happy shore, where there will be no sorrow. Sinner please contrast this thought.

On the 10th had a good, old, family talk. 11th, were taken to a love-feast near East Berlin, Adams Co., Pa., in the Upper Canawago congregation; in which congregation I and my family were baptized, and I was appointed to the ministry, and labored about twelve years. Met with many of my dear brethren and sisters. Yet many seats were made vacant, in the five years I had been absent from the church. Had quite a large meeting. On the second day of the meeting had preaching at three places, in the large meeting-house, and a school-house near, and also in the grove at the same time. After meeting, bidding as we were impressed, a final farewell to many dear brethren and sisters, relatives and friends, our daughters going home with brother Wm. Gitt's family, my companion and I returning to the old home. 13th our daughters were taken by their kind friend, Annie Gitt, to sister Margaret Deardoff's, to which place brother Daniel Longanecker conveyed my companion and I.

On the 15th through the kindness of brother J P. Lerew and brother John Raffensperger, sister Margaret in company with us were taken to the house of brother David Nisely, in Churchtown, Pa., at which place brother A. Brown met us. attended meeting in the evening. 16th, we were accompanied by brother Nisely and wife, sister Plank, sister Lahmer and others to Mechanicsburg, to the house of sister King. After a bountiful dinner, we bade farewell with our kind friends, who had accompanied us, and took the train for Harrisburg, at which place we took the train at 1½ P. M. for the West. Stopped off at Tyrone, Pa., over night, with brother Wm. Quinn, according to previous arrangements, in company with brother J. R. Hanawalt and sister Margaret Deardoff. 17th, eight o'clock A. M., took the train, arrived at Pittsburg at two o'clock, meeting many brethren from Md., Va., and East Pa., on their way to Annual Meeting. Arrived at Smithville Station, Ohio, about eight o'clock in the evening. Were kindly conducted by brethren to the house of brother Heaston. Enjoyed a good night's rest. Next morning went to the place of Annual Meeting, meeting with many dear brethren and sisters, forming many new acquaintances and renewing many old ones. Oh, how sweetly solemn is the meeting of dear ones whom we have not met for a long time! The best efforts we could make to withhold the dropping tears were in vain. The arrangements at Annual Meeting were fully decided by brother Moomaw and others through the COMPANION. Through the kindness of our dear sister Sallie Lahmer, living in Churchtown, Pa., who, having relatives living near the place of A. M., to whom she wrote a letter of introduction, requesting them to take good care of us. Accordingly their cousin, (and our very dear friend), Samuel Brenizer, who I think will never be forgotten, met us on Saturday the 18th with a conveyance, and took us to his house, where we met his companion, a kind sister, and an interesting family, all sharing a prominent place in our memory. In the evening were taken by S. Brenizer to Smithville to the Winebrenarian meeting-house, where an appointment had been made for brother D. P. Sayler. At the close of the meeting several requests were made for ministerial labor, on the morning of the 19th Brother Sayler consented to continue his labors at the Winebrenarian house, brother Moomaw to preach at the Lutheran house, and brother D. M. Holsinger consented to preach in German, and I consented to assist him to labor in the English language, at another church in Smithville. The name of the people that worship there I have forgotten. Congregation not large, but very attentive.

Morning of the 20th were taken by S. B. to the place of Annual Council, who also came for us in the evening, and so continued his kindness during the meeting. In the evening of the 23rd we bade farewell with sister Margaret Deardoff, the last one of our eastern relatives, who had accompanied us to the place of A. M., placing her in the care of brother Wise of Ohio, to see her on her way to Canal Dover, Ohio, where she intended to remain a few weeks. We were conveyed by our friend S. Brenizer to Wooster, where we took the eight o'clock train P. M. Cars crowded with brethren and sisters; so much so, that I did not get a seat for some time. By the time we got to Chicago, nine o'clock next morning, there were but four brethren on the train: S. Lehman and E. Eby from Ill., and C. Long and Beachly from Iowa, who all left us at Chicago. After having enjoyed a feast of the company of dear brethren and sisters, did we feel lonesome? Please guess. In the evening of the 24th, arrived at Franklin Grove, Ill. Were met by brother A. Deardoff, conveyed to the house of D. Lehman, meeting his companion, our dear sister, with whom we were acquainted when a little girl. Feeling quite at home, took a nap. Felt quite refreshed. 25th were taken by D. Lehman to a lovefeast meeting at the Franklin Grove meeting-house. Full attendance, good attention. 26th, forenoon meeting, at J. Chronister's school-house.

Remained in the vicinity of Franklin Grove, visiting old acquaintances, brethren and friends, till the morning of the 1st of June. When we took leave for State Centre Iowa, where we arrived at three P. M., two hours behind time in consequence of the heavy rain falling that morning, having in several places, West of Cedar Rapids, washed away part of the track, which caused the train to be behind time. Met at State Centre by brother Joseph Trostle. 2nd, meeting in the forenoon, and also in the afternoon. Third, visited the few members living near brother Trostle's; in the evening conveyed by brother Fuft to State Centre, to the house of brother Deeter, where we tarried till train time: train arriving at one o'clock A. M., the fourth, when we left for New Jefferson, Green Co., Iowa, where we arrive at 5 o'clock A. M. Tarried at the Blaik house till ten o'clock, when, to our comfort, we were met by our dear brother B. E. Plaine and sister Hannah his wife, and my dear brother-in-law (and bro.) Ozias Fence, who conveyed us twenty miles across the prairie to his house, meeting with our dear sister Sarah, his wife, and their family, in connection with my dear brother and sister-in-law Jacob and Hannah Fence.

Our journey of nine weeks and one day ends at this point, having had a very prosperous journey, making every connection, meeting every appointment at the time appointed. If ever we felt truly thankful to our Father in heaven for his kind protection and heavenly direction, we felt it then; and oh! where shall we begin or end his praise?

And now to the many dear friends, brethren and sisters who helped us on our journey, we, as a family, tender our sincere thanks. Since the 4th of June, we have been kindly entertained by our dear relatives of this place, three miles North of Panora; and by their request intend making this our home until we can make further arrangements. This is a beautiful country, and land of the best quality. Our lovefeast came off on the 22nd and 23rd. Eighty or ninety members communed. Ministering brethren present, C. Long, R. Badger, J. Deihl, from Dallas Co., Joseph Lehman, from Franklin Grove, Ill., and W. Wiland, from Shelby Co., Iowa. The congregation assembled were estimated from ten to twelve hundred. Good conduct and good attention (praise-worthy). We purpose on to-morrow starting, in company with brethren J. D. Haughtelin, B. E. Plaine and O. Fence, to attend communion meeting in Polk Co., about fifty miles from this place. We all enjoy our usual health; like the country very much.

Yours in love,

SAMUEL LONGANECKER.

To the Brethren in Missouri.

Dear brethren and sisters to whom this may come, everywhere, greeting: May the grace of God and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the communion of the Holy Spirit, rest and remain with us all. Those of us who have not had the pleasure of participating with our dear brethren and sisters and friends, at our last Annual Meeting, how have we enjoyed the reading of the report of the proceedings of the same, and the minutes of the council, and the brethren's notes of their trips to and from said meeting? Indeed I appreciate it very much, in a general sense; but, brethren of Missouri, how are we encouraged with the report of the disposal of the matter sent from our District? What have we who did not even attend our District Meeting, to say to it? This I exhort that we say naught against those few faithful Brethren who represented their congregation there; for indeed it is enough when it is said that the A. M. forbade the publication of their labor on account of its offensiveness. What conclusion then will we come to? Will we lay our hands on our mouth and allow silence to give consent to whatever conclusion the brotherhood may generally or individually come to, from what is reported, as well as what is known to be facts? Or, will we withhold our hands, till we confess our part of the fault, because we did not better represent the churches at our District Meetings, and see to it that things be less "offensively" prepared to go before the A. M.? I would now say to us especially who compose our new, or Northern District of Missouri, that we learn a lesson from the past. And I feel safe in saying, that, had our District been generally represented by delegates the appeal would have had on different features, had it at all appeared. But now, as it is, what say our brethren who had contemplated emigrating to Missouri? Are those of them who want their children educated where sectarianism is not inculcated into their education, men of fortitude and confidence, that they will come on; hoping that by a fair representation of our council and by their united counsels, all will be right notwithstanding? Then come on. And those who oppose in sentiment, high schools by the brethren, have you not the confidence in the brethren in Missouri that with us you will have your liberties in council as elsewhere, and notwithstanding the offences of that appeal, under other circumstances the result may also hereafter be otherwise? Then come. Or has indeed the reporter, in this expression, imposed upon us a burden which justice does not demand or require of us to bear? If so, then the brethren will tell us; if not, then silence will confirm.

Now, dear brethren in the Lord, old and young, these thing are given as suggestive rather than dictatorial. Being myself young I feel ever willing to submit to the elder, so long as submission continues to be a virtue. Those who know what my position in the church is, also know whether I have a right to be so concerned as to suggest what I have. If I have reached beyond the bounds of my province, I am open for correction; but I claim conscientiousness, and a motive of love, and desire for the prosperity of Zion, in what I have written. And what have other brethren in Missouri to say for us?

Affectionately yours,

C. C. Root.

Mirabile, Mo.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord; this morning, in its beauty and glory, finds us surrounded with blessings from heaven and earth, temporal and spiritual. Last evening we had a refreshing shower. Every thing looks fresh and joyful; and we are joyful in the blessings of the Lord; and believing every blessing that we receive comes from God our Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom be honor, glory, and power without ceasing; who has come from heaven out of love and pity, to earth's dark dungeon of sin, sorrow, affliction, and death, and to give us light, life, and immortality, and a title to or a right to the tree of life, and to enter the pearly gates, and walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, with palms of victory in our hands, and crowns of glory on our heads; there to unite with all the blood-washed throng in bringing forth the royal diadems to crown him Lord of all. Now, to inherit these joys and blessings, Jesus fulfills the broken law, satisfies the justice of God, introduces the glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people—the gospel of salvation—that the poor, lost sinners may be delivered and saved from sin, death, and hell. Jesus gave the command and set the example as the light of the world, then gave himself a sacrifice for the sins of the world. Oh, the bloody sweat, that oozed from his holy body, when the sins of the world rested on him! He was scourged; he wore a crown of thorns; he was raised to the cross, crucified, died, was buried, rose again, and opened the way that prisoners of sin and Satan might be free, the lost found, and the dead made alive. These are the glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. The gospel should be preached to every creature, that all the dying sons and daughters might find the way and come to Jesus; that they might have life and immortality, and escape hell. O! then come, for all things are ready. Come fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, young and old, rich and poor, : come while you may. Jesus says come; the Spirit and Bride says come. Oh! then what ardent love and zeal is due, while heaven stands open to our view. When the door of mercy is shut, justice will begin to reign; but who then shall be able to stand. Come out from Satan's kingdom into the kingdom of Jesus. Satan promises much, pays with little: he promises life, but pays with death. He promises you the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, if you will stay with him, and worship him; but do as Jesus did, when he said, "Get the hence, Satan, I will worship the Lord my God and him only will I serve." You must use holy violence, by faith and prayer, or Satan will not let you go. Faith and prayer draws the power from Jesus; therefore,

"Satan trembles when he sees,
The weakest saint upon his knees."

When I began to write I intended this letter for brother Zimmerman and family, and Jacob Rinehold and family, Lancaster county, Pa., but since my feeling and the spirit of my mind would not change the heavenly exhortation and invitation, I thought best not to quench the Spirit, so my letter has become an epistle; therefore send it to the Companion for publication, so that all may make the application as it suits their circumstances, whether they be in Christ or out of Christ. Our love to you all in Christ. So prays the servant of the Lord and his church.

Daniel Longanecker.

Dear Brother Beer: After our greetings to you and family, I will inform you that I and Jacob M. Thomas were on a preaching tower. We had meeting in the meeting-house near Jonas Beeghley's, Allegheny Co., Md., last Friday evening. Then on Sunday, three miles on the other side of Oakland, we had two meetings, and one at the Union meeting-house on Monday night.

Jacob Beeghly.

A Query.

Brother Holsinger: Will you or some other brother answer the following query: Is it contrary to the word of God, for members living at a distance from the church, in case of death to send for a certain brother to preach the funeral? Have the relatives of the deceased that privilege, or not?

A. Brother.

Near McVeytown, Mifflin county, Pa., March 15, after an illness of nearly 5 weeks, SERENA V., daughter of friend George W. and sister Elmira Strunk; aged 7 weeks. Disease, water on the brain. Funeral occasion improved by brother George Hanawalt, by reading Job, 7th chapter, and also 2 Samuel, 13 : 25, and delivering a discourse therefrom. Bro. Samuel J. Swigart followed with remarks. The 585th hymn was used at the opening of the meeting, and the 574th at the close.

Dear parents, you have an angel spirit, who has winged its flight to the paradise of God, where, by obedience to Christ's teachings, you will sometime enjoy the fruition of eternity with your little daughter gone before.

In the Aughwick congregation, Mifflin county, Pa., May 17, brother JOHN MOIST; aged 69 years 3 months and 27 days. He had several diseases, during his illness, the last of which was dropsy. He leaves a widow, but no children. He bore his sicknesses for 7 weeks, when death put an end to his sufferings. He died on Friday, and was buried on Sunday, and somewhat of a coincidence is, his father, mother, a sister, and two brothers, all died and were buried upon the same days of the week, but at different times.

Funeral services by brethren John G. Glock and Peter S. Myers, from 2 Cor. 5:1,2.

On Friday, March 15, MILLIARD, son of brother John and sister —— Youtzy; aged about 16 years, was killed under the following distressing circumstances:

He was riding a mule, and holding in his hand a tin bucket, used for carrying dinner, for he was engaged in taking out timber in the mountains. The mule became frightened at the rattling of the bucket, and making a sudden spring, the boy fell, and his foot became fast in the girth, and he was dragged, head downward, down the mountains, over rocks, timber and fence, and when found was dead. One leg and one arm were broken; his neck dislocated, and the back part of his head knocked off by being dragged so hurriedly along. A fellow-laborer, who was near when the mule started to run, tried to stop him, but could not; but at the mountain foot the mule stopped with the above result. The family live in Bratton township, near McVeytown, Mifflin county, Pa., in Spring Run congregation.

Solomon W. Bollinger.

May 30th, in the Buffalo Valley church, Union county, Pa., brother JOHN BOGANRIEF; aged 66 years 2 months and 16 days. The deceased was a member for many years; served as deacon for some time, and died in the ministry.

Also in the same church, friend JOHN BEAVER, Sen., May 11th; aged 82 years 10 months and 8 days. The deceased was father of brother Adam, Peter and J. L. Beaver, and husband of sister Annie Beaver, the oldest member in this church. Both the above occasions were improved by the Brethren.

Isaac Meyers.

July 3d, WINFERD, infant son of Bro. John C. and sister Mary Johnson, residents of Fayette county, Pa., and communicants of George's Creek branch; aged 1 year 10 months and 9 days.

The funeral occasion was improved by the writer, from Eccl. 6.6. The subject of this notice was one to call forth much tender sympathy from all his friends, especially the family in which it was his lot to live. He was a hearty child up to about the 28th of September last, when it was his misfortune to swallow some concentrated lye, in solution, causing callosity of the throat, from which it is believed he never rightly recovered, from the fact that he never could swallow coarse food —nothing but common milk. This is a statement of the main facts; a warning, too, of death and how to fear that article of house use.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Out in the Cold.

With blue, cold hands and stockingless feet,
Wandered a child in the cheerless street;
Children were many, who, housed and fed,
Lovingly nestled, dreaming in bed—
Carolled their joy in a land of bliss,
Without a care or thought of this;
They were warm in humanity's fold,
But this little child was out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

Bleak blew the wind through the cheerless sleet,
Dashing along the merciless street,
All furred and shawled, man woman and child
Hurried along, for the storm grew wild;
They could not bear the icicle's blast,
Winter so rude on their pathway was cast,
Alas! none pitied—no one consoled
The little wanderer out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

She had no father, she had no mother,
Sisters none, and never a brother;
They had passed on to the star-world above—
She remained here, with nothing to love,
"Nothing to love"—O! men did not know
What wealth of joy that child could bestow,
So they went by and worshiped their gold,
Leaving the little one out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

Wandered she on till the shades of night
Veiled the shivering form from sight:
Then, with cold hands over her breast,
She prayed to her Father in Heaven for rest,
When hours had fled, 'neath the world's dark frown,
Hungered and chilled, she laid herself down;
Lay down to rest while the wealthy rolled
In carriages past her out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

Out in the cold—lo! an angel form
Brought her white robes that were rich and warm.
Out in the cold on the sleeping child
The sainted face of a mother smiled;
A sister pressed on her brow a kiss—
Led her mid scenes of heavenly bliss:
And angels gathered into their fold
That night the little one out of the cold—
Out of the cold.

Apostolical Succession.

There is not a subject of greater interest in the so-called religious world, than that of "Apostolical succession," or of being apostolical. We have among us those that use the apostolic line of succession as a mighty, yea, may I not say, as the only rule by which they unchurch all those who lay no special claim to that lineage as they teach, and at the same time use it to establish a peculiar mode of worship. Neither one of these rules of thinking and acting affect me the least; for if the matter is brought to a proper test, we need not fear these great pretenders to apostolical preference; for if they trace it back historically they cannot well get around the church of Rome, and everybody knows, or, at least, ought to know, that to trace religious practice there, and then, call it a protestant religious practice, is rather humiliating. If after the lineage is traced up to there,(Rome) and then called a Papistical aberration, it would be more consistent.

But to proceed; shall Rome or Jerusalem decide this long mooted question? If Rome is to lead off in this matter, why then not be like Rome and its votaries at once? These same men deny her in part, and again own her in part. They deny her Holy water, her transubstantiation, her infallibility; but hold tenaciously to her sprinkling for baptism, to her holding babies as fit subjects for the sacred ordinance. Now, then, be it forever known, by all, that to such a conglomeration as this we will never subscribe; we want the term "Apostolical" to mean what it implies, in fact; and in order to do this, we must understand what the term is to signify to us when we see it in print or elsewhere. I understand the term to mean, to be like the apostles, or to belong to a body of believers that hold a doctrine corresponding with the Apostolical practice and teaching.

If this is the criterion by which we are to be governed, the subject is a very plain one, and easily to be disposed of. If any other rule or principle is to govern us in this subject, we can never satisfactorily dispose of the question. Now, then, if our apostolical successionists agree with the Jerusalem apostles in teaching and in practice, they have a perfect right to be called apostolical in their order of things, and may then hurl their anathemas at those that lay no special claim to a succession in their line, and even unchurch all others that practice and teach not as they do.

To the law and and the testimony. What do our modern apostles teach that the old apostles did not teach and practice? In the first place they advocate the propriety of two kinds of subjects for baptism; viz., adults and infants; and by reference to the Acts and epistolary writings of the apostles, they recognized none as fit subjects for baptism but adults alone. Herein there is no apostolical oneness

But again they advocate and sanction by their practice, a believer's and an unbeliever's baptism; that is, they baptize believers and they baptize unbelievers. This they never learned from the old Jerusalem apostles; for they baptized none but believers. This necessarily brings about two baptisms in one organization; while the apostles teach us that there is but "one baptism," "one Lord, one faith," "one God and one Father of all." Not only have they two subjects, and two baptisms, but they have also two god-fathers. God the Father of all is the God for the adult baptism; but for the babies they select from among their number one or more, who vouch for the little innocent babe, and are called god-fathers, or god-mothers. This is doing more, than the apostles ever did; and consequently, they never wrote anything on that subject. Again, the apostles of ancient times, had but one way of admitting persons unto the church, by which every person, was considered a full and lawful member of Christ's body, the church, and freely enjoyed the immunities of that body. Not so with our modern apostles; they have two ways of entrance. The one is by faith and baptism, the other by lectures and confirmation.

According to apostolic custom of ancient date, all baptized persons had equal privilege in the church, all had the bread broken to them, and all could partake of the cup. Not so with our modern pretenders. Their custom is to bring, about one-third to the tables, while two-thirds of their baptized do not, yea, cannot enjoy this privilege, and must first be confirmed, of which the apostles knew nothing.

I will for the satisfaction of some of the readers recapitulate the main points of difference, and divide them off into separate paragraphs. The Jerusalem apostles taught and advocated:

First. that adults, and adults alone, were proper subjects for Christian baptism. The modern apostles teach and advocate that adults and babies are proper subjects for Christian baptism.

Second. That believers alone should be baptized. The moderns say, believers and unbelievers should be baptized.

Thirdly. That there is but one legal mode of admission into the church, namely, baptism with its prerequisite, faith. Those of to-day, have two legal modes of admission, baptism with its prerequsite faith, and confirmation with its prerequsite lectures.

Fourthly. They say "one baptism, one God and Father of all;" while the others have two —adult and infant—two god-fathers: the adult in his baptism has him who sitteth in the heavens; those for the babies are selected from among their number of believers, and are made to vouch for the little innocent, and are called god-fathers or god-mothers as the case may be.

Fifthly. They considered all they baptized in full fellowship with the members of Christ's body; and as such did all enjoy the same privileges in the house of God. Not so with the present ones, for only about one-third of their baptized enjoy these church privileges; the other two-thirds of their baptized must stand back, and are just as though they were not baptized.

Is it not passing strange, that men who profess to be educated, and who make the Bible their study and their only study, fail to bring before the people a closer union of practice between themselves and their predecessors? There is indeed no apparant similarity between the two; nay but a wide difference; so much so, that, were it not for the repeated declarations they are making all over the land, affirmatively, no honest Bible student, would ever have suspected them as being apostolical in practice: surely not, for they differ too widely from the plain teachings of the ancient apostles. In conclusion I would say, if you claim apostolic succession, through the lineage of Rome, or Popery, we lay claims to that line of succession, but if you wish to rob us and all God fearing people of the legal lineage. please do a little more as they did, or else no one will believe you. As long as Bible and Popery are mixed together, in points of doctrine, there will be clashing, and confusion.

Envying

Beware of wicked men when you see them in health and prosperity.

The Psalmist when he was chastened every morning, and in great adversity, was liable to this evil: Psalm 73; 3, "I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked." Corrupt nature doth strongly incline us to this sinful disposition; especially in the days of sore affliction; for "the spirit that dwelleth in us, lusteth to envy;" James 4: 5. But did we rightly consider the state of wicked men, we shall see greater reason to pity than envy them in the most prosperous condition. Why? The prosperity of the fools shall destroy them;" "Prov. 1: 32: it makes them forget God, and turn hardened and secure in sin, which hastens their ruin. Who would envy a malefacter going up a high ladder, and being mounted above the rest of the people, when it is only for a little, and in order to his being turned over and hanged. This is just the case of wicked men, who are mounted up high in prosperity; for it is so only that they may be cast down deeper into destruction. Observe that word, Psalm 37: 1, 2, "Fret not thyself because of evil doers; neither be thou envious against those that work iniquity; for they shall soon be cut down like grass;" and that word, Psalm 92: 7, "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is then that they shall be destroyed forever." It would be a brutish thing to envy an ox his high and sweet pasture, when he is only thereby fitted to the day of slaughter. Who would have envied the beasts of old the garlands and ribbons with which the heathen adorned them when they went to be sacrificed? These external ornaments of health, wealth, pleasures, and preferment, wherewith wicked men are endowed, cannot make their state happy nor change their natures to the better. Whatever appearance these things make in the eyes of the world, they are but like a dunghill covered with scarlet—as vile and loathsomein God's sight as ever. How quickly is the beauty of earthly things blasted: "The triumphing of the wicked is short; Job 20: 5. They live in pleasure on the earth for a while, but God sets them in slippery places, from whence they soon slide into perpetual pain and anguish. They have a short time of mirth, but shall have an eternity of mourning. The longer their prosperity is, their sins are the greater and their sufferings will be more grievous. But O, believer, it is in mercy to thee that God doth hedge up thy way with thorns that thou mayest not find thy path whilst he turns the wicked loose and suffers them to stray and wander whither they will to their eternal ruin. God takes this method with thee, to make thee meet for an inheritance, and to prepare you for a crown of glory but he takes a contrary way with the wicked, to fit them for destruction; therefore you ought not to be fretful under his hand, but thankful. We read of queen Elizabeth, when she was in prison, how she envied the poor milk-maid she saw passing by; And would have thought herself happy to have been in her condition; but had that afflicted princess known the glorious reign of forty-four years, she was soon to enter upon, she would not have repined at the happiness of so mean a person. But, O afflicted believer! it is not a glorious reign for a set number of years that is provided for thee: it is even a reign with glorious Christ thy Redeemer for ever and ever; and hast thou any ground to be discontented or envious?

How to Live.

The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat, and drink, and sleep—to be exposed to darkness and light—to pace round in the mill of habit, and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened, and the sanctities still slumber, which make it worth while to be. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence.

The two best rules for a system of rhetoric are, first, have something to say, and next, say it.—Emmons.

Take Thy Cross.

"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Mark 8 : 34, Latter clause. "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me. let him deny himself,and take up his cross, and follow me." Matth. 16 : 24. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. Matth. 19 : 38, and he said unto them all, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow me. Luke 9 : 33. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Luke 14 : 27,

Here we learn in the first place, if we would be disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ, we must deny ourselves? Deny ourselves of what? Of all sinful indulgence and carnal pleasures. That is restrain our appetites and passions. Deny ourselves of conforming to the foolish fashions of the world ; and in many ways we may deny ourselves of all ungodliness, and worldly lusts. And again, we must take up our cross. An illusion is here had to the practice of compelling malefactors to bear their cross to the place of execution. The meaning is, that we must make any sacrifice, submit to any self-denial, and encounter any difficulties which may be needful in order to obey Christ's commands. Take up our cross in turning our backs upon to the world ; setting our faces Zionward ; turning our steps from marching hellward, to marching heavenward. Take up our cross in baptism, in being buried with Jesus beneath the yielding wave. Take up our cross in prayer, both public and private: "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." Eph. 6 : 18. Take up our cross in following Jesus in the beautiful ordinance of feet-washing ; and in all of his appointed ways and commands, take up our cross. Follow Jesus, not only whilst all things go smoothly but follow him through evil as well as good report. Follow him when the world points the finger of scorn. "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die : but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Rom. 8 : 13. But this taking up of our cross will not do alone. No, no, if we would be Christ's disciples we must take up our cross daily ; not only take up our cross on Sunday then lay it down until the next Sunday : but we must take up our cross daily and resist the devices of the adversary of our souls, "for he goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." This taking up of our cross and denying ourselves, seems to be the great point. We seem to be afraid to take up our cross and deny ourselves. Alas, for poor human nature ! Ashamed of Jesus ! Afraid to own him before the world ! But we learn from Luke 14 : 27, that unless we take up our cross and humbly follow Jesus we cannot be his disciples. And now brethren and sisters, let us follow Jesus more closely, cling more firmly to the bleeding side of a crucified but now risen Redeemer. "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us. Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith ; who for the joy set before him endured the cross,despising the shame and is now sitting at the right hand of God." Let us endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. Let us press forward toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and "not weary in well doing." And may we so live that we may obtain a seat at his right hand where there is fullness of joy and pleasure evermore. Follow Jesus in all his commandments, so that we may "have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city" where we may sing "praises unto the Lord God and the Lamb" where there is no more sickness, sorrow, pain or death. Where God's own soft hand will wipe all tears from our faces. Oh ! the glory of that celestial city, "whose builder and maker is God." And to you my dear unconverted readers whoever you may be, Oh ! be admonished by one who loves your souls : that immortal spirit of yours. You, who have never tasted of the good word of God, take up your cross, come out from the world, come seek an interest in the blood of Jesus. That blood cleanseth from all sin. Remember the agony that he suffered. Think of Jesus in the garden of Gethsemane. See him in his bloody sweat and bitter agony, when his sweat, was as it were great drops of blood rolling down to the ground. See him crowned with thorns which shoot their keen points into his blessed head—that head that ever meditated peace to poor lost and undone sinners, and spent many wakeful nights in ardent prayer for their happiness. View thy dying Savior breathing out his soul upon the cross. See his hands stretched out and nailed to the rugged wood—those beneficient hands which were unceasingly stretched out to relieve the sufferings of mankind. Behold his feet riveted to the accursed tree with rude nails—those feet which always went about doing good, travelling far and near to spread the glad tidings of salvation to a lost and ruined world. Then remember, poor sinner, it was for you and me that Jesus suffered all this. Was ever love like this ? and yet will you spurn his offers of love and mercy ? He is now standing with out-stretched arms inviting you to come to him, saying, "Come, take up thy cross and follow me." Oh, be wise ; fly to the ark of safety whilst you have time and opportunity to make your peace calling and election sure ! He will not always plead with you ; for soon he will come again—perhaps very soon : we know not the day nor hour ; but his errand will be a different one from his first advent. Then he came pleading ; but now he will come to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel.

Women Preaching.

There are two passages of scripture which are supposed by some divines to prohibit the praying and preaching of women in public. The first of these is 1 Cor. 14 : 34—35, "Let your women keep silence in the Churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be in obedience as also saith the law ; and if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home for it is a shame for women to speak in the Church." The other is 1 Tim. 11: 12: "But I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man ; but to be in silence." That these passages do not prohibit women from praying or preaching in public, is evident from the following considerations: in the prophecy of Joel, quoted by Peter in his sermon on the day of Pentecost, it is clearly predicted that women should preach under the gospel dispensation. "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." "On my hand maidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit and they shall prophesy." That the term prophesy in this and other passages means to preach, is too well known to need proof, and that the apostle Peter understood it in this sense is equally clear. That women preached in the apostolic age and that thousands are preaching at this time is well known. The inspired apostle must not be understood, therefore, as being opposed to female preaching. The writer of the passage under consideration, elsewhere speaks of women praying and prophesying in public, and gives direction with reference to their external appearance when engaged in these exercises. In the eleventh chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians, he says, "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head. Judge in yourselves; is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered? These passages teach that women did pray and prophesy in the primitive churches and that the apostle Paul approved of it. But he did not approve of their praying or preaching without the customary veil or covering for their heads. These passages when properly investigated and viewed in their connections, will be seen to have no reference whatever to the praying or preaching of women in public. They are evidently designed to restrain women from taking any part in public discussions and controversies of the church that would imply undue assumption of authority. They simply forbid women to take an active part in public debates, and contentious discussions. Such restrictions seemed to have been necessary in the time of Paul, and should they again become necessary the remedy is at hand. Woman was first sent by the Savior to preach his resurrection, and is it not the will of the Master now that she should preach Jesus and there surrection?

Divisions.

"Come let us reason together, saith the Lord: Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow;" Isaiah, 1 : 18.

We notice an article in the C. F. C., No. 24, on divisions, by Henry Koontz. I hope he is a brother, though he does not write much like one, or he would not compare Salem College with slavery. But perhaps I do not understand him. He says, "For illustration of the subject before us, we must refer to natural circumstances. The question of slavery is what we select for our present purpose." Now I think the brother is trying to make divisions; for I do not think that they thought of making a division among the brethren. Their idea might have been a good one for the cause. I do not know. Neither do I think they agitated slavery there. If that school is of God, we are in danger of being called to answer for making such an uproar about it; and I know no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse. But if it is not of God, we would say with Gallio, "If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O, ye Jews! reason would that I should bear with you." If we have the love of God in our hearts, we will not speak evil of any man. For all other things that are not of him must come to naught. Brethren give us some scripture explanations on the subject. We desire the pure milk of the word. In conclusion I would say, "Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine," and let us not make divisions where there are none.

Marriage in its True Signification.

In No. 20, Vol., 8, of the C. F. C. we have an article under the above heading, written by Mary B. Shelly, in reply to my answer to J. Shelly's query, in which she seems to be very presumptuous. I would just say, that when I wrote my answer to this query, I did it with a view to instruct not thinking that I would ever have to offer anything in defence of the same. And were it not an act of injustice to myself, I should not enter into any farther discussion of this subject; but justice demands that I expand my views on this subject, if I am able to do so in the spirit of friendship and brotherly love. To reiterate all that has been said in regard to this subject would be useless. Suffice it then to say in reply to the first objection in my former article, wherein the objector say "If marriage is a civil institution, man has a right to break or amend it, for the benefit of the parties; and if it is a religious institution, then it belongs to the religionist; and the worldlings have nothing to do with it." I am sorry that my views have been so misapprehended. To illustrate my views more fully, I would ask, does not the marriage contract have its engagement to men, and its vows to God? A Christian state recognizes marriage as a branch of public morality, and a source of civil peace and strength. Is it not connected with the society by assigning one woman to one man? And does not the state protect him in her exclusive possession? Christianity, by allowing divorce in the event of adultery, supposes also, that the crime must be proven by proper evidence, and before a magistrate. And lest divorce should be the result of unfounded suspicion or be made a cover for license, the decision of the case could not safely be lodged anywhere else. Marriage, too, is placing one human being more completely under the power of another, than any other relation; it requires laws for the protection of those who otherwise would be exposed to insult and injury. Are not also questions of property involved in marriage and its issue? The law, must therefore, for these, with many other mighty reasons, be cognizant of marriage; must prescribe various regulations respecting it; requires publicity of the contract, and guard, some of the great injunctions of religion in the matter by penalties. In every well ordered society, marriage must be placed under the cognizance and control of the state. But then, those who would have the whole matter to lie between the parties themselves, and the civil magistrate, seem wholly to forget that marriage is also a solemn, religious act; in which vows are made by both parties to God who engage to abide by all those laws with which he has guarded the institution. To love and cherish each other, and to remain faithful to each other, until death shall separate them;" for if at least they profess belief in christianity, whatever duties are laid upon husband and wife in the holy scriptures they engage to obey them by the very act of contracting marriage.

Having thus more fully come to the point of my position, I hope and trust I have been understood in the thoughts I have wished to convey; hoping and trusting if I have said anything that is not in accordance with the spirit of the gospel, that I shall have pardon at your hands, as well as from him who is the disposer of all events.

Yours in brotherly love and kindness. H. H. WEIMER.

Heaven.

Man naturally seeks for enjoyment and happiness; but, as a general thing, man takes the wrong direction, and places too much confidence in the transitory things of earth to realize true happiness. Indeed in this world of sin, and pains, and trouble, there can no place be found where pure and uninterrupted happiness reigns. But the Bible—the volume of God—discloses and reveals a place called "heaven," which is the final and eternal abode of the redeemed of God. There pure and unalloyed happiness reigns forever and ever. That beautiful place inspiration sublimely describes, to cheer and buoy up the weary Christian pilgrim as he passes through this world of troubles and separation, anticipating some day to be able through Jesus to sing his title clear to mansion in the skies.

Peter, when contemplating the dissolution of all earthly things, looks beyond and says, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." And John the divine, while on the isle of Patmos, was favored with a view of the new heaven—the final and ineffible glory of the abode of the faithful and white robed throng of God. And while John was beholding the celestial city, a voice proceeded from Him that sat upon the throne 'Write, for these words are true and faithful." "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things have passed away." "And I saw heaven opened." "And I saw a great white throne and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." "And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And said he unto me Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God. And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me the great city, the Holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God."

After John describes the "great city," he further says, "And the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass. And I saw a temple there; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of any sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bore twelve manner of fruits, and yielding her fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of nations. And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him. And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth the light; and they shall reign for ever and ever." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

A Popular Poem.

The following poem was originally written for the "Normal Weekly Review," a paper published by the Normal Literary Society of the State Normal School at Millersville, Pa., in 1857. It was in response to a little poem entitled "Be a Man." Although it commends itself to the admiration of every right-thinking mind, I have never seen it in the COMPANION; consequently, I shall submit it for publication, hoping that the truth which it inculcates may be strongly fixed in the hearts of those whom it addresses. May it be an incentive for the "fair" readers of the COMPANION to adorn themselves with the adorning which the Word of God recommends: (See 1st Peter 3 : 3, and 1st Tim. 2 : 9).

Be a Woman.

BY PROF. EDWARD BROOKS.

Oft I've heard a gentle mother,
As the twilight hours began,
Pleading with her son, of duty,
Urging him to be a man.
But unto her blue-eyed daughter,
Though with love's words quite as ready,
Points she out this other duty,
"Strive, my dear, to be a lady."

What's a lady? Is it something
Made of hoops, and silks, and airs?
Used to decorate the parlor
Like the fancy mats and chairs?
Is it one that wastes on novels
Every feeling that is human?
If 'tis this to be a lady,
'Tis not this to be a woman.

Mother, then, unto your daughter
Speak of something higher far
Than to be mere fashion's lady—
"Woman" is the brighter star.
If you, in your strong affection,
Urge your son to be a man,
Urge your daughter no less strongly
To arise and be a woman.

Yes, a woman! brightest model
Of that high and perfect beauty,
Where the mind and soul and body
Blend to work out life's great duty.
Be a woman! naught is higher
On the gilded list of fame;
On the catalogue of virtue
There's no brighter, holier name.

Be a woman! on to duty!
Raise the world from all that's low;

Place high in the social heaven
Virtue's fair and radiant bow.
Lend thy influence to each effort
That shall raise our nature human;
Be not fashion's gilded lady—
Be a brave, whole-souled, true woman.

The Second Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Luke 17: 30.

That our Lord Jesus Christ will appear again in this world for the fulfilling of the prophetic visions recorded in the Book of God, is a truth we think all Bible readers will admit; for Israel's prophets have spoken as plainly of his second appearance on earth as they did of his birth in Bethlehem's manger. In his first appearance on the earth he was "meek and lowly in heart;" he was as one that did serve: he laid aside his habiliments of power and glory; and left for a season, the pleasures and happiness of heaven; came to this world to be despised and persecuted—to endure the ignominious death of the cross—in order that we through him might be saved. But his second appearance will not be like the first nor for the same purpose; but he will be clad in power and great glory, "taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

We presume his appearance will be visible to all the inhabitants of the world: "Behold, he cometh with clouds! and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen." Rev. 1: 7. Here the declaration of the Revelator is, that all eyes shall see him, including the obedient and disobedient. In the chapter from which our selection is made we have an account of the state of the world at that time: "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, and were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." All these things will continue uniform and regular as usual, so that infidel scoffers will ask, "Where is the promise of his coming?" But as it was in that clear and beautiful morning when Lot fled from Sodom, so we are informed it will be at the second coming of Christ. As respects the precise time of his appearance, we are left without sufficient light to determine the very day. But our Savior has given us signs, or tokens, by which we may know of its near approach, and be prepared for his sudden appearance. We are informed that there shall be wars and rumors of wars, commotions, kingdom rising against kingdom, famine, pestilence, earthquakes in divers places, that the sun shall be darkened, the moon refuse to give its light, signs shall be visible in the sun, in the moon, and in the stars—distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear of the things that are coming to pass, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. Then the Son of man will be seen coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and with great glory. Oh, what a dreadful time! what a dark and gloomy period for the christian, as he gropes his way through this world of sin and misery, beset by sin on every side, harassed by the friends of the wicked one. But, blessed be God, there is one that sticketh closer than any earthly brother.

Dear reader, methinks the time is hastening on, when our Lord shall appear the second time on this earth. The day we cannot tell. The morning may be heralded on by troops of clouds of the most brilliant and burning hues, of deep, crimson ridges, fire-fringed volumes of purple, hanging far in the depths of the mild and beautiful heaven—long, rose tinted and golden plumes stretching up from the horizon to the zenith, forming, altogether, a most gorgeous, beautiful, and magnificient view to the eye, while, to complete the view, the sun may be observed just rising from his lair to shed a flood of gleaming light far over the earth, all things begemmed with bright dew-drops, flashing and twinkling in his beams. Man may be just arising to follow the pursuits or avocations of life, and the dreadful day just at hand. The Psalmist declares, "He makes the clouds his chariot, and walks upon the winds." And the Revelator adds his testimony and exclaims, "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." Yea, in that beautiful morning which we have tried to describe, the reverberating sound of Gabriel's trumpet will signal the glorious appearance of our Lord and Savior. Its thundering notes will penetrate the mansions of the dead. Then will heaven be opened and the appearing of our Savior become visible to all the inhabitants of the earth. The herald Gabriel may be the first to advance; next, the Son of God, seated on a cloud, from which red lightnings flash, and heart-rending thunders roar. The millennial day is opening now—amazement above, beneath, and all around; terror and glory joined in one. Then it is that the earth will shake, while angry meteors will be blazing from the heavens, the earth rocking, the ocean roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear of the things which are coming to pass on the earth. Amid all this the graves of the dead in Christ will be opened, and the dead saints under ground begin to move and come from their resting places, prepared to reign with Christ a thousand years. At this time I think the living will be changed, and meet their Lord in the air, and enjoy all the pleasure and happiness that are prepared for the children of God.

Kind reader, let us watch and be prepared; for this world is nearing its conflagration. The time is near at hand when the electric fluids of the earth and air will burst forth, and upheave and hurl to fragments this earth of ours.

With thund'rous din, 'mid smoke and fire,
This world will from this state retire.

Danger of Riches.

Who believes that riches are dangerous? Who is afraid of property or gold? Who imagines that a destructive viper lies coiled in the jeweled bosom of Mammon? Do not the shrewdest of minds bow at his golden shrine? Are not the learned and the wise found among the devotees in his georgeous temple? It is true that one who has been styled "the faithful and true witness" called him a deceitful god; but who fears his wily devices? Is not the busy multitude scrambling for a place among his worshipers? Do they not make the most humble obeisance as he passes by, and bow even to the ground for the touch of his argentine finger, and lay their heads in the dust for the smile of his auriferous lips? He fills the purse with glittering dust, and lo! the enraptured worshipper gives his entire confidence. The living God says, "Trust in me with all thine heart; there is naught beside that is worthy of thy confidence; thou shalt have no other gods before me; for I am God, and there is none other." Yet the poor, deluded victim, blinded by the god of this world, and charmed as by a serpent of resistless power, confides, and rushes into the yawning jaws—the gaping throat of endless death. The truth is that it is next to impossible for fallen, depraved, deceitful-hearted man to become comfortably rich without trusting in his possessions. And no trust in the universe is better attested than that, it is dangerous, foolish, and wicked to trust in anything but the living God for safety and happiness. Folly ends and wisdom begins with trusting our all in the hands of God. "Riches profit not in the day of wrath." "Their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord. They shall not satisfy their souls, . . . Because it is the stumbling block of their iniquity." "God shall likewise destroy thee forever . . . Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength, but trusted in the abundance of his riches."

Another danger lies in the fact that riches steal the heart. "Where treasure is, there will the heart be also." A man's treasure is anything he trusts in. We have seen that it is almost impossible for the rich man to avoid trusting in his riches. And it is impossible for a man to trust in anything without loving it. You may as well undertake to lift yourself over the moon as to undertake to keep your affections from the object of your trust. No law of metaphysics can set aside the eternal principal laid down by the omniscient Teacher whose word shall never pass away: "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The great point of danger here, lies in the fact that "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." You may as well try to put a pint of water and a pint of wine into a pint measure, at the same time, as to try to "love God with all the heart" and love the world at the same time. Remember, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha."

Foolish and hurtful lusts are another consequence of riches. "They that will be rich fall into a temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." Poverty, by taking away the means of indulgence, saves many from the ruin of their reputation, their health, and their undying souls. Riches, by furnishing the opportunities of indulgence, prevents honesty, industry, self-culture, and usefulness, and destroys reputation and health, and plunges the soul into unending ruin.

Another misfortune of the poor servants of mammon is deception. "The care of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful." The flatteries of friends, and those who court favors, and the self-esteem which arises out of these flatteries, and the superior advantages which arise out of these flatteries, and the superior advantages which money, property, and a thousand coveniences give the rich man, produces in him a feeling of independence. This is a state of mind far removed from that wich is absolutely necessary in order to approach God acceptably in prayer "Blessed are the poor in spirit: a broken and a contrite spirit, O God, thou wilt not despise." "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart." "I dwell in the high and the holy place, with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." But, alas. who will revive the heart of him who feels so comfortable and so secure and so independent on account of his possessions, that he can not feel broken-hearted and poor-spirited enough to bring an acceptable sacrifice to God who "resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." He is morally dead. —"dead in trespasses and in sins,"—and needs a resurrection. But he can not feel his need of help. His neighbors, his wealth, and his deceitful heart, flatter him. O God, who will show him his utter need, his abject poverty, his beggarly helplessness out of Christ, so that he may be enabled to cry to God with all his heart for the bread of life?

Richas harden the heart. The Lord says, "Be so kindly-affectioned one toward another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another." Jesus "looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." The feeling of independence cuts off sympathy. Self-indulgence produces the same effect. The heart, inflated and engrossed with these, naturally forgets and overlooks the wants and woes of its fellow-men. This brings it in direct contrariety to the blessed word which says, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others."

Another danger of wealth is its tendency to produce covetousness. The process of accumulation, the labor, the thought, the care, the anxieties, naturally, almost inevitably, produce in the soul a thirst for more. It is a taste or habit of the soul which is acquired by cultivation in the process of accumulation, as literary tastes and habits are acquired by literary pursuits. Every achievement of the warrior increases his thirst for power and glory. The powers, passions, or tastes of the soul increase by action and gratification. This is an invariable law of our being. One case only have I heard of in which any one whose heart was set on gold ever obtained enough to satisfy. This was one who, having obtained a large sum, and still thirsting for more, hired an army and invaded a wealthy country in the hope of conquest and vast spoils of gold. He was defeated and captured. His captor learning that the supreme object of his pursuit was gold, took a sufficient quantity of the precious substance, caused it to be melted, and then, with his own hand, gently poured it down the poor, thirsty man's throat. This had the desired effect. His thirst for gold was thoroughly quenched. (See Dick's works.) But this was an anomalous case, perhaps never to be repeated.

"Covetousness is idolatry." Wealth produces covetousness, hardness of heart, pride, self-sufficiency, deception, foolish and destructive lusts, love of the world and revenge, and steals confidence from God and gives it to mammon. Hence, "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven."

Little Mary's Wish.

BY MRS. L. M. BLINN.

I have seen the first robin of Spring, mother dear.
And have heard the brown darling sing;
You said, "Hear it and wish, and 'twill surely come true."
So I've wished such a beautiful thing!

I thought I would like to ask something for you;
But I couldn't think what there could be
That you'd want while you had all these beautiful things,
Besides you have papa and me!

So I wished for a ladder; so long that 'twould stand
One end by our own cottage door,
And the other go up past the moon and the stars,
And lean against heaven's white floor.

Then I'd get you to put on my pretty white dress,
With my sash and my darling new shoes,
And I'd find some white roses to take up to God.—
The most beautiful ones I could choose.

And you and dear papa would sit on the ground
And kiss me, and tell me "Good-bye;"
Then I'd go up the ladder far out of your sight,
Till I came to the door in the sky.

I wonder if God keeps the door fastened tight?
If but one little crack I could see,
I would whisper, "Please, God, let this little girl in:
She's as tired as she can be!

She came all alone from the earth to the sky;
For she's always been wanting to see
The gardens of heaven, with their robins and flowers.
Please, God, is there room there for me?"

And then, when the angels had opened the door,
God would say, "Bring the little child here."
But he'd speak it so softly, I'd not be afraid;
And he'd smile just like you, mother dear!

He would put his kind arms round your dear little girl.
And I'd ask him to send down for you,
And papa and cousin, and all that I love,
O dear! don't you wish 'twould come true?

The next Spring time when the robins came home.
They sang over grass and flowers
That grew where the foot of the ladder stood,
Whose top reached the heavenly bowers.

And the parents had dressed the pale, still child
For her flight to the summer-land,
In a fair white robe, with snow-white rose
Folded tight in her pulseless hand.

And now at the foot of the ladder they sit,
Looking upward with quiet tear,
Till the beckoning hand and the fluttering robe
Of the child at the top appear.

A Good Word for Romping Girls.

Most women have a dread of these. Mothers who would rather their little daughters were called anything but romps, say to them, "be very quiet now, my dears—don't run or jump, try to be little ladies." As if a healthy child could be still; as if it could take time to walk or step over what came in its way; as if it could fold its little hands in its lap, when its little heart is brimful of tickle. It is absurd and wrong because it is unnatural. Children, girls as well as boys, need exercise, indeed they must have it to be kept in a healthy condition. They need it to expand their chests, strengthen their muscles, tone their nerves, and develop themselves generally. And this exercise must be out of doors, too. It is not enough to have calisthenics in the nursery or parlor. They need to be out in the sunshine, out in the wind, out on the grass, out in the woods, out of doors somewhere, if it be no bigger place than the common or park. They need a romp every day of their lives. Suppose they do tan their pretty faces. Better be as brown as a berry and have the pulses quick and strong, than white as a lilly and complain of cold feet and headache. Suppose they do tear their clothes, tear them "every which way," suppose they do wear out five shoes, a pair a month, even; it don't try a mother's patience and strength half so much to patch and mend as it does to watch night after night a querulous sick child; and it don't drain a father's pocket-book half as quick to buy shoes as it does to pay doctor's bills. The odds are all on the side of the romps. Indeed, we don't believe there is a prettier picture in all the wide world than that of a little girl balancing herself on the topmost rail of an old zig-zag fence, her bonnet on one arm and a basket of blackberries on the other, her curls streaming out in the wind or rippling over her flushed cheeks, her apron half torn from its waist, and dangling to her feet, her fingers stained with the berries she has picked, and her lips with those she has eaten. Mother, mother, don't scold that little creature when she comes in and puts her basket on the table, and look ruefully at the rent in the new gingham apron, and at the little bare stockings sticking out of the last pair of shoes. Wash off her hot face and soiled hands, and give her a bowl of cool milk and light bread, and when she has eaten her fill and got rested, make her sit down beside you and tell you about what she has seen off in those meadows and woods. Her heart will be full of beautiful things—the sound of the wind, the talk of the leaves, the music of the wild birds and the laugh of the wild flowers, the rippling of streams and color of pebbles, the shade of the clouds, and the hue of the sunbeams—all those would have woven their spell over her innocent thoughts and make her a poet in feeling, if not in expression.

No, mother, don't nurse up your little girls like house-plants. The daughters of this generation are to be the mothers of the next, and if you would have them healthy in body and genial in temper, free from nervous affections, fidgets and blues; if you would fit them for life, its joys, its cares and its trials, let them have a good romp every day while they are growing. It is nature's own specific, and, if taken in season, warranted to cure all the ills of the girl and the woman.

Brethren's Almanac.

In order to have ample time for the preparation of the Almanac for 1873, and have it as complete as possible, we now call the attention of the friends of the work, and all others, to the subject of its preparation and correction.

In the first place we wish the assistance of all the brethren and sisters in preparing suitable reading matter; as well as in perfecting and correcting the list of ministers. We do hope that we shall be enabled to obtain all the names of our ministers in our next list. Also to strike out all names improperly on the present list. We shall be very thankful to brethren who are acquainted in the brotherhood, who will give our present list a general review.

We also suggest the propriety of omitting the prognostications of the weather, and a few other almanac singularities.

Will be pleased to receive suggestions, instructions, corrections, &c., from all our friends.

Tune and Hymn Book.

We are glad to be able to inform our readers that the Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book will be ready for distribution about the middle of August.

The book contains all the hymns in the Brethren's new Hymn Book, with a tune adapted to every hymn; and yet the book is not so voluminous as to be inconvenient.

The tunes are set in seven character notes, same as used in the Harmonia Sacra, Song Crowned King, and Christian Harp. It is just such a book as we need—a Hymn Book and a Music Book—and we predict for it an extensive circulation.

The Tune and Hymn Book may be ordered at any time; and orders will be filled, as soon as we receive the book from the binders.

Editorial Correspondence.

THURSDAY, JULY 11th. This morning we set out for Minnesota. Our company consisted of Dr. B. and Emma, brother and sister Martin Buechley, and ourself. Brother Peter Huff kindly consented to let us have his carriage, a very comfortable vehicle, for which he will accept our thanks. We traveled by way of Cedar Falls, Shell Rock, Clarksville, Marble Rock, and Green, and the first night we lodged at brother Jacob Harter's, who entertained us kindly. We were very tired, and could not see that such traveling was conducive to good health. But,

FRIDAY, 12th, after a good night's rest, feeling very well, we concluded it might still result to the better. Old Brother Harter went with us to the Shell Rock river, a few rods from his house, and gave us an idea of his fishing accomplishments. We took the canoe, and being well armed with speers, we were soon among the fishes. Such droves of them we never saw. We soon had the speers all out in the river; but they all came in without any fishes. Not one could we hit. Brother Harter killed two of them. We might have accomplished something after a little practice, but our conductor (brother Martin) gave orders to get aboard. For some distance we traveled close by the Shell Rock river. We are free to confess that so beautiful a river we never saw before. The water is so clear that we could see the bed of the river, covered with clean rock and gravel. And as we drove along, we could see droves of fishes. We could hardly refrain from attacking them; but we were hurried along. We have always been favorable to the West, but we never saw anything so enticing as the country along the Shell Rock, in the vicinity of Green. While dining by the wayside, we had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of a Mr. Baltimore, who kindly supplied us with grain for our horses. At about four o'clock we arrived at brother William Workman's, at Nora Springs, and rested the balance of the afternoon. In the evening we tried to preach in the Campbellite Hall, where an appointment had been made. Lodged at brother Workman's where we were made comfortable.

SATURDAY, 13th. This was the day appointed for the Lovefeast at this place, to be held in brother Workman's barn. Services began at 10 o'clock. A respectable congregation assembled. This branch of the church is called Coldwater. Brother J. F. Ikenberry is the elder. Brethren Benjamin Ellis and W. J. H. Bauman are ministers. Brethren Peter Forney and Elias Troxel, of Benton county, were also with us and assisted in the labor. After the examination services two persons, man and wife, were immersed; both from Minnesota. There was good attention in the evening, and we all thought we had a good meeting. We lodged with brother Bauman, who is one of our live ministers, and a friend of the COMPANION.

SUNDAY, 14th. Meeting was appointed at 10 o'clock. The seats were moved to the grove close by, and a large assembly convened. It fell upon ourself to speak, which the Lord enabled us to do with some freedom. Brethren Troxel and Forney followed. One person was immersed. In the evening attended an appointment at a school-house. Elder Forney and brother Troxel spoke from the words, "What shall we do to be saved?" Our company lodged with brother Michael Toothman's, originally from Virginia.

MONDAY, 15th. We took an early start, and traveled about fifty miles. Lodged at the hotel at Howard Centre, once the county-seat of Howard county, but now almost a deserted, waste.

TUESDAY, 16th. To-day it is two months since we left home, and to-day we arrived at the house of brother

Joseph Ogg's, in Filmore county, Minn., in time for dinner. Sister Ogg is a sister to brother Martin Buechley, and brother Ogg is the elder of the congregation at this place. Here we are inditing this report. We expect to remain in this vicinity for a few days at least, and then extend our visit to Minneapolis, by rail-road. We still expect to return home about the sixth of August. Our trip so far has been very agreeable and pleasant. Have received unmerited kindness at the hands of brethren and friends everywhere. Our health has been gradually improving to some small degree at least.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother H. R. Holsinger : I am pressed with a few thoughts this Sabbath eve, which I wish to communicate through your paper to the reading world. The pen is a mighty weapon, by which we can mingle and co-mingle our thoughts, though living far distant from each other, we thank God that we live in an age of such privileges. Yet, we may abuse this God-given right, if we are not on our watch and guard At our late A. M. we were permitted to meet and hold friendly intercourse with each other, and discuss the several subjects that came up for consideration, among them the subject of the use of tobacco, was duly considered, and a decision was arrived at ; but you publicly remarked that we had better discuss the subject through the periodicals, that more good would be accomplished.

Now I see that space has been given and articles written on the subject, one quite lately, to which I wish to offer some criticisms. When we preach, we take a text as a foundation for what we may have to say, and that we always take from the word of God. The Savior said, in his high, priestly prayer, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." The word of God is the criterion by which we are governed, the compass by which we steer through life's journey. Truth is one of the attributes of God. Love is another ; mercy is another. There are also virtues in the christian economy, among which temperance, patience, and brotherly kindness are prominent. The apostle says, "Be temperate in all things." "If these things be in you, and abound, they will make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of God." When we take up a text not found in the Bible, we are apt to run riot, as is the case with the article under consideration. There are assertions made, which, if they were true, would show a bad light indeed ; but if not true, they fall to the ground, or rest upon him who makes the assertion. Gen. 1 : 29, We read, "And God said, Behold I have given you every herb-bearing seed which is upon the face of all the earth ; and every tree in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed : to you it shall be for meat." 31st verse. "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good." In contrast I will not quote any of the article under consideration, but read it for yourself, in C. F. C. No 28, page 445, and draw your own conclusions. The apostle says, "Every creature of God is good ; and nothing to be refused if it be received with thanksgiving. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith, and good doctrine whereunto thou hast attained." Above is an extensive text, an avenue leading out into a broad plain. Do you comprehend it brother? "Salt is good ; but if salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted ? It is not fit, but for the dung-hill, or to be cast under the feet of men."

GEORGE WORST.

Fear.

Brother Henry : In number 25, page 387, we find an article headed, The Restitution (Acts 3 : 21). The article teaches, "love is the fulfilling of the law, and perfect love casts out all fear." I would not object so much to this, but I heard a brother repeat the same whilst preaching, saying, "perfect love casts out all fear." Brethren the word "all" is not there ; neither should it be there ; for in Heb. 12 : 28, we read, "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." In 1st John 4 : 18, we read, "Perfect love casteth out fear ;" we should not be afraid to serve the Lord, but we must reverence God and fear him. We have at least two hundred passages of scripture which teach of fearing God. I do believe that every person who is filled with the love of God, is always fearing that he might do wrong. It is not a slavish or man fear, that keeps us from doing what our Savior requires of us, but that we may be ready to do, before all men, what God has left for us to do, not fearing any mortal man.

JOHN KNISELY.

Brother Holsinger : Permit me to present a few queries to the readers of the COMPANION.

In Matth. 24 : 20, we read, "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath-day ;" The query is, Why do not the Brethren pray in regard to this ?

Second. Where is the scripture to be found that reads after this manner, "If he does more evil than good, the good shall not be mentioned." I once heard a minister read it and I was never able to find it.

Third. Why do not the Brethren hold public prayer in regard to electing a Minister or a Deacon ? Can they do so without the assistance of Christ ?

Fourth. What will become of the church finally if pride is carried on much farther ? I submit the latter question to the young members who have not yet altogether renounced Satan. SAMUEL ZUMBRUN.

Notice.

All to whom it may concern : The Church in which the District Meeting of the North-eastern District of Ohio, in 1873, is to be held, wish to give notice through their periodicals that they appointed W. Arnold, of Somerset, Perry County, Ohio, as Corresponding Secretary. Any person wishing any information on that matter can address him at the above-named office. The time and place of said Meeting will be announced through our periodicals in due time.

By order of the Church.

ELI STONER.

Editors of the C. F. C.: As it has been some time since I last troubled you with matter for publication in your worthy paper, I will try to report a few items from this part of "God's moral vineyard."

We hold meetings in our Aughwick congregation every eight weeks, at twenty different points, and at one point every two weeks. Eight of the brethren are called speakers. Some of them are unable, by reason of age and infirmities, to labor or travel much: others, for other reasons, do not accomplish much: still I trust that at least nearly all that is done by any of them is a well-meant sacrifice."

Our old, principal meeting-house has this Summer undergone a pretty thorough reparation under the supervision of a committee of five brethren appointed by the church. I think they discharged their duty nobly, under very difficult circumstances. Formerly there were no backs to the seats; now they are so much more comfortable for the aged, the delicate in health, the weary and the wayward to sit on during meeting. The burying-ground close by has been enlarged and enclosed by a good paling fence, whitewashed, by authority of the church. We may be negligent or extravagant in these as well as in all other things with which we associate; and the propriety of our transactions, which is the point between negligence and extravagance, must be, if not wholly, at least largely determined by existing facts or circumstances. Therefore we should not advise all who have no meeting-houses at once to build. Neither should we say to those who have built and left them in such a condition as ours was, "You must follow us in improving them." Neither should we say to those who leave their burrying-ground in a condition which we considered disrespectful, "You must do exactly as we have done;" but we should always advise to think and act according to known existing facts and circumstances.

Several weeks ago I overheard an account of a very rash, and heart-rending circumstance, relative to a man in our congregation and a hired, fatherless boy about ten years of age. The story, as near as I can recollect, ran thus:—The man sent the boy to the field to bring a clevis from a plow. He returned telling his employer he could not loosen the clevis from the plow, when the man commenced and continued to lash and beat him unmercifully with a wagon whip until rescued by persons who were near enough to hear the screams of the child. Upon examination it was discovered that the poor boy's skin was shamefully lacerated and his flesh very much bruised. The poor man soon afterwards paid the boys mother one hundred and fifty dollars for his folly. I hope that not only he, but all who are acquainted with the circumstance, will receive lessons of good instruction from it, whether it be exactly true as given here or not.

On the same day I was also informed that a young man of the same neighborhood, who was apparently in the enjoyment of good health, wrestled and played with his comrades after dinner, and when the bell rang to go to work, he fell to the ground, dying in a moment! Surely, life is very uncertain, and death is very certain to meet every one at some time and in some way; therefore all should, at every moment, be prepared to meet him

On last Sunday evening a boy, who had been laboring for a man that lives upon the banks of the Aughwick Creek, was sent to bring the cows from the field. The cows came to the yard. After some time the boy was missed. Search was made for him, but no trace of him could be found until on Wednesday, when his body was seen floating on the creek, nearly a mile from the place where he had resided. The body was taken out of the water, and recognized to be that of the lost boy only by the clothes on it, and the cow-whip which was still in his hand. It is supposed that he accidentally fell into the water and drowned. "All flesh is as grass."

J. B. GARVER.

Sin Against the Holy Ghost.

Brother Henry: An explanation is desired by brother Kistler, on the subject of the "Sin against the Holy Ghost." He tells us he had formed an idea from the scriptures, but by reading an article from the pen of brother D. B. Klepper, the props were knocked away. By referring to said article, we infer that he does not believe there is such a sin that is unpardonable. Now we propose to give our view of the subject, whether it will meet with general approval or not, we do not know. In the first place we assert there is such a sin; for the Savior says, Matth. 12: 31, 32, "Wherefore I say unto you; all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh against the son of man it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Other scriptures might be referred to, but this is sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that a man may commit an act that will seal his doom for ever and ever; for this world and the world to come; for it was said by him that spoke as never man spake. But what may that be, and by whom may it be committed? While one says, it may be committed by the unregenerated, as well as the regenerated. Another says, or intimates, by neither. We shall take the middle course and say it may be committed, but only by those who were regenerated and born again. Now an assertion is not worth much as long as it cannot be backed up by gospel evidence, and that is what we propose to do. The apostle Paul in his address to the Hebrews 6th chapter, commencing at 4th verse, says, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come. If they shall fall away, to renew them again to repentance seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." Above we have stated, that the language of the Savior is, he that sinneth against the Holy Ghost hath no forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come. Paul specifies clearly, what that sin is. But we cannot sin against the Holy Ghost, until we are made partakers of the same, For fear some may take advantage of my remarks, I will explain: Merely falling away will not so agrieve the Good Spirit as never more to return; but we will once more quote Paul's writing to the Hebrews, 10th chapter commencing at the 26th verse, "For if we sin wilfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins. But a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised the law of Moses, died without mercy, under two or three witnesses. Of how much greater punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing; and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace?" When we are once adopted into the family of God by the law given by Jesus, handed down to us by his faithful followers, and have an application of the blood of Christ which will cleanse us from all sin, we then have a foretaste of heaven, which many can testify to. After having gone thus far, and enjoyed all the good graces which God intended should make us happy, in time, and in eternity, we turn about, and wilfully abuse the people of God, speak reproachfully of them. For instance, when they are assembled to commemorate the sufferings and death of their dear Lord, which they wish to hold fresh in their memory. Now if we were to make an effort to hinder them from that enjoyment which they longed to enjoy, and publicly proclaim that they were doing an unholy act, and that the blood of the covenant was an unholy thing, (that very thing that once sanctified us), and act despitefully against the spiritual favors of God. From such, the gentle wooing of the Spirit, will withdraw in disgust; give them up in despair; give them over to a hardness of heart, and a reprobacy of mind, to do those things that are not convenient. With a fearful looking for of judgment. And when the time comes to meet the Judge, "They will call upon the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of Him that sits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." But brethren and sisters, who ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to the general assembly and church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven. For we know, if our earthly house, if this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Let us then look forward with this anticipation, and not fall away from our first faith.

GEORGE WORST.

Notes of Travel by C. Bucher.

On the 13th of June, at 3 o'clock P. M., I took the cars at Lebanon, Pa; and under providential privileges I landed safely at Alliance, Ohio, at 5 o'clock A. M. 14th. Here it was found necessary to undergo a good ablution, after which the fast was broken at a public house. At 7, took cars again and arrived at Cleveland at about 10, A. M. Here I had to lay over till 2 P. M. These were long hours, but at last the journey was resumed. At 5 P. M. arrived at Bellevue, Sandusky county, Ohio. At this place I was met by brother Joseph B. Lichty, who took me to his and his father-in-law's (Samuel Loas's Sr.) house, whose hospitalities I was permitted to share until 5 o'clock in the morning of the 15th, when we started with private conveyance for love-feast in Broken Sword church, Crawford county, distance 22 miles. Arrived in good time to attend forenoon services. It took place at the house of Elder John Brillbart. At the time appointed, a goodly number, for those parts, had assembled; and we had a good time of it. Two admissions by baptism, one, a damsel of about twelve years. May the good Lord and Shepherd bless and guide them to the end of this life's journey. Everything passed off pleasantly in the evening exercises. The ministers in this church are Elder J. Brillbart, H. Keller, Wm. Young, Daniel Chambers and Isaac Ankeny. Ministers present from other churches, Elder Noah Hendricks, David Rupp, John Shontz, Israel Rupp, S. Walker, S. Loas Jr. Wm. Sadler, H. Kilhefner, D. Workman and I. Hefler.

The preaching was continued here until noon, Sunday 16th, but I have not had the pleasure of remaining. My pilot was ready to start at 5½ o'clock for meeting in Green Creek church, Seneca county, distance 14 miles. Arrived in good time, and had quite a pleasant Lord's day, one long to be remembered. Preaching in in A. M. and P. M. The ministers in this church are George Kern and S. Loas Jr. At this place I had the pleasure of forming an acquaintance with brother C. Wise, of Mansfield. Dined with friend Henry Loas; and in the evening was conveyed to the house of brother Joseph Snavely, whose hospitalities we shared until the morning of the 17th. This was the day appointed to meet the German Reformed in public debate. The place agreed upon to meet in, was a new and commodious building erected by the New Lutherens. When we arrived the house was nearly filled, and a little later the building, although large was unable to hold all. The disputants on the part of the German Reformed were Prof.——Good of Tiffin College, and friend Keller, the officiating minister of the place or neighborhood of debate; who were on the ground early, waiting for disputants on the part of the Brethren, who were my humble self and brother Wise. The subjects to be examined and argued were: "Are infants to be baptized?" "Is sprinkling gospel baptism?" and "Is it essential for christians to wash one another's feet?" As a matter of course, in the first two they affirmed and we denied, and in the last we affirmed and they denied. The debate was carried on in English and German, one English and one German speaker on each side. I am very well aware that many would like to have a full report of the debate, but it is impossible to do such a thing from mere memory and recollections without doing injustice to some. I will say this much here; that the debate was conducted in a very friendly way, and no labor spared, especially on the Brethren's side, to keep up a good feeling; and as far as I could learn the impressions made, in general, upon the audience, by the arguments advanced, were on the Brethren's side; so much so as to say, infant baptism and baptism by sprinkling are not in the gospel, and feet-washing is. As one of the other side of the house was heard to say: "The Brethren have the ground and also build thereon."

On the 18th, at 6 o'clock P. M. the debate was brought to a close; the audience dispersed, and all seemed to be well pleased, save a few. The Prof., however, who was so very strong in the beginning to continue a whole week if they should not succeed, left in the evening of the first day, and did not return any more in consequence of which another friend Keller, brother of the above mentioned, and preacher at Bellevue, was substituted. Brother John Beegbly, of Ashland, took me into his carriage at place of debate and landed me safe at the house of his son Mahlon, the same evening, distance six miles.

WEDNESDAY, 19th.—Started at 5 o'clock A. M. in company with brother John Beeghly, wife and daughter for their home—made a short call at 9, at the house of brother Beelman's, formerly of Cumberland county, Pa.; and at 11, we were at the house of brother Israel Helfer, minister in Richland Church; after having the fill of the necessaries of life for man and beast we proceeded on our journey and reached brother Beeghly's house at about 6, in the evening—distance 45 miles—found their family all well, and what is still better, all members of the church except one.

THURSDAY, 20th—Started again at 5½ A. M. accompanied by brother Beeghly and his oldest son, a Brother, for Ashland, where some more brethren joined our company, from whence we pursued our journey by car to Akron. Here brother Jacob Mishler's team was in attendance to convey our company to Mogadore, where we arrived just in time to participate in forenoon preaching of love-feast and communion meeting. P. M. choice for minister, brother George Casper fell victim. The name of this church is Springfield, and the ministers are J. B. Mishler, David Young, and George Casper,. Ministering brethren from other churches present: H. Kurtz, N. Caylor, P. J. Brown, M. Weaver, D. M. Witmer and Wm. Sadler and perhaps a few others that I cannot recall now. Two admissions by baptism. After meeting we were conducted to brother John Royer's house for night's lodging.

FRIDAY, 21st.—All aboard the wagon at 5½, A. M. for Akron, thence by car to Orrville. Bro. M. Weaver, being pilot, conducted us to some of his friends at this place, where dinner was served. At 2 P. M. the train for our destination was in order. We joined in and in half an hour we were comfortably lodged in the house of brother Cyrus Hoover, place where late Annual Meeting was held, where we unanimously agreed to stay for the night.

SATURDAY, 22.—Brother Hoover's team conveyed us to the place of their love-feast, house of brothor Zimmerman, Chippeway Church. The ministers here are J. B. Shoemaker, G. Irwin, C. Hoover and E. Yoder; present from abroad, Moses Weaver and David Rittenhouse. Good attendance and good order. One admission by baptism. After meeting brother Weaver conducted us to the house of friend Zigler's, an Amish family, where we were kindly provided with good beds.

SUNDAY, 23d.—Repaired to place of love-feast, early for breakfast, and at 5½, A. M. were seated in buggy enroute for Orrville and thence by car to Canton, where we arrived at 8. Brother Samuel Royer being in attendance with team to convey us to Centre Meeting-house, their place of worship. Arrived in good time and tried to preach to a very attentive audience. At this meeting I had the pleasure of meeting Elder Henry Kurtz again. Dined with brother Royer's—a deacon in this church—Canton Church, if I made no mistake; moved here from our church, Tulpehocken, Lebanon county, Pa., P. M. attended to some visiting at friends Wenger's and Rohrer's, members of the Menonite church, and after supper repaired to the house of brother John Shankle's, Mrs. Wenger and sister Shankle being first cousins to my deceased father.

MONDAY, 24.—Brother Shankle conveyed me to the place of their love-feast, house of brother Seafong, about three miles east of Louisville. At this place I found the largest gathering of the kind on the whole journey. One admission by baptism. Benjamin Bollinger chosen to the ministry and Josiah Keim advanced to second degree. Board of minsters stands now: Daniel Clapper, Josiah Keim and B. Bollinger. Ministers present from abroad, H. Kurtz, N. Caylor, J. B. Shoemaker, George Irwin, Lewis Glass, J. A. Clement, N. Longanecker, D. Young and ———Murray. Very good attention and order maintained through all the exercises.

After meeting in the night, I was taken to the house of friend Stoner, near Canton—distance ten miles—reached destination at 1 o'clock. Friend Stoner is a minister among the York Brethren—a branch of the River Brethren; but his companion is a sister of ours, and alive in the cause too. Here I found the Grandfather — or father-in-law — brother Bowser, formerly from York county, Pa., aged about 80 years, taking his night's rest on a large rocking chair. This, I was told, was his lot for years—dropsy is the cause. Poor brother! I thought while looking at him; but he seems to be rich and contented.

After a short, but good rest I got up again by the help of the Lord, in the morning of Tuesday 25th—broke the fast, and was taken by a young man on the farm, to Canton, where I took the cars for Harrisburg, Pa., where I arrived safely in the evening at about 10 o'clock. Trains not making connection, I repaired to the hotel for night's lodging.

WEDNESDAY, 20, Continued my journey—and arrived at my home at 5, P. M. found family, and friends in general, all well. Taking all together, everything passed off pleasantly on the whole journey,—not meeting a single case of sickness, save the aged brother above-mentioned. Met hosts of friends of the "Pennsylvania Dutch" who were very anxious to hear the Gospel preached in that dialect.

Since writing the above, I was informed that in Green Creek Church, Seneca Co., Ohio, the place of debate; Martin Loas and wife, and wife of Henry Loas, were initiated into that church by baptism. Said Martin Loas, wife being sprinkled in her infancy, parents objected to her being re-baptized, as they called it; this gave rise to the debate. May the Lord our God bless all the good impressions made, and grant grace that they may be worked out, to the salvation of souls and his own glory, through Christ Jesus. Amen.

In the Solomon Creek congregation, Elkhart county, Indiana, May 27, sister SUSANNAH DEARDORFF, wife of friend Peter Deardorff, aged 50 years, 9 months and 7 days. Funeral by the Brethren, from Heb. 13 : 14.

In Centerview Church, Johnson county, Mo., June 2d, brother ADAM MICHAEL, aged 37 years, 7 months and 17 days. He was a faithful member about 20 years. He was resigned to the will of God, leaving behind an affectionate wife, [who is a sister,] and seven children and many friends to mourn their loss. He was afflicted much for about three years, which he bore with great patience.

Thomas J. Allen.

In Branch County, Michigan, with Typhoid fever, May 12th, HARRIET, wife of Brother Levi Dague. Aged 49 years, 10 months and 5 days. This subject was a daughter of our old friend Daniel Flickinger, who still lives, but is leaning over the grave. Our loving Sister lived in matrimony 27 years, was a mother of five children, and a faithful member of the church 14 years. From our acquantance with our departed sister and her family, we truly believe that Brother Levi did not only lose a wife but a kind mother to her family, and a bright pattern of a christian life. May the good Lord teach the bereaved family to know that their great loss is her eternal gain.

Funeral services from Solomon Songs, 4 : 16, by D. M. Truby, and H. Gephart.

In the Green Creek Branch, Bedford Co., Pa., July 18th, Brother JOHN L. HOOVER, after an illness of about 3 months; aged 31 years, 2 months and 2 days. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren, from John 11 : 14.

In East Union township, Wayne County, Ohio, MARGARET HINTSBERGER, died June 22nd. Aged 60 years and 20 days. Funeral services by J. B. Shoemaker

In the Chippeway church, Wayne County, Ohio, ISAAC HAINES, died June 28, with inflammation of the bowels. This young man had neglected to prepare himself to meet God, until he came on his death bed. Then he became alarmed about the salvation of his soul, he then began to pray, and to call upon others to pray for him, and a few days before he died he sent word to me. I accordingly went. I asked him what his desire was. He said, he would like for us to sing and pray for him. We did so, he also seemed to be engaged in solemn prayer. We then told him to put his trust in the Jesus, and pray for mercy, because he was sinking fast. He then said, that he believed that he had peace with God, and if he could he would like to be baptized, but under his circumstances it could not be then, but if he would get well he would attend to all the christian duties, but in perhaps 24 hours he was a corpse. His funeral was attended by a very large concourse of people. Funeral services from these words, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel," by J. B. Shoemaker, and Samuel Longanecker.

November 28, 1871, in the State of West Virginia, Preston Co., PETER FIKE, aged 77 years and 25 days. This Brother was living in the German Settlement Congregation of the German Baptist Church, of which he has been a consistent menber for 52 years. He was married to Magdalene Arnold, daughter of Eld. Samuel Arnold. He left a widow and ten children to mourn their loss; but we hope our loss is his gain. Four of his sons and six daughters are members of the German Baptist Church. They are all married, and all their companions are members except one. The eldest son is an Elder, the next two sons are Visiting Brethren, and the youngest son is a Minister in the second degree. He left 79 grand-children, of which 61 are living, and nearly all who have come to years of discretion are members of the Church. One of them is a Minister in the first degree, and one a Visiting Brother. There are 33 great-grand-children, all small, of which 30 are living.

Funeral by the writer, from Rev. 14 : 13, to a large concourse of people.

Solomon Buckley.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Fire by the Sea.

[The following equisite verses are entitled "The Fire by the Sea." They are from the gifted pen of Alice Cary; and the thoughts of my heart while reading this sweet rendering of the 21st of John, was, "She being dead yet speaketh." How many of the readers of the COMPANION will feel their hearts stirred while reading this pen-picture of a scene that happened long ago on the sea-shore of Galilee?]

There were seven fishers with nets in their hands,
And they walked and talked by the sea-side sands:
Yet sweet as the sweet dew-fall
The words they spake, though they spake so low,
Across the long, dim centuries flow,
And we know them, one and all—
Aye! know them and love them all.

Seven sad men in the days of old,
And one was gentle, and one was bold,
And they walked with downcast eyes;
The bold was Peter, the gentle was John,
And they were all sad, for the Lord was gone,
And they knew not if he would rise—
Knew not if the dead would rise.

The live-long night, till the moon went out,
In the drowning waters they beat about:
Beat slow through the fogs their way;
And the sails dropped down with wringing wet,
And no man drew but an empty net;
And now 'twas the break of day—
The great, glad break of the day.

"Cast your nets on the other side—"
('Twas Jesus speaking across the tide)—
And they cast and were dragging hard;
But that disciple whom Jesus loved
Cried straightway out, for his heart was moved;
"It is our risen Lord—
Our Master, and our Lord."

Then Simon, girding his fisher's coat,
Went over the nets and out of the boat—
Aye! first of them all was he:
Repenting sore the dismal past,
He feared no longer his heart to cast
Like an anchor into the sea—
Down deep in the hungry sea.

And the others, through the mists so dim,
In a little ship came after him,
Dragging their nets through the tide;
And when they had gotten close to the land
They saw a fire of coals in the sand,
And, with arms of love so wide,
Jesus, the crucified!

'Tis long, and long, and long ago,
Since the rosy lights began to flow
O'er the hills of Galilee;
And with eager eyes and lifted hands
The seven fishers saw on the sands
The fire of coals by the sea—
On the wet, wild sands by the sea.

'Tis long ago, yet faith in our souls
Is kindled just by that fire of coals
That streamed o'er the mists of the sea;
Where Peter, girding his fisher's coat,
Went over the net and out of the boat,
To answer, "Lov'st thou me?
Thrice over, "Lov'st thou me?

For the COMPANION.

True and False Religion.

All men are religiously inclined, or all men have an object upon which their chief affections are placed. There always has been a false religion and a true. The true has been opposed by the false. In proof of this proposition, I refer first to Gen. 4: 3, 4; "And in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord. And Able, he also brought of the first things of his flock, and of the fat thereof, and the Lord had respect unto Able and to his offering; but unto Cain and his offering, he had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell. And the Lord said unto Cain. Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door; and unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him. And Cain talked with Able, his brother. And it came to pass when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Able, his brother, and slew him."

This shows how early men began to devise ways of their own in which to worship, aside from the commandments of the Lord God, and how vexed and envious they feel toward the true worshipers when they see them accepted and blessed of the Lord, and themselves rejected. 2 no. 3; 12, "Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? because his works were evil, and his brother's righteous." So the Lord banished Cain, and put a wide distance between him and his father's house, so that his wicked influence might not affect the younger members of the family and their posterity. But alas! the earth is now filled with all manner of filthiness in body and mind. The nations are ensnared; for when men are in filthy habits, not well reported and become servants in the church of God, they fall into reproach and the snare of the devil.

Isaiah 14: 11, 12: Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning? how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations?" Sinful and ungodly, filthy habits, must be abandoned. The day will come that all the pomp of filthy habits will be brought down to the grave; and the fulfilling of the righteousness of the law, in holiness and purity of love to God and the Lord Jesus Christ, in abstaining from all appearance of evil, will alone have the justification of the full sanctification of the word and Spirit of God. "Without are dogs and sorcerers, and whoremongers and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." But he that is unjust will be unjust; for all is at the door of his will, and he that is filthy will be so at all times of reproving. For when he is reproved of his unbecoming, filthy habits, he will justify his ways by the action of others.

I have been led to meditate much of late, upon the mercy of the Lord. I look back through my past life, and see such a multidude of transgressions; so many broken vows; so little good, and so much evil; so much mis-spent time, that I greatly wonder that he did not long ago cut me off as a cumberer of the ground. Truly it is of the Lord's mercies that I am not consumed, because his compassions fail not. My dear brethren, it is not all sunshine in the Christian's course. Often we are enveloped in thick darkness, clouds, and tempests, and we cry out with the psalmist, "The waters have come into my soul. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing; I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me. All thy waters are gone over me." This is not because of God's unfaithfulness; on the contrary it is because he is faithful to us. He allows them in mercy to us. He knows the deceitful human heart never would be purified, unless it passed through the deep waters of affliction, as well as the flowery plains of his love. But let us not presume on the mercies of God, and think "because he is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy," that therefore we may continue practices which we are convinced are wrong, and for which our hearts condemn us, and try to make ourselves believe they are little things which the Lord will not begin to notice. He will not approve and smile upon us unless repenting we also forsake sin. Why will we compel God to give us so many bitter cups to drink, ere we learn the lesson he wishes us to learn of submission, patience, forbearance and obedience? It is sweet to live so that our hearts condemn us not. Then will the rich blessing of God distill upon us like the gentle dew: and our peace will be like a river. But we need to examine ourselves thoroughly by the word of God, and see whether we are in the faith of the gospel or not, and prove ourselves that we be not deceived.

The Rainbow.

I hear the rolling thunder, and can see the flash of the vivid lightning, playing with the disappearing elements of the storm that has just passed. While upon us the dashing rain came down in torrents, peal after peal of crashing thunder made the earth tremble, the forked lightning dazzled the eye and lifted the giant oak, shivering it to atoms and scattering the branches hither and thither. Madness seemed to have seized the elements, and the voice of nature's God was terrible indeed.

But the storm is past; the sun has come out, and, behold, yonder, painted upon that cloud in which were gathered such furies, the beautiful Rainbow, in all its diversified beauties! As a thing to look at, it is magnificient; as a sublime object of nature, it is marvelous in our eyes, as a subject of meditation, it is an open book of Divine Authorship, in which we may look and read of the love of God. Before there was such a significance connected with the Rainbow as there now is, God's fierce anger was gathered together as in clouds of blackness and darkness; the furies of an offended I AM were as the piercing lightning, and terrific thunder that characterized the great storm of His indignation and wrath, that came upon the sin imbued, antideluvian world. Terrible indeed, were the outpourings of God's vengeance upon that wicked generation! But at length the mighty elements of destruction ceased—the sun came out—God's love beamed forth as upon the great storm that had passed; for it was while in consideration of the same that God said to Noah and his posterity; "And I, behold, I establish my covenant with you;" even unto all beasts of the earth did he make a covenant in which He said, "Neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood; neither shall there any more be a flood to destroy the earth." How truly does this promise shine forth as in the light and love of God, and form a "bow" of different colors upon the storm of his wrath that had just passed, as in like manner the rays of the sun form a bow of admiration upon that cloud that has just passed us.

In looking upon the rainbow, the natural eye is made to glow with delight; but it is the mind's eye that is made to dance with admiration while scanning the past and the future. In a glance backward, we take in the wonders of God's workings in days past. The promises loom up as food for the soul; knowing that God will keep his covenant. That covenant and that promise in the present hour gives lustre to yonder bow that quells the quaking heart, and says to the troubled waters of time, "Be still," and we experience "a great calm." Faithless soul! why murmur at the storms of persecution—storms of affliction—storms of sorrow? See yonder, an evidence that God is true—true to his promise—true to his love—true to his mercy. Be strong and trust in God! yonder storm has passed. The earth has been refreshed; the sun is shining in its wonted brightness. 'Tis true, a few trees have felt the stroke of the lightning, a few plants have been broken. So shall the storms of life pass over; and the heart may be better prepared for a "growth in grace" and a bountiful harvest; The sun of God's love and glory will shine afresh; the bow of promise will look more bright. 'Tis true, a loved one may feel the stroke of death, objects of our affections may be uprooted, and our fond desires blighted; but as we look around, we may see a radius of beauty, even upon the storm just passing. To how many has the future looked more glorious because of persecution or affliction. To how many has heaven been an object of more endearing hope because a dear one has fallen in the storm of trial and bereavement?

Again, the sight of that Bow in yonder cloud causes the eye of faith to penetrate the unexplored future, and take into its inexorable grasp the bounds of eternity, to the limits of finite comprehension. We look to the visible pathway and then to the pathway through the "valley of the shadow of death" and see it lit up with the glowing colors of God's promise through a Redeemer's merits We look at the rainbow as a pathway upon which mystic angels might walk from earth heavenward; and then think of the way that leadeth from the far off shore of Jordan up to the city of God. We look at that beautiful arch spanning the nether heavens here, and then look up to the upper heavens and see the bright bow of the glory of the Lord around about the throne of Jehovah. It was Ezekiel, in his vision, that said, "As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord." (Ezekiel 1 : 28).

We look once more, and in considering the beauties of that marvelous workmanship of our Creator, we also have to consider, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" and if thus we have a visible evidence of the promise of God in the wonderful beauties that please the natural eye, what, oh, what must be the glories of the ultimate fulfillment of God's promises to the saint in heaven, with a mind as expansive as that of the Son of God! for "we shall be like him." And to think of that crown of heavenly glory that shall encircle the heads of all the redeemed in that land of bliss, where there shall be no storms, nor tempest, but one universal, unbounded, and transcendent halo of light and glory shining "round about," emanating from the countenance of our Lord and our Redeemer!

Little Sins.

A little hole in a ship sinks it; a small breach in a sea-bank carries all away before it; a little stab in the heart kills a man; and a little sin, as it is often improperly called, tends to his final destruction. Whatever sin the heart is prone to, that the devil will help forward. A little drop has been many a man's ruin—every drunkard began with a single glass.

By the Fruit ye shall Know the Tree.

"Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit." Matth. 11: 33.

Brethren and sisters, this language is spoken by our Savior himself. He, in his wisdom, used various figures, or parables, to illustrate his object in coming into the world; and he did so that all can understand. The parable of the sower is readily understood by the tiller of the soil. The parable of the mechanic is well understood by men of that craft. This parable is well understood by fruit growers. We all understand that, in the first place, we want a thrifty tree; secondly, to raise it in a good condition; thirdly, to see that good fruit is grafted thereon, so that all our labors may not be in vain.

A thrifty tree is wanted. If we want a thrifty tree, we must learn how to cultivate that tree. We know that to set out a tree and not look at it until we expect fruit, is a very careless way, and little if any fruit is ever realized. You want to set out your tree in a good condition. You want to see that that tree grows up straight. If it is necessary, you place a prop to it, so it must grow straight; and by proper care you will have a substantial tree.

Now the fruit. As you do not likely want to perform labor in raising a tree and have worthless fruit, you attend to this work in time, and as soon as the tree is large enough, you see that it is cared for, so that you may obtain good fruit for your labor.

Now what can we compare to this, in a spiritual light? I think there was an object under consideration. The tree is the man. The fruit is the christian principle. Man, the tree, wants to be raised; and for a good man, wants to be cared for like the fruit tree. It is often necessary to place props around him to keep him straight. The enemy has some fruit trees growing too, and it is necessary to watch that his props are kept away. He is willing to render his assistance wherever he can. To accomplish his purposes he mingles error with truth, and by sodoing he will deceive many, if it is possible "the very elect." Now if proper care is taken, so that this man is raised in good condition, we want to see that some valuable fruit is grafted thereon. This tree cannot be idle. If there is not good fruit grafted on, the enemy will graft it. He is ready with all kinds of wild grafts; and it will take but a short time to graft him so full that a good graft can hardly grow any more. Can it be possible that we can see our relations or neighbors around us, who are so kind to us in time of need, traveling on the road of destruction? Can we not do something for them? Do we what we ought to, when we see them in all this danger, and do not something for them?

One might say, "I have enough to keep myself straight—I cannot do anything for this or that one." Let us examine this case. For every one I think that is enough. You carry out that principle, which you are strongly taught to do in the law of God, and your neighbor and relations will see that there is honesty in religion. I often thought that one half of the preaching would be sufficient if practiced by the members of the church. By the present mode of a great many members, preaching does not amount to much. Let your light shine, that they may see, that ye are the children of God. By the fruit ye shall know the tree. If a christian professor would let the world see and taste of this valuable fruit, how differently would all get along. We would not hear, almost daily, "This or that one is not fit to be in your church; and, I am as good as this or that one. If they can go to heaven, I can too." Such members often destroy more than one good preacher can build up. What will it benefit a member of the church to have the name and not the principle? Let these things be taken into close consideration: "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good."

I like to see an outward appearance, to show that we do not desire all the foolishness of the world. Our light is to show, when we are from home among strangers, that we are a chosen people. I have been from home where I did not know a single face, but by outward appearance I thought I saw some of the members of the church. While traveling, I and another young man passed an "old Dunkard," as they are called. This young man said, "He is a member of your church, is he not?" I told him he is a representation of one. Then I said to him, Can you tell the difference between lawyers, doctors, officers of any kind, and the members and preachers of some of these popular churches? He said, "No." This is one example to show that we, when from home, should have a mark, or light, to show where we belong. But let us not rest all in this part. This is a representation which is an outward form, right in its place, and should be so; but the heart wants its due portion. Never think to place religion in garments. I love to see plain dress; but think not that this will take one to heaven. Sometimes I hear that hypocrisy is in these clothes. It may be in some cases. If one pretends to show that the heart is not corrupted with vanities of this world, when it is not pure, there is some hypocrisy there. Why not on the other side? Because hypocrisy is something that if you profess to be a thing and are not, you are false, and belie your God as well as your friends. On the other hand, those that follow all the vanities of this world, you can see are far from God. They are corrupted in this. Their light is of the same kind. Their fruit is of a wild nature. You cannot tell the difference between such professors and those who pretend to be no professors of christianity. It is not concealed: it is an open appearance. If you want to see a hypocrite, you must go after such as pretend to be something, and are not. So let not your light shine outwardly only; but let it shine from the heart. Let the heart be prepared for the graft of the best fruit; and by doing so, you will gain a reputation which will be well spoken of by your acquaintances, and more so by the Giver of good gifts. For us to guard against all appearance of evil, is the main object. Sometimes we are negligent, and do not watch as closely as we ought to. This forbidden fruit is tasty—pleasant to look upon, and unless we watch closely, we get the taste of it, and the more we eat of it, the better we like it. At last we think there is no better, and for the present time will do very well. But the future is the adversary that will pay it with many stripes. I think it is intended for man to enjoy himself once. If he takes too much of the vanities of this world for his enjoyment, he may take the contrary in the world to come. Perhaps when too late he will regret what he has done. Let the fruit be of that kind which we can learn tha acceptable in the sight of God; at, when done laboring in this troubsome world, our lot may be to enter at the strait gate, and enjoy the mforts of a world where sickness, ath, and parting shall be known no ore. Days and years are rolling ; every second brings us nearer our grave. At last we will have be placed with our predecessors d await our sentence, either to enr into the joys of heaven, or else to ter into the darkness of hell, where ere shall be weeping and gnashing teeth. Now brethren and sisters, t us all, hand in hand, labor to enter at the strait gate, and to gain all can, is the wish and prayer of one ho desires to die happy.

Has the Church any Rights?

Many specious theories are practicly unsound; one thing on their ce, quite another when closely exmined. Such was the "popular sovgnty" doctrine; the real meaning which was, the right of slave-holdg squatters to stamp the seal of hun bondage on the future political istence of great commonwealths. nus specious was the "states-rights" ory, which really meant nullificaon, secession, and civil war, with its oodshed and national indebtedness. Specious theories are not confined political affairs. The position is ite plausible which maintains that e church has no right to exclude om her pales any who accept docines popularly called evangelical; ho profess to be converted; and who aintain what is generally accredited be a Christian walk; but reduced an unvarnished statement, it means at apparently converted persons ave a right to come into any church ey choose, and there maintain any ror or practice, however pernicious, hich their caprice or misguided judgent may lead them to adopt, though ver so grievous to those with whom ey demand church fellowship. It exceedingly liberal in according rivileges to individuals, but marvelusly oblivious of the right and duty f the church to require them to conorm to the revealed will of God,—to hose principles essential to the peace nd welfare of Zion. It means that ny converted person has a right to ntrude, unchallenged, upon the church ny false doctrine or evil practice which his unenlightened judgment or caprice may approve. It privileges individuals to lug into the church errors, sins, and follies, if popular, but denies the body of believers any mandatory protest. The church must meekly allow poisonous leaven to ferment and infect the whole mass. This theory regards the church as a sort of indiscriminating receptacle. It denies it any mandatory moral government over those not pronouncedly unregenerate. Zealous for church union, it mistakes heterogeneous conglomeration for unity. This would be practically worse than the aggregation of several families in one perpetually distracted house-hold. "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

But the church has rights opposed to the caprices of individuals. God has not ordained her the repository of sin, folly, and error, but the pillar and ground of the truth. It is her right to maintain purity by excluding evil leaven, whoever may play the scavenger in bringing it in. She ought to require even converted persons to desist from bringing into her pales that which is abhorrent, infectant, and schismatic, and to forbid them from exalting their evil pleasure above her peace, purity, and authority. Christ declares that a trespassing brother who will not hear the church shall be held as a heathen man and a publican. Divine inspiration says: "Purge out the old leaven;" "put away from yourselves that wicked person;" "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness;" "withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly" and not after the divine teachings. It teaches not to keep company (fellowship) with any man who is called a brother if he be covetous, a railer, an extortioner, or if guilty of still grosser offences. The discipline of offenders within the pale of the church is divinely enjoined, though she is not required to judge or discipline those without.

All organizations and associations have imperative regulations which they enforce. Nations require foreigners to leave foreign institutions and allegiances behind them. Ships require passengers to leave benzine, gunpowder, and infected clothing on shore. Hospitable families rightly deny a traveler the right to stable his horse in their mansion, or kennel his dog in their drawing-room, or otherwise outrage their feelings or infringe their regulations. Parks, fairs, asylums,—and even dance-houses and prize-rings,—imperatively require conformity to such regulations as they deem necessary. While even bedlams have wholesome regulations, is the church an unrestricted habitation where head-strong, half-carnal disciples may hold heaven-sanctioned principles in derision, glory in disobedience to what the church holds truly to be the revealed will of God, because their evil practices are indorsed by some who plausibly claim to be Christians, and because a church court could not pronounce their souls clear outside the pales of God's infinite mercy? For their good, as well as for the peace, purity, and welfare of the church, would it not be better to require erring members to be meek, obedient disciples instead of reckless, imperious dictators?

We inquire whether the refusal of the church to receive unnecessary and evil things within her pales really excludes those who may profitably leave those things behind? The cantish dogma that says that she, by so doing, excludes those whom Christ receives, is relieved from all severe censure by its marvelous simpleness. The dogma that says she is making the door into the church militant narrower than God has made the door into the church triumphant must be based on strange visions of disorder and sin in the upper sanctuary. Has the church no right to forbid what Christ forbids because some poor souls, when finally stripped of these forbidden things, through the infinite mercy and grace of God, shall be at last not excluded from the kingdom of heaven? Does Christ command the door of the church to be opened to "every one that saith Lord, Lord?" or is it "to such as do the will of" his Father in heaven?—to those who are willing to meekly take his yoke upon them? Does the church, by prohibiting any popular sin, set up a weapon at its gate, not divinely appointed? Has any one a God-given right to carry into the pales of any church truly representing Christ, evil practices, loathed and forbidden by those children of God who compose that organization? But is not one congregation justifiable in refraining from judging and disciplining the members of another congregation, even of the same order? Is not the same true of conferences? Is it less true of the different denominations? If we can in no sense fellowship only those we claim a right to discipline, we outdo the Regular Baptists in close-communion.

There are few evils that some good but mistaken men have not indorsed—as papacy, polygamy, Masonry, slavery, and the slave-trade. Must the church set her standard so low that she must tolerate every sin which some good men think ought to go undisciplined? Is the church to mend the breach made by the early Christians, and go on to perfection by becoming a passive receding body instead of a great reformatory power? Were our fathers wrong in seeking an evangelical church which not only maintained experimental Christianity, but required of its members the appropriate fruit—nonconformity to the world and conformity to the revealed will of God? Shall we, to bring in a grand system of deception, selfishness, and caste, adopt dogmas as sophistical as they are specious? Shall we turn the influence and the institutions of the church—engines of power which their toils, prayers, and tears have consecrated to God,—against the very principles which their sacrifices, holy zeal, and Spirit-moved eloquence have contributed to build up? Were they wrong in prescribing popular evils, some of which they fought almost alone, though the nation is with them now? Were they and the Puritan fathers wrong in craving a church purer than those which frowned upon and persecuted them? Were the persecutions of the Puritans in vain? Were the toils of our fathers for naught? Shall we make them measurably so by turning the sacred trusts, reposed in our hands, in favor of the enemies of God and the church? No, no! We will surrender our colors only when the enemy of all shall have his feet on our necks, which never shall be while we are true to the great Leader of the hosts of God's elect. Those who desire a church home where popular sins may not defy and flout them, will, under the blessing of God, have such in accordance with the constitutional compact under which they were received into the church, to which many of them have devoted their means and the earnest labors of the best years of their lives. May the church trust in God and do the right.—Religious Telescope.

The Potency of Experience.

The whole moral or spiritual proof of man's being comes largely from his experience. As the little cloud no larger than a man's hand, which is only vapor, draws generic mists to itself, until it must fall upon the earth in the form of rain, acting both as a creative and destructive agency, so the first indistinct, darkened, mystified conceptions of the mind accumulate and transform until they come to what they now are. This commences with our earliest recollection. Our childhood instruction, our childhood thoughts and actions, every thing of which we have been and are now conscious, contribute powerfully in material to form the architect that comprises our moral being. Hence the power in the command to parents, and all who have the care of children, "Bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," also, "Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." When the child has once begun to remember, then its experience is also begun. Every little bit of consciousness tends to assist in shaping the general characteristics of the mind, when it is said to be matured; therefore all the social influences that are thrown around children should be of a heavenly character. Every christian will carefully endeaver to centralize all the influences of his associations with children in this one point of the divine law, namely, to bring them "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Every little inkling, or apparently insignificant word or action, that is felt, seen, heard or tasted by children tends to bring them up in some way. Who is it that is not conscious of the force of two principal, contending powers in his own experience? Who is it that does not see how evil is at variance with good, and how much more evil abounds than good? I remember when at the age of ten years I started, with half a dozen others like myself, upon a bright Sunday morning in midsummer, to have a good day's fun, as we called it. Our chief engagements consisted in attacking and handling, according to previous experience, with some improvement, everything our minds or our eyes met. For example: When we arrived in the orchard and saw some hornets' nests hanging upon the trees, we began to squirt water from a hand-engine, a result which came largely from our experimental knowledge of hornets and engines. After running through meadows, making war upon the homes and stores of bumble-bees, rambling along forest edges admiring what we thought was beautiful, and abhoring what we supposed to be unworthy, while on our way homeward, we chased a rabbit from its hiding place. Instantly every boy ran after it, with all his might, unconsciously screaming and yelling like so many hungry wolves after their prey; but when passing closely by a neighboring house a pious lady looked out of the window and told us it was not proper for boys like us to spend our time on Sundays in running about and doing as we did; that God had set those days apart for days of rest for man and beast, and that boys like us should attend preaching and sunday-school and to the reading of good good books upon these days. I cannot tell exactly how the other boys felt; but my own feelings were far from being pleasant. Each of her words seemed to fall upon my conscience with a ton's weight. It was all the good we experienced on that day. Not that I think it is not proper for boys to do just as we did on that day, except our wanton cruelty to birds, and animals; but contrarywise, I think such conduct is highly essential to the proper development of real manhood, when it is engaged in at the proper time and place, and in the right spirit. Those few words, or rather the spirit in them, wielded a mighty power in the shaping of my future being. They were the cause of the commencement or the continuance of the warring of two principal spirits within me. I regard them as words that were "spoken in season"—as "apples of gold in pictures of silver." I regard those few words spoken, as they were at the right time and place, of more real benefit to me than a hundred "sermons" would then have been, or would or could even now be. All the virtues and sins of every living soul have been hitherto and are now either increasing or decreasing. God and the devil are the two principal primary causes of renovation and demoralization. They are distinctively and antagonistically the chief commanders of the two contending armies that were in every soul upon the earth. That experience which tends to redeem and lift the soul to heaven is providence in mortals; that which drags it downward toward destruction is occasioned by the dragon which was cast out of heaven, dragging with him the third part of the stars of heaven. Satan is that experience which is abroad, by its darkness, and by its deception ensnaring those who are not aware; destroying the life of those who are redeemed, and by all their unholy influences is drawing souls unto the devil. But upon the other hand when the influence is divine, it is of God; it will draw souls back unto Him their source and their head.

Benevolence.

When thou considerest thy wants, when thou beholdest thy imperfection, acknowledge his goodness. O son of humanity! who honored thee with reason, endued thee with speech, and placed thee in society to receive and confer reciprocal helps and mutual obligations? Who gave thee thy food, thy clothing, thy convenience of habitations, thy protections from the injurious, thy enjoyments of the comforts and pleasures of life? All these thou owest to the assistance of others, and couldest not enjoy but in the bands of society. It is thy duty, therefore, to be a friend to mankind, as it is thy interest that man should be friendly to thee. As the rose breatheth sweetness from its own nature, so the heart of a benevolent man produces good works. He enjoyeth the ease and tranquility of his own breast, and rejoiceth in the happiness and prosperity of his neighbor. He openeth not his ear unto slander; the faults and failings of man give pain to his heart. His desire is to do good; and he searcheth out the occasion thereof. In removing the oppressions of another he relieveth himself. From the largeness of his mind, he comprehendeth in his wishes the happiness of all men; and from the generosity of his heart, he endeavoreth to promote it.

Religious Zeal.

When Demetrius, the silver-idol maker of Ephesus, would excite a riot against the Apostle Paul, he roused his fellow-workmen with the double fear that not only was their lucrative craft in danger, but also lest the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised. The German liquor-sellers of Philadelphia, Demetrius-like, are greatly alarmed lest the enforcement of the laws against liquor-selling on Sunday in which they "discover the first step toward establishing a religion of state," will endanger "the cause of Christianity." Hence with the zeal of the Ephesus mob, they promise to vote for no candidate who has identified himself with the temperance movement.

Bishop Thompson said: "If you would write your words in a book; if you would cut them on the lead with stylet of iron; if you would drive them with chisel and mallet into the rock; if you would send them down the ages, and centuries, and millenniums, ay, into eternity, write upon the younger soul."

There cannot be greater treachery than first to raise confidence, and then deceive it.

The Sin Against the Holy Ghost

In number 25, present volume of C. F. C., an explanation is asked on the above subject. I will give some extracts of a sermon by Robert Russel, at Woodhurst, in Sussex, published in 1805. Text 1st John 5, part of verse 16.

"There is a sin into death."

"This sin which St. John here calls the sin unto death, is the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost, described by our blessed Savior, (Matt., 12: 32,) that whosever commits it, hath no forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come; for 'all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And he that speaketh a word against the Son, it shall be forgiven him, but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, shall never be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come.' This sin against the Holy Ghost is that sin which St. John calls here, 'the sin unto death.' Not because the sin deserves death alone, for so doth all sin deserve death both temporal and eternal; for the wages of sin (even all sin) is death." Rom., 6: 23. But this sin against the Holy Ghost is called 'the sin unto death,' because it binds a man over to eternal death without any possibility of recovery. 'No mere man since the fall can live without sin, for all are sinners; but yet there are degrees of sin: some sins there are, small in their own nature, others are more great—heinous. Many sins there are that are great, pardonable; and one there is unpardonable, and whosoever commits that one sin shall have no forgiveness, but must bear the weight and punishment both of that and all his other sins."

He then goes on and shows negatively what is not this sin.

1. It is not the quenching of the motions of the Spirit, that is this sin. It is true, when the Holy Ghost comes with a still voice, and knocks at the door of the sinner's heart for entrance, he often comes and strives with them, and secretly woos and beseeches them to leave their sins and be converted; yet they quench and stifle all his motions, and bear up their hearts against him, and will not be obedient to the heavenly calls, now sin grievously against the Holy Ghost; but this alone is not the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost, for many who have stood it out for a long time, and have often quenched and grieved the Holy Spirit, yet at last they have been wrought upon unto sincere conversion.

2. "A man may commit many heinous and crying sins, yet not be guilty of the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost. * * * Thus we read 2 Chron., 33: that Manassah, signed with a very high hand, * * * And Mary had seven devils cast out of her, Luke 8: 2, and yet both were pardoned."

3. "A man may sin presumptuously against great light and knowledge, and yet not commit this sin unto death; for Peter, when he denied Christ did it against great knowledge of Christ * * yet for all that Christ look upon him with a merciful eye, and and he repented and was forgiven."

4. It is not every malicious sin that is the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost; for St. Paul certainly had great malice in his heart when he went on so furiously to persecute the Church of God, and yet he was converted and became a preacher of the Gospel of Christ, which before he persecuted. * * *

He then goes on to show positively what this sin unto death is, and wherein this unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost consist, as he is pretty lengthy, I will make some extracts to show the drift of his argument. He says:

"There must be two ingredients to make up the unpardonable sin, light in the head, and malice in the heart; without these two, the sin against the Holy Ghost cannot be committed; for to sin against great light and knowledge is not that sin, nor yet to sin ignorantly without malice, is that sin; but they must both join together to make up that sin. This we plainly see, by the example of St. Peter and St. Paul: Peter denied Christ and forsware himself too, and that grievously against light and knowledge. Now if Peter had done this out of malice and spite, then he had committed the sin unto death; but Peter had no malice in his heart all this while, even at the time he denied Christ, as you may see in Matt., 26: 33—35. When Christ told him, 'Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice,' he answered, 'If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee.' And then denying through infirmity and weakness of the flesh, when he considered what he had done, "he went out and wept bitterly," V. 75. But Paul had great malice and spite against the ways and people of God; as you may see, Acts 9: 1. Now here was great rage and malice in Saul; but doing it ignorantly, he heard at last a voice, saying, 'Saul, Saul, why persecuteth thou me?' and seeing a light from heaven and hearing it was Jesus he had persecuted, he was pricked to the heart and trembling and astonished said, 'Lord what wilt thou have me to do.' Now by these two places of scripture we may plainly see Peter sinned against great light, and Paul out of malice, but neither of them committed the unpardonable sin. But whenever light and malice meet together in one man, then there is the sin against the Holy Ghost."

This sin, as it is to be thought, was the sin of the lost angels, for which cause they were lost without all hope of pardon. Now the sin was this, their habitation being in the highest heavens, and under God himself, they had exceeding great light and knowledge, but when, not being contented with their estate, they thought to be as high as God himself, therefore they maliciously sought to make war against the Son of God, and put him out of his throne, for which cause they were immediately thrust out of heaven, never more to see the face of mercy; theirs being of the same nature with the sin against the Holy Ghost they were excluded from all hopes of pardon."

2. This sin may be committed in word, that is, when a man speaketh blasphemously and maliciously of Christ and his ways. This was the sin of the Scribes and Pharisees; Mark 3: 22. Therefore said Christ unto them, verse 28, 29, "Verily I say unto you all sins shall be forgiven to the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith they shall blaspheme, but whosoever shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation" * * * As these scribes were great, learned men, they could know no other but Christ was the Son of God, and yet they out of spite to Christ maliciously, blasphemously said that, he cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils. Thus the Scribes committed the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost.

3 "* * * But to sum up this point, this sin is fully described by the apostle to the Hebrews, chapter 10: 26, 27, 29. 'For if we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. Of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden underfoot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, &c. Likewise. Heb., 6: 4—6.

Now the sin against the Holy Ghost, is briefly this: It is wilful and malicious opposing the known truth, joined with final apostasy.

"* * * Now, a man having gone thus far, he comes, in the last place, to be an apostate; for thus to oppose wilfully and maliciously the known truth is always joined with final and total apostasy; for he who is so enlightened as to see the evil of sin, and the excellency holiness, and hath been made partaker of the Holy Ghost, of his graces and comforts and tasted of God's love and favor in Jesus Christ, and has some foretaste of the joys of the world to come; for such a one, wilfully, despitefully, and maliciously to fall away, he so falls as never to rise more. 'Tis true the children of God fall, and that often, but then they fall through weakness and infirmity, and not wilfully or maliciously; but these wicked wretches fall wilfully and maliciously, and so fall finally.

"Against such the door of mercy is shut; concerning such, St. Peter said, 'It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than after they had known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them; but it happened unto them according to true proverb, 'The dog has returned to his vomit again, and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire.' There is a dreadful place in scripture, against these kind of apostates, that is, Heb. 10: 26, 'For if we sin wilfully; after we have received the knowledge of the truth, their remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation." * * *

"A word of comfort. It may be that my hearing and reading of this terrible discourse, your hearts begin to ache for fear that you have committed this sin. But I think I have sufficiently proved to you what it is; and I tell you again, that there are but few can commit it; nay there are millions who are tormented in hell, yet never committed this sin. * * * Consider this also, if you are afraid you have committed it, and wish that you had not committed, and would not commit it if it were to do again, then that is a true sign you have not committed it."

"A word of counsel. Labor to be sincere in religion, and by a true faith engraft yourself in Christ; for they that be in Christ, can never commit this unpardonable sin: For know this, that amongst all sins committed by fallen mankind, there is one sin that is sin unto death, which is the unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost, which, whosoever commits, hath no forgiveness, neither in this world or in the world to come."

"Consider what has been said, and the Lord give you understanding."

Pious Youth Department.

Words to the Young.

When Agesilaus was asked, What he thought most proper for boys to learn, he answered, "What they ought to know when they become men." This was a very appropriate reply, and is equally true in reference to the other sex, as they too should learn as girls what they ought to know when they become women. Youth is the time to lay a good foundation if we would rear a substantial and permanent superstructure for subsequent and future life. I would would say to all young people, if you would enjoy this life, if you would be useful, if you would be contented, if you would be truly happy, resolve, if you are boys, to become men, and if girls to become women, who make their mark in the world. I will subjoin a few paragraphs, brimful of good advice, for your especial benefit, which I have selected from various authors. They have often proved a source of encouragement to me when tried and discouraged in the struggles of life. If you will commit them to memory, or read them over carefully every day, and act upon the principles contained therein, you will never have any occasion, either in this life, or that which is to come, to regret your course.

1. Resolve on that kind of life which is most excellent, and habit will render it the most delightful.

2. None so little enjoy life and are such burdens to themselves as those who have nothing to do.

3. Always remember, that the height of all philosophy, both natural and moral, is to know yourself; and the end of this knowledge is, to know God.

4. Never forget, that knowledge and learning, riches and honor, even in their most resplendent gallantry, are all but insignificant pageantry, without piety and virtue.

5. The active only have the true relish of life. He who knows not what it is to labor, knows not what it is to enjoy. Recreation is only valuable as it unbends us; the idle know nothing of it.

6. Have a definite purpose in life and never lose sight of it. Push early, late, and often. Let your aim be what it may in reason, and it will be accomplished. All success is simply this reduced to practice.

7. Never despair. It does no good. Give up to it and you suffer all manner of unnecessary misery. Recollect that others who have been in ten times worse plights, have stoutly braved it out and made a triumph. A square purpose, a decided will and a foot put solidly down are all you want.

8. "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and and the Father by him," Col. 3: 17. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen. Heb. 13: 20, 21.—Evangelical Messenger.

Lessons from Little Moles.

As I was sitting on a sill in our woodshed one day last April, cracking nuts, I heard a slight noise near my feet; and looking in that direction, I saw four beautiful, little moles. The sill was on the ground, and evidently there was a burrow of moles underneath it. They were seeking "daily bread" and were attracted to my presence by the "goodies" I dropped with the shells. Being in a meditating humor at that time, I ceased cracking, and made the following observation:

I noticed that they invariably carried away shells that had "goodies" in them. This was suggestive. Happiness is our being's end and aim. All strive for it. Some seek it in health, some in applause, and some in other sources. Many never reach their goal, and those that do often find it void of happiness,—as hollow as a gourd. But if we "speak the truth at all times," honor our parents, "eschew evil," and practice what we know, we will have lasting pleasure, which no man taketh from us.

By a single touch they ascertained whether the shells had any kernals in them or not. We shall purify our conscience "from dead works," and educate it to be as quick at sight in determining between good and evil.

On the admission of light they retreated to their burrow. That is their nature. Even so some "men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Those that do love truth, come to the light, that their deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God" Reader, to which do you belong?

I then placed a kernal on a chip, and with a small stick held it firmly in its place. They tugged incessantly for it. Perseverance should be our motto.

"If at first you don't succeed
Try, try, again."

I made other experiments which I will not mention, and then commenced to crack again. In an instant they were in their burrow. In a little while they "peeped out" and then came out farther, and at last were as fearless as before. We may not heed the worshipings of conscience, and thereby sear it.

"Much harder than the flinty rock
It will not break though Jesus knock."

I then ruthlessly struck at them with my hammer, and with a quirk and a tumble they were in there burrow again. And they would not put themselves in jeopardy again, although I laid many inducements in their way. We should learn from experience. The great and good of all ages were those that did not make mistakes, but they did not make the same mistake twice. "Where there is a will there is a way."

Be Somebody.

"What is the use of being in the world unless you are somebody?" said a boy to his friend.

"Sure enough, and I mean to be," answered the other. "I began this very day. I mean to be somebody."

Ashton looked George in the face. "Began to-day! how? What do you mean to be?"

"A Christian boy, and so grow to be a Christian man," said George. "I believe that is the greatest somebody for us to be."

Gsorge is right. There is no higher manhood; and it is in the power of every boy to reach that. Every boy cannot be rich; every boy cannot be a king; every boy cannot be a lord; but God asks you all to a Christian manhood,—to be his sons, and so, with his Son Jesus Christ, to be heirs of heaven.—Apples of Gold.

Editorial Correspondence.

WEDNESDAY, July, 17th. We remained at brother Ogg's until this morning. In the forenoon we visited the Big Spring, a place of considerable curiosity. The stream issues from a beautiful, artificial arch, and forms at once quite a creek. It contains a number of trout, which had precaution enough to evade all our enticements. This place would be an excellent location for a Summer resort, or Hydropathic Institute.

Dined and lodged at brother Nathaniel Ogg's, who resides on the homestead of brother John Ogg, deceased, who emigrated to this place in the Fall of 1855 in the second degree of the ministry, and planted a colony, composed of his own family, and a few others, from which has sprung up a congregation numbering upward of fifty members. The old sister, his widow, is still living, and resides with her son Nathaniel. She enjoys fair health for one of her age. Several persons have lately been added to the church at this place, and the brethren are lively and hopeful. They are building a meeting-house, 40x60 feet, in which to hold love-feasts and other meetings. The congregation is under the charge of brother Joseph Ogg, who is assisted by brethren William Hipes and John Sadler. The Brethren here very much desire to be visited by ministering brethren. In the evening we spoke to a respectable congregation, at Prairie Queen school-house.

THURSDAY, 18th. Made calls at the houses of brother Robert Broadwater, and brother John Shook, and took leave of the Brethren of Filmore county.

In the evening we preached in a large school-house, at Lime Springs, Iowa. This was the first sermon preached by the Brethren, in this town. Hope it may not be the last, as we believe there are those at that place who would accept the truth.

Lodged at brother Hipes', where some of the brethren, sisters, and friends, met and bade us farewell.

FRIDAY, 19th. This morning we left our conveyance at Lime Spring station, and brother and sister Buechley returned home to Waterloo. We had become quite attached to each other, and were sorry to part. We then took the cars for Minneapolis, where we arrived at about five P. M., and put up at the first National Hotel.

SATURDAY, 20th. Called upon Mr., Ankeny, formerly of Somerset county, Pa., now engaged in the lumber business at this place. He conducted us through their extensive mills, and others adjoining; the most extensive lumber manufactories we have ever witnessed. Also had a call by Mr. Simon P. Snyder, an old Somerset county man, in the real estate business.

In the afternoon, having learned the whereabouts of brother Aaron Hoover, one of our subscribers at this office, we engaged a conveyance to take us to his house, whom we found about seven miles in the country. We had left him a note in the morning, which he had received, and had set out to bring us, but we missed him by the way. Had we waited an hour longer we might have saved five dollars. We found brother and sister Hoover kind and hospitable, and glad to receive us. They have a comfortable home, with beautiful surroundings.

SUNDAY, 21st. Attended Baptist meeting in the forenoon, at a meeting-house one and a half miles from brother Hoover's. Heard an interesting discourse from the minister in charge, from 1 Peter 5 : 8. Brother Hoover secured an appointment for us at the same place, at four o'clock in the afternoon. At the appointed time a respectable congregation assembled, whom we addressed as God gave ability. This was also the first time the Brethren preached in this county (Hennepin) or in this part of Minnesota. Brother Hoover has an interest in the Baptist meeting-house, and the promise of the use of it at any time when our ministers visit him, and he is anxious to have preaching, and will announce appointments, and entertain the Brethren whenever they can make it suit to call upon him. He would also assist a minister in getting a home and establishing the doctrine at this place. At present he and his wife are the only members within forty miles, except one family some twenty miles westward. His address is Minneapolis, Minn.

MONDAY, 22nd. Brother Hoover took us to St. Paul, via Ft. Snelling. Visited the Fountain Cave, but for want of a light we could not explore it farther than daylight accompanied us, perhaps sixty feet. St. Paul is a very large city, and one of the greatest wonders of our trip. It is really a wonder that such a commercial metropolis could already have been built up in the far west. It is exceeded only in extent by the great cities of the east. As we are not interviewing the city for advertising purposes we forbear itemizing its advantages, facilities, and marks of greatness. It is the mercantile centre of the State, as well as its capital.

Thence we returned to brother Hoover's, our head-quarters, via Minneapolis.

TUESDAY, 23rd. This morning we are closing our correspondence to date, and then expect to resume our visits to the curious places in the vicinity.

We perceive that we forgot to notice that we had the pleasure of reading No. 26, at the house of brother Hipe's. How eager we are to scan its pages. We never lay it down until we know what is in it. We are pleased with the issue, except that we would have preferred our correspondence divided between Nos. 26 and 27; but it could not be printed until it had come to hand. The Minutes of Annual Meeting, attached in form for separation, is an extra we had not intended to give this year. They were to appear among the regular reading matter. It is good as it is, however, but we must get out of that custom before long, and perhaps the sooner the better.

We also omitted to mention the fact that the Brethren of the Coldwater branch, Iowa, are building a new meeting-house, near the town of Green. It is to be a substantial and spacious structure, and to be ready for use by Autumn.

We are still improving in health, or, at all events, holding our own. We believe the climate of Minnesota, in the Summer season to be well adapted to our wants; but we shall not be permitted to enjoy it long, for we now expect to arrive at Waterloo again by Friday next, and to return home by the second or third of August, if God permit, for which we invite the prayers of our friends.

Adieu.

Here We Are.

Our readers will, no doubt, be pleased to notice that we are again fully up to time. It must be very perplexing to go to the post-office for a paper when it ought to be there and is not Most of our subscribers, however, seem to have realized our condition, and they very kindly bore with us, for which we extend to them our hearty thanks. We shall hereafter endeavor to send out the COMPANION regularly and punctually.

There is another difficulty in our way which we hope soon to remedy. We refer to the irregularity and uncertainty of our mails. Under our present arrangement, many of our papers that should reach their destination in a day or two after mailing, are detained a week or more. To remedy this will require a thorough revision of our books and a re-arrangement of our addressing apparatus. To do this will require some time and considerable labor. But we assure our readers that no effort shall be spared on our part to make everything satisfactory; and we hope still to be favored with their forbearance.

J. W, B.

Editor's Eastward Journey.

We expect to divide our eastward trip about as follows: September 13, 14, and 15, at Conemaugh branch; 16, 17, at Conrad Imler's and sister Mary's, if they are still to be found at the old place; 18 at Graybill Myer's; 19, 20 Duncansville; 21 to 26 Clover Creek; 27 to 29 Yellow Creek; 30, and October 1, Snake Spring; 2, 3, Hopewell; 4, 5, James Creek; 6 to 9, Tyrone and Warrior's Mark; 10, 11, Germany Valley; 12, 13, McVeytown; 14, 15, Lewistown; 16, 17, Mifflin. The night of each day mentioned we expect to be at the place specified, part of the first day being used for transportation. The brethren may use us for preaching purposes as they may think best. We should be pleased to attend the Lovefeasts in Morrison's Cove and Warrior's Mark, if possible, and at as many other places as convenient, but will dictate no farther to any. Wife and Lottie are expected to accompany; and we have some hope of having brother Lint also in our company. All, however, subject to the will and blessing of God.

Hymn Books.

We are still not prepared to fill all the orders for Hymn Books. We received a box of books, but not all that we had ordered. Brother Quinter says they will send the balance as soon as they can. So long, then, we must wait; and, of course, our patrons must wait a little longer.

Tune and Hymn Book.

Send in your orders. Your names will be entered as they are received, and the books will be sent out in the same order. You need not hesitate long about it; for you will have them, and it may as well be now as after a while.

MISCELLANEOUS.

My Country and my King.

O, I'm very, very homesick
For the land that's far away,
And with high hope my heart beats quick,
That soon the glorious day
Will come that ends my banishment;
For an exile now am I,
And my longing gaze is ever bent
To the land beyond the sky.

But, O, I know the sad decree
Will ere long be repealed,
A mansion bright prepared for me,
Which soon will be revealed.
And a shining, holy convoy
Shall waft me to the land,
Where pleasures pure can never cloy,
Beyond the finite strand.

O, that bright and happy country
That's so very far away,
With glowing hope I long to see,
And dwell therein for aye.
Now I'm faint, and sad, and weary,
My heart doth ever roam
From this land so dark and dreary,
And it only longs for home.

O, my heart is ever pining,
For the land that's far away,
Where the glory's ever shining
With a pure effulgent ray.
I long to lie in homage low
Before the holy King,
And at his feet my crown to throw,
Whilst hallelujahs ring!

O, I'm ever, ever sighing
For the land that's far away,
Where the angels bright are flying
In their luminous array.
Where the King is on his throne of light,
And the emerald rainbow's sheen,
In rays of glittering glory bright
Illumes the gorgeous scene.

O, I long to dwell with Cherubim,
And see the sapphire throne,
And strike my harp with Seraphim
To the most Holy One.
And I long to praise him ever
With a heart that's always pure,
And to feel that naught can sever,
From a home that's ever sure.

And I long to dwell forever
At Jesus' sacred feet,
To see life's flowing river,
And hear its ripple sweet.
I long to see the glorious throng
Washed white in Jesus' blood,
And swell the chorus of their song
Who bathed in that pure blood.

And the glittering foundations
Adorned with jewels rare;
And the tree which for the nations
Its healing fruit doth bear.
And the gleaming portals,
Which flash effulgent light,
As the radiant immortals
Flit thro' in robes of white.

O, I'm very, very lonely,
In this land so drear and cold.
And I long for Heaven only,
With its streets of shining gold.
But, O, I long to see the King
With his diadem of light;
And as my rapturous praises ring,
To bid this land good night.

I wander in the desert land,
But a light shines through the gloom,
'Tis the glory from the shining land
That my darkness doth illume.
And soon I'll cross the stormy sea,
And soar thro' realms of light,
And as life sombre shadows flee,
I'll bid this land good night.

Unkindness.

There is a little plant, whose leaves
Touched by ungentle hands,
As if endowed with feeling, shrinks,
And trembling seems to stand.

So there are gentle hearts, whose life
Is made of tenderness;
Whose tiny leaves will fold themselves
When rougher hands oppress.

A careless word, small in itself,
May grieve and trouble much;
And pain is oft awakened by
An inadvertent touch.

Then since it lies within our power
A kindly heart to gain.
O let us check the unkind word
That gives another pain.

For could we see the bitter tear
Shed by a heart refined
When touched by rude or careless hands,
We should not be unkind.

Old Dr. Beecher's Idea of Heaven.

"Excepting exemption from sin, intense, vigorous, untiring action is the greatest pleasure of mind. I could hardly wish to enter Heaven did I believe its inhabitants were idly to sit by purling streams, fanned by balmy airs. Heaven, to be a place of happiness, must be a place of activity. Has the far-reaching mind of Newton ceased its profound investigations? Has David hung up his harp as useless as the dusty arms in Westminster Abbey? Has Paul, glowing with God-like enthusiasm, ceased itinerating the universe of God? Are Peter and Cyprian and Edwards and Payson and Evarts idling away eternity in mere psalm-singing? Heaven is a place of restless activity, the abode of never-tiring thought. David and Isaiah will sweep nobler and loftier strains in eternity, and the minds of saints, unclogged by cumbersome clay, will forever feast on the banquet of rich and glorious thought. My young friends, go on then; you will never get through. An eternity of untiring action is before you, and the universe of thought is your field."

Woman's Power for Good or Evil.

One gifted and beautiful woman, if wrongly disposed, can work more evil in society, can scatter more seeds of corruption and death, than, with their utmost efforts, a score of men. Her capabilities for good in the different departments of morals are equally great, and in such proportion to her powers both for good and evil, must be her condemnation, if she is false to her holy stewardship. Society cannot be destroyed if woman is true, nor saved if woman is false. Besides, society shows no unequal discrimination in regard to this particular class of offences. The rule applies to all. A profane woman, a drunken woman, a female thief or murderer excites always a greater horror and disgust than if the crime had been committed by a man. And this is right, and it will be an evil day for this world when woman in her sin excites no more abhorrence than a man.

Gone out Forever.

Like drooping, dying stars, our dearly loved ones go away from our sight. The star of our hopes, our ambitions, our prayers, whose light ever shines before us, suddenly pale in the firmament of our hearts, and their place is left empty, cold and dark. A mother's steady, soft and earnest light, that beamed through wants and sorrows; a father's strong, quick light, that kept our feet from stumbling in the dark and treacherous ways; a sister's light so mild, so pure so constant and so grim, shining upon us from gentle, loving eyes, and persuading us to grace and goodness; a brother's light, forever sleeping in our soul and illuminating our goings and comings, a friends light, true and trusty—gone out forever! No! the light has not gone out. It is shining beyond the stars, where there is no night no darkness forever and ever.

A Wife.

It needs not guilt to break a husband's heart. The absence bf content, the muttering of splen, the untidy dress, and the careless home, the forbidding scowl, and deserted hearth, and other nameless neglect—without a crime among them—have harrowed to the quick the heart's core of many a man, and planted there, beyond the reach of cure, the germ of despair. Oh! may women, before the sad sight arrives, dwell on the recollections of her youth, and, cherishing the dear idea of that toneful time, awake and keep alive the promise she then so kindly gave. And, though she may be the injured, not the injuring one—the forgotten, not the forgetful wife—a happy illusion to that hour of love—a kindly welcome to a comfortable home—a smile of love to banish hostile words—a kiss of peace to pardon all the past—and the hardest heart that ever locked itself within the breast of selfish man will soften to her charms, and bid her live as she had hoped—her years in matchless bliss—loving and contented—the soother of a sorrowing hour—the source of comfort and the spring of joy.

Gibbon says: "Every person has two educations; one which he receives from others and one more important which he gives himself." Hard conditions draw out a man, and you and I are better for such an education. A man needs to be hackled and spun just as much as raw cotton does. And the best gin for him is, first oxy-gen (gin) for bodily health, and secondly the gin of grinding circumstances, to make a mental man of him.

He needs to be pulled through narrow places as much as the wire before he will be fit for bridging the great gorges and chasms of life which swallow up the bloated and caponlined.

If a man were offered ten times as many gold eagles as he could carry, he had better send them twenty miles from home and vow that he will never use one of them except that he walks back and forth for each one, before he spends it. A dollar is never worth a dollar to a man until he has given a dollar's worth of work for it by hand or brain.

From Annie C. Boyer.

Dear Companion:—Being released in a great measure, from an unusual state of suffering, I take my pen for the purpose of writing a few lines for your columns: and perhaps, some of your readers will not be surprised to hear, that I still remain a prisoner. I say prisoner, for I consider myself such. I am confined to this narrow house, and my soul would fain burst its bars and soar away to the bright world of liberty and peace. I am still chained to this earthly tabernacle; but the building has become very much shattered from disease, so that I cannot do the thing that I would. The Lord has dealt very gracious with me. Although sorely chastened for a season, I was not given over unto death. The Lord has manifested his love to me in the hours of deep distress. When this poor tabernacle was shaken as with a mighty wind, when my spirits were low and weak, the Lord graciously vouchsafed to me, spiritual strength, and laid underneath me his everlasting arms. I have been brought through suffering and revived; for which I am trying to be thankful. In my exercise of devotion, how weakness of flesh hinders, how it disturbs my peace: O! when shall I be released from the prison, that I may serve God without infirmity and without sin? I have sometimes thought it a great blessing to be shut out from the world, and not be exposed to its many snares and temptations, or severe bodily pain and infirmity. I percieve that this state of seclusion from the world, has its advantages, and its disadvantages; it is very true there is much time for prayer, and contemplation of an unseen world: while at the same time I am often inclined to make my bodily weakness an excuse for inaction in the service of God. Indeed much of my time passes away under exquisite pain, and in a state of apathy or mental depression: But I thank God that my pain has been less for a week past than before for sometime, and I have enjoyed more of the sweets of meditation. But dear reader, I would not have you infer from this, that the hour in which I enjoy the most ease are the best of my life. Oh no! I have learned to esteem my severest sufferings, my choicest blessings: because they wean my heart from things that are seen, and give a keener relish for things that are not seen. It is now two years since I have been confined to my bed; it is a long time: but in this providence I behold the wisdom, power and goodness of God, and feel thankful that it is yet as well with me as it is. Although languishing on a bed of sickness, I am surrounded with kind and affectionate friends, who are ever ready to administer outward comforts, and many of them, inward consolations. Like a stranger and pilgrim below, I wander in search of purer and more substantial joys than this world can give: I look for a city which hath a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. And shall I cease to speak of the goodness of God? Shall these long seasons in which I have enjoyed peculiar benefits be forgotton? God forbid! Will not my dear brethren and sisters, when at the throne of grace, remember your unworthy sister, and pray that she may be strengthened in her faith and hope, and that her remaining days may be wholly spent in the service of God? Oh how much he has done for me! What can I do for him? How shall I set forth his patience and speak of his goodness toward the children of men? Alas! how many are going on heedlessly to the eternal world, without an interest in the Savior! And shall we not lift the warning voice and above all plead with our great advocate with the Father in their behalf? Oh, that all my friends were the friends of Christ!

Sin like a mighty deluge sweeps over the earth, and Satan rejoices in his prey. How many are daily swallowed up, God only knows. But the Lord has prepared an ark for the saving of his people; and I, through grace, may dare to hope that I shall make one of that happy number. The Lord has kindly taken me into the ark of safety, and if I sometimes leave it, I find, like the dove, no rest for the sole of my foot until I return. Then in this place of safety will I abide, saved from the floods of wrath, and sheltered from the storms, until these troubled billows, upon which I am now tossed shall be assuaged. Then I hope to rest not upon a mountain of the earth, but upon the holy hill of Zion.

Feetwashing.

Dear Brother:—The subject of feet-washing has given much trouble and labor in our Annual Meeting, and to the brotherhood in general. The Brethren have labored much in Annual Meeting, and have sent committee after committee hundreds of miles to try to bring about a union in regard to the practice of this ordinance, but have so far failed to accomplish that end. I do not believe that either party sin, in practicing that ordinance as they do. And I believe all the sin that is committed by the Brethren in regard to that ordinance, if it is done in love to God, and in love to one another, is committed by agitating it and ruffling one another's feelings by so doing. If one brother washes and wipes the feet of his brother, or one washes and another wipes, the command to wash one another's feet is fulfilled, and we will receive the blessing promised, which is happiness, if we do all out of a heart of love to our Lord and to one another. If our Savior would hold us accountable in that great rewarding day, for practicing that ordinance exact in one particular way only, he would have told us so when he said, "Ye ought to wash one another's feet." Now if we wash one another's feet, do we not do just what the Savior commanded us to do? Brethren and sisters, I hope I may not hurt any of your feelings, but I wish to give in as short a manner as I can, my views in regard to Christian duty. I believe we should diligently search the word and obey the plain teaching of the gospel, and not be too closely tied to all the practices of the old Brethren, anciently, instead of going to the word of God for light and knowledge. By so doing we would prosper better, and we would come nearer filling the purpose for which we were created. Although we should have a true regard for our dear old Brethren whom we dearly love, but we should not go there for knowledge, in preference of going to the word of God, because they were also fallible men, even as we are, and were liable to err, and if we by searching the scripture can see an error in their practice we are not justifiable in so doing the same; for I believe Christ's church will progress in knowledge, as long as it remains upon the earth, and that it is like unto a natural body, it learns as it grows older in days and years, for if teaching of the gospel could be comprehended at once it would become like unto a dead letter, but it is not given unto us, to comprehend all at once but according to Paul's instructions to Timothy, we are to search the word and by that means we shall obtain knowledge, for we are held accountable for that which we know and have learned, and not for that which we have not learned. Don't understand me here, to excuse the ignorant, for we may sin by not trying to learn our duty, and I also believe very many do. I have known even middle aged Brethren who had to hunt a long while to find any named chapter in the New Testament and could hardly quote a passage of scripture by heart. Brethren this is very wrong, and it will not be well with us if we do not reform. My article is long enough, but let us all pray, that love and union may exist throughout the entire brotherhood, and I also desire the prayers of my brethren and sisters in behalf of unworthy me.

Tobacco.

Brother H. R. Holsinger:—I will try with the help of God, to offer a few thoughts on the above subject hoping it may at least do some good, and if so, my end is gained. As there has been considerable written on the subject already, and a desire for more, I will call the attention of the readers of the C. F. C. to Genesis, 1: 31, "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good." Now here we see that God was well pleased with his whole creation, and pronounced it very good.

I will now try to show for what purpose God created those good things "And God said, behold, I have given you every herb, bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat; Genesis 1: 39. Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you, even as the green herb have I given you all things," Genesis 9: 3.

Now in the foregoing, we see that God gave the whole herbial kingdom to man for his judicious use, tobacco not excepted, that I can see. If it is forbidden in as plain language of the Holy Bible as that which I have called your attention to, I shall be very glad and thankful to any brother or sister to publish it in the C. F. C., as that carries much valuable information to its readers. But if there is none, would it not be very advisable for every brother and sister to consider well, what it is to condemn as an abomination, that which God created and pronounced very good, and gave it to man for his use. I would not be understood that we should use all vegetables, but we are at liberty to make use of as many as we see proper, without any transgression of the Bible. But, as the wise man says, "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heavens," Eclesiastes, 3: 1. Here we see another striking evidence, that there is no exception in the use of the herbial kingdom. Man may use any of them at the proper time, and in the proper place, as stated. But says one, when is that time to use tobacco? That, seems to be each one's privilege to decide for him or herself. In my humble opinion at the time of worship, public or private, is not the proper time or place to use tobacco, or to have the mouth full of any thing that annoys the holder thereof. For illustration I will say if one would take the mouth full of bread at the time of public worship, upon due consideration such a one would conclude that is not the proper time. So with every thing else. Let all be done decently and in order, and I see no trangression of God's laws, nor any cause of offence. What I have written, I have written in love, and hope it will be received in the same spirit. If any one takes a different view of the matter let him search the scriptures, and take that for the man of counsel, and walk thereby. May God bless us all, and when our few days are ended, crown us heirs in heaven, is my prayer.

Dear Brother: I am a stranger to you all, but I concluded to drop you a few lines. At Elder Forney's request I thought

I would give you a small history of my journeying life.

I was born in Somerset Co., Pennsylvania, and remained there until I was about twenty-one years of age. Then I journeyed in Carroll Co., Ill, where I remained about fourteen years, and then removed to Jackson Co., Kanzas. On the 28th of June, my wife and myself were baptized by Elder Michael Forney of Illinois. We live about twenty-five miles from the church. This is very inconvenient to church. I would extend the invitation to some of the Brethren in the East to come to Kanzas, and aid us in building churches and spreading the gospel. It is a good country and easy to secure homes. Any person wanting further information will write, and I will try to reply.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Brevity of Life.

"Remember how short my time is." Psalm 89: 47.

As day after day has passed in quick succession to me, much of all that I have experienced has left the brevity of life forcibly impressed upon my memory. It seems but as the turning of the hand since I for the first time went up to my teacher at school, with a primer in my hand, to say my A B C's. In reality, one's time is very short; apparently it is very long. Its apparent length is the measurement of it without comparing it with all time. The period of reverend David's "Existence Upon the Earth," taken, as it were, a link out of the whole chain of time, is the remembrance to which he refers; or, if this comparison does not give a correct idea of the real brevity of life, we must compare it to a point in a line stretched throughout all time and eternity. Life is the point where we start upon our journey traveling through eternity. Time is the position from which men leap into eternal life or eternal death. Surely this life "is even as a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." Surely "our days on earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding;" and surely our "days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope." That is, those who are truly wise have not, in this life, the hope that is an anchor to the soul; their hope reaches to things beyond this transient life. Hence Job had not hope in the days of this life, because they were swifter than a post"—they did not abide. The child at from five to ten years old wishes for manhood or womanhood; and quickly at thirty, they are astonished and sorry to see that half the sands of life are already run out, though they should perchance, live to a tolerably ripe age. Our life or our time is soon done. As summer ends and dread winter spreads desolation over the vegetable kingdom, so death will speedily wither all our earthly glory. Our flowering spring, the summer of our strength, and our autumnal soberness soon fade into age, and quickly winter —death—cuts off our time. After passing some few years, then our dreams of earthly greatness all our vain hopes of earthly happiness, our longings for fame, all our anxious cares and busy, bustling days, with all our gayeties and festivities, are forever lost, between eternal life and eternal death. Every thing except virtue—heavenly virtue, that is, perfect virtue—will soon vanish away, and all who seek and find that virtue, which is the only never-failing friend of man, for all such there is coming a glorious morning—a second awakening into a new life. Oh! ye followers of the meek and lowly Lamb of God, whose share in this life is gall and bitter of soul by reason of the righteousness of God which is in you, lift up your heads and rejoice, remembering that your time is short, and when your time is ended, then you shall be forever free from every pain; then every eye shall see, and every heart shall understand why, the poor, lone widow and her orphans pined in starving solitude, while luxury and extravagance lay side by side in palaces, straining their powers to increase the wants of all the needy. Oh! ye noble few, who stand unbending beneath the cross of Jesus, bear up yet a little while. The storms of our wintry time will soon be over, and one unbounded summer of love will encircle us all.

JOHN B. GARVER.

Shirleysburg, Pa.

Speak Kindly.

Much of the unhappiness in this world arises from giving utterance to hasty, unkind words. Many a sorrowful hour and sleepless night have been spent brooding over some harsh or angry word, which has dropped from the lips in a moment of unguarded passion. How much pain we would save ourselves and others, if we would guard all our ways and actions. Kind words, spoken in the right time and place, do more to heal the wounded spirit than all the gold this world can give. They cost nothing, while they enrich the heart and scatter sunshine all around, winning many true and faithful friends.

Is Feetwashing a Christian Ordinance?

As some Christian professers lay considerable stress upon the subject above referred to, and as you, or rather, your people, lay so great a stress upon the practice of feet-washing, would you permit me to be heard through the columns of your paper? In the first place I think you are too ready in condemning others that cannot just see as you can in this particular. We are ready to admit that there was such a thing as feet-washing practiced among the people, and there still is such a practice among them; but, in the eagerness of establishing your adopted dogma, you fail to give us the origin of that rite.

The first time we find feet-washing referred to is in Genesis 18: 4, where Abraham was sitting in the door of his tent, and saw three men coming to him, whom he kindly received, and to show his hospitality said, "Let a little water, I pray you be fetched, and wash your feet," In Genesis 19: 1, it is said two angels came towards Sodom when Lot sat in the gate. He said, "Behold, now, my lords, turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet." So in the same manner were the servants of Abraham treated when they came to father Bethuel's house Genesis 24: 22. In like manner the brethren of Joseph were asked to wash their feet, Genesis 45: 24. And in Judges 19: 21, 1 Samuel 25: 41, mention is made of feet-washing. The above should be sufficient to convince any candid mind, that feet-washing had its origin in this early time.

I might add here, that, from Genesis 24: 32, we learn that the feet were washed because it was necessary, and that no act of hospitality was shown by it; for the water was only given them, and they washed their feet themselves.

The next question is, what gave rise to the feet-washing described in John 13: 1—15? In the narrative, as given by John, we find the cause not given; for John only described the ceremony of feet-washing, while Matthew, Mark, and Luke, give us the cause that gave rise to feet-washing, and left out the ceremony. By carefully comparing John 13th, whole chapter, Matthew 26: 17–35, Mark 14: 12–25, Luke 33: 6–35, we cannot help but perceive at once that they are describing one and the same thing. If feet-washing was a command that was to be observed by all Christians, Matthew, Mark, and Luke should at least have mentioned it in their writings.

I will consider the time when feet-washing was practiced. It is said, "after supper," or, literally, according to the Greek, when supper was prepared. But does it matter whether it was before or after supper? Not at all. But inasmuch as you are so very particular in its observance as to time, I shall try and point out the true or exact time, and that not without benefit. You cannot help but see that feet-washing took place after Jesus had sat to the table with his apostles, John 13: 4. From the twenty-third verse we learn that Jesus sat at the table with the twelve after the feet were washed; because in verse twelve it is said, "So after he had washed their feet." Feet-washing was observed between the sitting down to the table and the eating of their common supper. The washing of feet before supper was then customary among the Jews. as we learn from Luke 7: 44. Jesus said to Simon, "I entered into thine house, and thou gavest me no water for my feet." Taking into consideration the circumstances connected with the feet-washing as described in the sacred history, we conclude that the feet-washing practiced by Jesus himself upon the apostles was under no circumstance that which he would intentionally as a command, but as according to the order of the day in that time feet-washing was now in order.

The last point under this head is, to show who the persons were whose feet Jesus washed. It is said he "began to wash his disciples' feet." Let me here repeat, that to practice an act, not as the scriptures describe it, is not any better than not to practice it at all. I purpose to show, first, that you as a people do not practice feet-washing as it stands described in the Holy Scriptures. I now wish to notice who the persons were that had their feet washed. In the history that John gives concerning this point, we have but the word disciple, while Matthew, Mark, and Luke are more particular in their narratives, for they not only point out the persons, but even specify the number: Matth. 26: 19–20, "He sat down with the twelve;" Mark 14: 17, "And in the evening he cometh with the twelve, and as they sat and did eat;" Luke 22: 14, "And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him." Now do you believe it, my good brethren, that only the twelve apostles, which constituted the clergy, and not the members in general, were present at the act of feet-washing? But believe it or not it is so. Inasmuch as this act was limited but to the twelve apostles, or the Clergy, why not leave it in that body? You have no right to make a congregational practice of it; but in your zeal you have carried it out, and that among the lay members, and even the sisters. The seeking after rank and honor was what occasioned feet-washing. It was usually the duty of the servant of the house, to wash the feet of the guests, especially at a time of festivals.

I shall now notice whether feet-washing is a command, and whether we, according to the scriptures, are bound to observe it. Where shall I get my information from? from the advocates of the ordinance, or from the word of God? To prove your position in regard to that matter, you refer us to Matth. 28: 20, John 13: 14, and Rev. 22: 18, 19. In reference to the passage in Rev. 22: 19, I would say, that it has no reference to feet-washing whatever, and in the passage in Matth. 28: 20, the whole force of your argument rests upon the sentence, "Teaching them to observe all things which I have commanded you." But even with this your end is not accomplished, and to your misfortune it only proves the contrary. But here it is to be feared I will be censured for perverting the scriptures, or, in plain terms, twisting around; but I undertook to show, that it is not as much perversion on our side, as there is misunderstanding (I do not like to say ignorance) on the other side. The injunction of the Savior "teaching them," &c, was given to the eleven apostles; and we must conclude was carried out to its full extent. Paul positively says to the Ephesian elders, Acts 20: 17–20, that he kept back nothing that was profitable. Verse 27 he says, "For I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God." But neither he, nor any of the other apostles, has taught feet-washing; therefore the conclusion is, that Jesus did not commission them to teach feet-washing when he said, "teaching them to observe all things."

We have to consider the passage in John 13: 14, where it is said, "If I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet." Now mark, Christ said this either to his apostles only, or to them and through them to us: one of the two is certain, because he spake personally and not to men in general. If this act was to be of a general character, the apostles should have made it a part of their public preaching; but their utter silence upon this subject tells me at once that it was not considered by them as belonging to the all things. Here you might present before me, the case of the widow spoken of by Paul to Timothy. I shall notice that in its place. In the thirteen epistles written by Paul, and in the 7 written by Peter, John, James, and Jude, is feet-washing mentioned but once, and, indeed, then not as a command. Who could believe that feet-washing would be passed over altogether in silence, if there was as much in it as you would try to make appear? Feet-washing is mentioned in 1 Timothy 5: 10, but, I ask, shall we consider it as a religious, or sacramental act? If so, then bringing up children, &c., must come under the same head; they cannot be separated therefrom.

It shows itself sufficiently established, that the scriptures do not teach feet-washing as a command. Jesus himself called it an example. Who, then, can assert that to be a positive command when the scriptures do not make it so, and Jesus himself terms an example and not a command?

But again, if it were a command which had to be observed every time when we commemorate the death of our crucified Savior, it would undoubtedly have been mentioned in connection therewith; but neither Matthew, Mark, nor Luke make any mention of it in connection with the breaking of bread: this at once shows that the feet-washing was of not much import, or else they would all have made mention of it, and not only one. So throughout the epistolary writings we read of baptism, and other ordinances, repeatedly, while washing feet is mentioned but once.

And again, the breaking of bread, or the communion of the bread and wine is also often spoken of in the writings of the apostles, but never once is feet-washing mentioned in connection with this ordinance.

Paul futhermore says, that he had delivered unto them the ordinances as he had received from the Lord; yet he says not one word concerning feet-washing to the brethren in the Corinthian church. Do you undertake to say you know more than Paul?

From the foregoing we conclude, first, that feet-washing practiced in connection with the breaking of bread, is the command of men and not of the Savior himself. Second, that washing feet is not profitable when we do engage in it; for Paul in speaking of the things that are profitable, in Acts 20: 20, says, "I kept back nothing that is profitable;" but had said not one word of feet-washing

One more point, and I am done for the present. Jesus said to Peter, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." Here I shall make no particular comment, but only request my readers to mark the difference between saying, "If I wash the not, thou hast no part in me," and, if you do not wash one another's feet, you have no part in me.

I think I have made this matter plain, so that even your most radical readers, or members, cannot help but see that it is an oriental custom, and that it is not a command of our Savior, and therefore need not to be observed, as you would have it done. Hope you will insert this in your paper, as I think it will aid the members of your fraternity to see the force of the argument on the other side of the question. I shall subscribe myself,

Building Castles in the Air.

BY C. PROSSER.

This world seems dark and drear to me;
My pleasures are but few;
My brightest hopes are fading fast,
They've lost their brilliant hue.

In boyhood's days I used to build
Bright castles in the air;
I decorated them with gold
And diamonds bright and clear,

But ah! how little did I think
Such dreams would give me pain:
My castles fell with such a crash—
I still would build again.

My plans they were not colored now:
To me they were quite plain;
I labored years to build them up,
But down they fell again.

Its thus we build from youth to age,
With hope to guide us through;
But few do ever realize
The joys they have in view,

Bring Roses.

Bring roses to crown the blushing bride,
As she kneels on the altar floor;
Bring roses, fair roses, the garden's pride,
For she stands at happiness' door;
Bring roses to place on the young wife's breast,
Bring roses, blood-red and gay,
Bring roses bright ere she goes to her rest,
To repose from the toils of the day.

Bring roses to place in the dying one's hand,
Pale roses, light touched with dew,
A few withered buds from the sunny land,
As emblems sad yet true.
Bring roses, white roses, to plant on the grave
Of the loved one fallen asleep,
Bring roses to strew o'er his narrow cave,
Where the drooping willows weep.

Spiritual Things.

"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."2 Cor., 4: 18.

Faith in God and in his word opens up a theme of great and sublime realities; subjects vast and comprehensive appear before our eyes as realities, bringing peace and joy to the heart.

No earthly treasures or fortune can compare in importance with the considerations which faith presents to our view. The hope of eternal life, ripened into assurance, is a treasure, compared with which, all earthly pomps, and honors, and treasures, sink into insignificance.

For do we here undervalue earthly blessings; but we rate these things at their full value, as blessings of great worth; gifts from our Heavenly Father, gifts which if well improved, may not only give us much comfort here, but may afford us many opportunities of doing good.

Earthly treasures are not to be viewed as small favors, to be despised and made light of; to be wasted or mismanaged, but as talents committed to us, for which we must finally give an account of, to the Lord of Heaven and earth.

But the unseen things which faith sees are heavenly, they are infinite and lasting.

Connected with everything earthly, we find uncertainty and care, labor, weariness, and pain; but connected with heavenly things are no such contingencies; but there all is permanence, all is purity and perfect peace, freedom from pain, freedom from weariness and sorrow.

There will no shadow of sin cast itself across our pathway, no labor there will fail of its reward, no fires will consume, no waves overflow, no lightnings scorch, nor earthquakes terrify, the peaceful inhabitants of paradise.

There will no ingratitude or pride magnify itself. There will be no stings of conscience, no remorse, no impure act, nor wanton look to shock the virtue; no sharp trader will banter, nor adroit thief will break the bond of confidence. There will be no bolts or locks, no prisons or hospitals, no lunatics or idiots, no alms-houses, or courts of justice, or houses of correction.

No physicians or surgeons, no no sheriffs or police, no armies or navies, wil be needed there. No poisinous drugs, no death-dealing arms, powder, or ball, will be called for in that happy realm.

No long complicated system of law will cast its pall of certainty over both just and unjust. No conflicting system of medical science will wrap up the truth in a knot of uncertainty. No clouds will cast their gloomy shades, no tornadoes, or whirlwinds, will scatter the works of man.

Faith brings to view realities. She carefully weighs evidence, and is satisfied with sufficient and abundant proof. She does not gloomily survey the dark side of things, and then avert her eyes from the bright glory of God; but she opens heart and mind to his sweet influence.—Herald of Truth.

Building Strongly.

Twenty years ago there was being built in my native village the largest vessel I ever saw. She was the marvel of the town, and all the leisure moments I could command I spent near the carpenters with youthful questions and amazement. I wondered why the timbers were so large and placed so near together; why so many large iron bolts and clear wood and locust trunnels were used. I could not see why such care and strength were needed. But when I became a man, and one night was upon the ocean in a violent storm, all the wonder of my boyhood was thoroughly answered.

Young men, build strongly in youth your ship of character. Mark how the shipwright does his work; so when you are launched upon the sea of life—often more stormy than the ocean—when business cares and temptutions, with all the world's allurements, beset you, you may, like a well constructed vessel, withstand the tempest, and accomplish your voyage of life with profit and safety. —American Messenger.

The Eclipse of the Soul.

The Moon, in an eclipse, complained to the Sun:

"Why, O my dearest friend, dost thou not shine upon me as usual?"

"Do I not?" said the Sun; "I am sure I am shining as I always do; why do you not enjoy my light as usual?"

"Oh! I see," said the Moon, "the earth has got between us."

"Why, O Savior," says the backsliding Christian, "do I not, as in former days, walk in the light of thy countenance?"

"I am sure, troubled soul, I have not changed. The rays of my love are as warm and bright as ever; what can prevent them from reaching thee?"

It is the world, troubled Christian, that has got between thee and Christ. —Ex.

Shame is a great restraint upon sinners at first; but that soon falls off when men have lost their innocence, their modesty is not like to be long troublesome to them.—Tillotson.

For the COMPANION.

Repentance, Faith and Baptism for the Remission of Sin, and the Reception of the Holy Ghost.

Repentance and faith brings the convert to the door of the sheepfold, or church; and by the covenant of baptism, Christ the good shepherd, opens the doors by his merits, and lets his sons and daughters, born of the water and the Spirit, into the sheep-fold. Now they that have entered into the door by Christ's commands and merits, are no thieves; but those that climb up some other way are thieves and robbers.

There has been more dispute or controversies on the mode, subject and necessity of baptism, than any other command in the gospel of Christ. Some have laid too much stress on baptism by putting it in the place of Christ, by making it essential without repentance and faith, when administered to infants or adults. This is the extreme on one side. Now let us look at the extreme on the other side. This saying, we have received all that is promised in baptism—we have received the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost, therefore it is not essential to my salvation. I know a man who went to the Methodist communion before he was baptized. He said the minister told him to come, but he said to me he thought he was not fit; and I said I thought so too; for he was not baptized upon faith and repentance in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sin, and the reception of the Holy Ghost. The Lord's supper is only for the baptized disciples, of Christ. John made and baptized disciples. Jesus, or his disciples, made and baptized more disciples than John. The apostles baptized, and then gave the Lord's supper. So let us abide in the doctrine that we may have both the Father and the Son. "Preach the word, be instant in season, and out of season. Exort, reprove, rebuke with all long suffering and doctrine." Christ is the light of the world by command and example. Now if we walk in his light we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Christ cleanses us from all sins.

How shall we know our sins are pardoned or remitted? Answer, by three witnesses; the Spirit, the word of God, or the gospel, and our spirit—conscience. Now if these witnesses are in our favor, that we have the remissions of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost, then we are sure that we are right. But to know whether the word of God bears testimony in our favor, we must first know that our repentance is right, and that our faith is right, or according to the gospel; and that we are born again. If we are born of God's word and Spirit, then we have the promise of pardon, and salvation from all past sins. Then "go and sin no more," loving him and keeping all his commands.

But how shall we know that our repentance, faith, and new birth are according to the gospel? Jesus said, "Search the scriptures." There is no excuse for wilful ignorance. "The darkness is past, the true light now shineth." The sun of righteousness now shines in the gospel of Christ; and in order to an evangelical repentance we must read the law of God, to learn what is forbidden and commanded, and thereby to know what sin is. In order to gospel repentance, there must first be knowledge of sin; second, a sorrow for sin; third, hatred; fourth, confession, and fifth a renunciation of sin.

The gospel faith is that "faith that works by love." Saving faith is, first, to assent; second, to desire; third, to trust. Faith sees all the conditions of salvation, and has no rest till she has slain them all, and obtained the glorious promises of her Savior, that her sins are all pardoned, and if faithful until death shall receive a crown of life.

Now we come to the new birth. And what is it? Baxter says, "It is nature's reparation, deviation and perfection." William Low, says, "Regeneration is the birth of the Son of God in the human soul." The Lord does his part towards bringing about the new birth, by giving his spirit, his word and grace; but we must do our part, that is, repent and believe, or we never can be born again. We must come to Jesus as penitent believers, weary and heavy ladened, willing to receive him, in order to obtain power to become the sons and daughters of God. The penitent believer receives a change of state. The bound man is made a free man. The alien must become a citizen. The enemy becomes a friend. All this is obtained by justification. And man's nature must be changed in regeneration: the lion becomes a lamb; the vulture becomes a dove; the corrupt tree becomes a good tree; the wild olive tree a good olive tree. Having obtained the pardon of sin and the new birth, go on and bring the fruits of the Spirit, which are love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Add to your faith virtue, knowledge, &c. Observe all things whatsoever the Lord has commanded, and so continue to be wise virgins, till the bridegroom comes, who will give you a right to the tree of life, and a passport through the gates into the city, where joys are unspeakable and full of glory. Hallelujah, amen.

The Warm Hand of Sympathy.

Till we have reflected on it, we are scarcely aware how much the sum of human happiness in the world is indebted for this one feeling—sympathy. We get cheerfulness and vigor, we scarcely know how or when, from mere association with our fellow men, and from the looks reflected on us of gladness and enjoyment. We catch inspiration and power to go on, from human presence and from cheerful looks. The workman works with added energy from having others by. The full family circle has a strength and life peculiar to its own. The substantial good and the effectual relief which men extend to one is trifling. It is not by those, but by those far less costly, that the work is done. God has given to the weakest and the poorest the power to contribute largely to the common stock of gladness. The child's smile and laugh are mighty powers in this world When bereavement has left you desolate, what substantial benefit is it which makes condolences acceptable? It cannot replace the loved ones you have lost. It can bestow upon you nothing permanent. But a warm hand has touched yours, and its thrill told you that there was a living response there to your emotion. One look one human sigh, has done more for you than the costliest present could convey.

Mystery magnifies danger, as a fog the sun; the hand that warned Belshazzar deprived its horrifying influence from the want of a body.—Colton.

The Way.

"Jesus said unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh to the Father but by me." John 14: 6.

According to the above scripture, Jesus tells of a way, not ways. Now there are above six hundred different persuasions in the world, all claiming to be the followers of Jesus. The question is, are they all right? We will let Jesus and the apostles answer for us. What do they say? Jesus says, "I am the way." Now let us trace him along. We see he was obedient unto his parents, and the law, till he was about 30 years old; for children were under their parents control till they were about 30 years old. Now let us see what Jesus said. Let us look for a moment at what Jesus taught; what he said what he suffered, and what he commanded; and then look into the world. Do we find them following Jesus? Now let us see what Jesus did? Don't forget the scripture above named.

Now when the time had come that he should be about his Father's busines, for which he was sent, we find that he went to his forerunner, John, "And was baptized of John in the river of Jordan." What for? Because he had sinned? Oh, no, for there was never guile found in his mouth. What then? He tells us he is the way, and in John 10: 9, he says, "I am the door: by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." He tells us he is the way and the door. The door we understand is baptism; for when we are baptized, (we mean those that are fit subjects for baptism,) then it is we enter into the church, or sheep-fold. Jesus, says, same chapter first verse, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

Jesus was sent to do just what he did do, and to teach just what he did teach; but before he began to preach, he was baptized. Why? Because that is the door into the church. When we are tired of sin, and are willing to do anything for his sake by believing in God, having faith in his word, sincere repentance of our sins, we are fit subjects for baptism. Then we are baptized. Now we are in the sheep-fold, or church. Now shall we stop? No, he says in Mark, 8: 34, 35, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's the same shall sve it." We see that Jesus was submissive in everything; when he was reviled he riviled not again, although he was the Son of the living God.

Now let us hear the first epistle of John 2: 6, "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked." We read in another place, "Whosoever hath not the Spirit of Christ is none of his." Jesus taught us to be humble. To love all mankind. To do good unto them that despitefully treat and, persecute us. When we are reviled not to revile again. All this Christ taught us. Where shall we go to find such submissiveness to the will of God? To the many Christian churches, so called? We think not. The question might be asked, why do we think so? Let us see: Do we not see them lawing one with another? Do we not see them at our public shows and County and State fairs, and picnics, and even in the ball room? Was Jesus found in such places? No, never. Neither do we think any Christian will be found at such places. Ah, no, but if we are what Christ wants us to be, we will not be conformed to the things of this world, but we will be transformed. The things we once hated we now love, and the things we once loved we now hate. Instead of our minds being "upon the things of earth that are perishable, let us lay up treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt nor thieves break through and steal." These are the Savior's words. This is what he wants us to do.

We will again refer to the text; Jesus says, "I am the way." We will follow him a little farther; we find him now at the place where he told his disciples to go and prepare, that he might eat the passover with them. Now he instituted three ordinances for the house of God, which are obligatory upon the Christian: the first was, feet-washing, second, the supper, third, the communion. Now where do we go to find these things done? In all the churches? We say no. We see feet-washing neglected entirely, so is the supper. About the communion, how do we find it? We see them eat the bread, and drink the wine sometimes at ten, eleven, twelve, or one o'clock. Were they not all instituted at one time, and at one place, and in the night that our blessed Master was betrayed? Yes, we find it so. There is truth in the words, "Eyes they have, but they cannot see, and ears but they cannot hear, and cannot see afar off." Now we find him led by the betrayers unto Caiaphas, the high priest. Then we see he had a crown of thorns upon his head, and they mocked him, and spit upon him, struck him with the reed upon his head, and at last he was extended between heaven and earth to suffer and to spill his blood for sinful man. That all nations, kindreds, and tongues, noble and ignoble, high and low, rich and poor might have free access to a throne of grace, and be permitted to enter into joys beyond the grave. He has sealed his word with his blood as he said before he expired on the cross, "It is finished." Now there is a complete plan of salvation handed down from heaven to man, if we will lay hold of the gospel plow and try to save ourselves. Jesus says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light; Matth. 11: 28, 30. Now after he was dead and buried three days, he burst the bars of death, and he arose triumphant over death, hell and the grave. He appeared unto his disciples just before he ascended to his Father. He said unto them, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world; Matth., 28: 19, 20. Now Jesus had finished his mission in the world, he now gave his will into the hands of the apostles, that they might preach his name through all the world. He said unto them, Mark 16: 15, 16, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not., shall be damned." Moses speaking of the Savior, says, A Prophet your God shall raise up amongst your brethren like unto me. Him shall you hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you; and it shall come to pass whosoever will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people. Now we are taught that Jesus is the way; and that baptism is the door into the church. In our next we will try to show to you by the teachings of the apostles that such is the case.

The Great Prophet.

"The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken." Deut. 18: 15.

In the first place it is necessary to know who this Prophet was. I think, if we are Bible readers, we must all admit that he was Christ. It was Moses that told the people that the Lord would raise up a Prophet unto them, and that the people should hearken unto him. And if we read a little farther, we find that the Lord himself said, "I will raise them up a Prophet, * * * and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him."

From the above words we can plainly see, that Christ spake not of himself, as he said on one occasion, "The words that I speak, I speak not of myself, but the Father gave me a command what I shall say." We also find that, when Peter spake unto the people, shortly after he was baptized with the Holy Ghost, he brought these words into his discourse. Although we must believe that he revised them a little, yet they have the same meaning. He said, "Him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Now remember, every soul that heareth him not in all things, and the word-hearing in this connection signifies doing, for hearing would do us no good if we would not be willing to do what we hear, as the apostle James tells us in his Epistle 1: 22.

We also learn that, when Stephen, that just martyr, was before the council and answered for himself, he also told them that Moses had told the children of Israel that the Lord would raise up a Prophet, like unto him; and he told them that they resisted the Holy Spirit as their Father's did, and farther told them that they were the murderers of that Prophet, which they should have heard in all things; and when they heard this they were all enraged and cast him out of the city and stoned him to death. Nevertheless all that they had done to him he loved them to the end, for he prayed before he expired that God should not lay their sin to their charge.

Now brethren and sisters, we must believe that this man had truly the faith of that prophet, and was willing to hear him in all things; for we learn, when that Prophet was crucified, he also prayed that God should forgive them, for they know not what they do. Jesus was that Prophet, and we must hear him in all things, that he has commanded us, and if we must seal our faith with our blood, like Stephen of old. When he gave the commission to the apostles, he said, that they should teach the people to observe all things that he had commanded, and then he would be with them unto the end of the world. But we must belive that, if we are not willing to hear or do all that he has commanded us, he is not with us.

Not long ago I heard a man preach, and I thought he did very well. He spoke about obeying the word of God punctually, and referred to the sons of Aaron, how they were consumed by transgressing the commands of God, and said that God was no respecter of persons, or he would have saved the sons of the high-priest. I thought it was all right and good, so far as he said, if he only would be willing to do all; but if you would ask him about the Lord's supper, he would say the bread and wine is the supper; and if you ask him about baptism, he would say any way is right; and about feet-washing, he would say it is not essential to our salvation; and so I concluded that he must be one of those characters that we read of, that we should observe and do what they say, but not as they do; "for they say and do not." In conclusion he referred to the commission, and said that Christ said, "Go and teach all nations, and, lo, I am with you, even to the end of the world." He left the "all things" out, and so I concluded that he is not willing to hear the Prophet in all things, and consequently has not the promise that he will be with him to the end.

Rowing Against the Tide.

It is easy to glide with its ripples
Adown the stream of Time.
To flow with the course of the river,
Like music to some old rhyme:
But ah! it takes courage and patience
Against the current to ride.
And we must have strength from Heaven
When rowing against the tide.

We may float on the river's surface,
While our oars scarce touch the stream.
And visions of earthly glory,
On our dazzled sight may gleam:
We forget that on before us
The dashing torrents roar,
And while we are idly dreaming,
Its waters will carry us o'er.

But few—ah! would there were many—
Row up the "Stream of Life,"
They struggle against its surges,
And mind neither toil or strife:
Though weary and faint with labor,
Singing triumphant they ride,
For Christ is the hero's Captain,
When rowing against the tide.

For on through the hazy distance,
Like a mist on the distant shore,
They see the walls of the city,
With its banners floating o'er—
See through a glass so darkly,
They almost mistake their way,
But faith throws light on their labor,
When darkness shuts out their way.

And shall we be one of the number
Who mind not toil nor pain?
Shall we moan the loss of earthly
When we have a crown to gain?
Or shall we glide on with the river,
With death at the end of our ride,
While our brother with Heaven before him
Is rowing against the tide?

Childhood is like a mirror, catching and reflecting images all around it. An impious or profane thought uttered by a parent's lips may operate on a young heart like a careless spray of water upon polished steel, staining it with rust, which no after scouring can efface.

Kiss the Son.

"Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Psalms 2 : 12.

These are words of the Psalmist, and are prophetical. David was not only a prophet, (Acts 2 : 30), but, filled with the Spirit of God, he had the wisdom to bring into his songs the words of the prophets. He says, "Kiss the Son"—the eternal Son of God, who was at that time not yet come into the world. But it was shown to the prophets that he will come ; and he has come, and, no doubt, his disciples that were with him while he was upon this earth did kiss him ; for, in that night, at the Mount of Olives, whither Jesus resorted with his disciples after they had eaten the Lord's Supper, Judas, having separated himself from them at the table, and went and gathered a band of soldiers to take Jesus and put him to death, came, very friendly, to Jesus and kissed him, (Matth. 26 : 49,) as no doubt was their custom when they met him ; for they loved him. But Judas did not kiss him at this time because he loved him ; for this was a kiss of deception for betrayal. There was a little money to be made here, as the soldiers had promised 30 pieces of silver to be given to the one that would deliver him to them. And Judas loved money. He was tempted to sell his dear Savior ; but he repented when it was too late. He was treasurer for the disciples, and carried the bag, and bore what was put therein. But he was not true to his calling : his heart was full of evil, so he betrayed his Lord with a kiss, and gave him in the hands of the soldiers, who thirsted for his blood. Jesus said unto him, "Betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss ?" It was a tasteless, cold kiss. There was no warm affection in it.

Although the Son was crucified and ascended up to the Father in heaven, yet must all his followers, his disciples, kiss him. These words are recorded for us, and all generations who seek after God. Although in a natural sense it is impossible, yet in a spiritual sense it is possible. It is parallel with eating the flesh of the Son of man and drinking his blood. A kiss is a visible token of love, (yet may be used in other purposes, like that of Judas, for deception, even among Christians, and for custom and fashion where sometimes there is no love existing at all,) and was used by the apostles and disciples as an evidence of Christian love for each other and for the Master. The apostles also commanded it to be observed in the churches. See Rom. 16 : 16 ; 1 Cor. 16 : 10 ; 2 Cor. 13 : 12; Titus 5 : 26 ; 1 Peter 3 : 14.

A kiss is not only an evidence of love, but an affectionate kiss produces love. There is a sacred and invisible power connected with it. If the motive of the persons by whom it is produced is pure, it will create an attachment to each other. Therefore it is our duty to kiss the Son. There is a very close and tender connection in kissing ; and in order to kiss the Son we must embrace him—must be very near unto him ; yes, we must feel that he is very near unto us. He has promised that, if we love him and keep his words, both he and the Father will come and make their abode with us. John 14th chapter. And if he be with us, can we not kiss him —our spirit bearing witness with his Spirit, brings us in very close connection with him ? And if we be faithful and persevering, walking humbly in the steps of our Lord, even over the brook Kedron, up into the Jordan at the Mount of Olives, and then to the judgment-seat, and on up to Calvary, bearing our cross, Oh ! can we not kiss him ? Yes, he has kissed me. How often have I felt his kind embrace ! He loves me and I love him. Although I may sometimes deny him, feeling a sense of this, he loves me still. Yea, he lendeth his hand to bear us up, and his strong arm to lean upon, and the nearer we follow in his steps, the closer will be our connection with him. And as our connection with him increases, our love to him will grow stronger ; but if we refuse to kiss the Son, by growing indifferent and careless in our service to him and refusing to talk with him of our private matters, (for he is our only confidant,) if we cease to confide in him, he will be grieved, and become angry, and turn himself away from us. We should make haste, when we see that we have failed and come short, and speedily retrace our steps, fall at his feet, and acknowledge our sins for fear we "perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little ;" for without his presence we must perish. And, dear reader, do not pretend to kiss the Son with a Judas kiss ; for Jesus knoweth what is in thine heart. Let every Christian kiss the Son with a pure heart ; for, "blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Explanation on Roman 11 : 18, Desired in No. 20, by F. C. Barnes.

"Boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee."

The root is Christ. The branches the apostle speaks of are, the unbelieving Jews, which were broken off, as natural branches: the Gentiles are represented as being a wild Olive tree by nature and were grafted into the good Olive tree, contrary to nature. How much more shall these (the broken off Jews,) which be the natural branches, be grafted in to their own Olive tree ? See 25th verse. The apostles would not have the Roman Brethren ignorant of this mystery, "That blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles become in." Therefore the warning of the apostle, "Boast not against the branches," and say they "were broken off, that I might be grafted in." "Be not high minded, but fear." The chapter is connected with the query from the 11 verse to the end ; but I will only say a few words on 24th verse, being 'Grafted contrary to nature." Grafting in nature's process, we take a branch of select or good fruit, and graft it in a wild tree by nature, and it will bring forth good fruit. This is grafting according to nature. But the gospel grafting is just the contrary : we, as wild branches, are grafted into a good Olive tree, that we may partake of the root and fatness of the Olive tree, and bring forth good fruit to the honor and glory of God.

Editorial Correspondence.

TUESDAY, July 23rd. Set out early in the morning to resume our business, which now appeared to be that of sight-seeing. Brother Hoover again took us in his spring wagon. The first place of note we interviewed was Fort Snelling, said to have been built by Washington. It is situated on the banks of the Mississipi River, on a high point of bluff. From the floor of the Lookout to the level of the river below is considerably over one hundred feet, and almost perpendicular. There are some curiosities about the place, but nothing of sufficient importance to deserve a lenghty description in these columns, especially since we are not a military people. Although there is not much military demonstration at the present time; nothing that looks like blood shed. It is occupied by a small company of soldiers, simply to keep it in order.

Thence we went to Minnehaha Falls, the great text place of "Hiawatha." Little did we think fifteen years ago when we first read Longfellow's popular poem, that we should ever be permitted to see the Laughing Water. But that was our privilege this day. Imagine yourself standing on a shelf of rock, thirty feet from water level, with an arch of rock extending everhead eight to ten feet, over which falls, from thirty feet above, a stream of water twenty-five feet wide, just thick enough to form a clear white sheet, and almost thin enough to fall in drops; then you will see Minnehaha, as near as we can describe it. It is a delightful spot; all formed by the hand of Nature, and is becoming quite a resort for the curious. Man is there too with his collection basket. It is considered a firstrate place to make money at. In warm weather visitors would get "dry," so a saloon would be necessary. There is one there. Water was good enough for us to drink.

Next we interviewed Minneapolis, which we approached by way of Minnehaha Avenue, a street one hundred feet wide, six miles distant, and almost as level as a threshing floor. It is one of the nicest drives we ever enjoyed; and Chicago Avenue, running west from Minneapolis, also one hundred feet wide, is equal to it. There are in the city a dozen or more saw mills, manufacturing as many millions of feet of lumber annually; some six to eight flouring mills, some of them having a capacity of over five hundred barrels of flour a day; two paper mills, a cotton factory, woolen factory, machine shops, and a number of small iron and wood manufactories. And its manufactoring resources and facilities are yet undeveloped. Its water power is unlimited. The St. Anthony Falls extend across the whole Mississipi river. They are about thirty feet high, making fall enough for six courses of turbine water wheels; and the river is wide enough for five hundred wheels, giving us at least three thousand wheels, of five hundred horse power each. Even this estimate may be too small by one half.

Another observation worthy of note is the elegant buildings all over the city, and especially the magnificent residences, and their beautifully ornamented yards, and flower gardens. A vast amount of capital is invested in such property.

We also visited Lake Calhoun, a few miles from the city. It is a beautiful sheet of water, from one to two miles in diameter. King's fancy stock farm, a few miles south of the city, is also worthy of note. Here we saw the finest stock we ever saw, some of them miserably fat for warm weather. They are all clean cattle—no hogs.

WEDNESDAY, 24th. This being fishing day, friend Asa Myers, son-in-law to brother Hoover, and his wife were induced to accompany us with their team to convey the boat, &c. We selected Lake Killarney, so christened by an Irish, Catholic priest, in honor to the lake of the same name on the "Green Isle." We took an early start and were at work before eight o'clock in the morning. Here we had something new to learn in the fishing business. They called it trolling. An artificial bait is made of tin, with a flange attached, so that drawing it through the water will cause it to troll, or roll. To this are attached the hooks at one end, and at the other a long, strong line, by which it is drawn through the water, by one sitting in the boat, while another works the oars. We carried the trolling line for a few hours, and succeeded in taking in the largest pickerel captured during all our fishing expeditions. Also a number of smaller fry. Dr. B. also carried it, and took a fine bass, and other smaller fishes, but was most successful with hook and line, catching sunfish, which appeared quite abundant. Sister Hoover, who was also in our company, had a fire of coals made, and prepared a fine mess of fishes, which, with the other edibles brought along, made us an excellent dinner in the grove, which we enjoyed very much, having been brought to our appetite by trying our skill at working oars. As a fishing excursion the day was a success, and as a day of pleasure, it was the greatest day of the feast. Bathing in the pure, clear water, and sailing over the calm, smooth lake, surrounded by margins of beautiful green, are luxuries we may never enjoy again. A shower of rain in the afternoon gave us more water than we needed for convenience or comfort.

THURSDAY, 25th. This morning we bade farewell to brother Hoover and his family with whom we had spent such a pleasant time. Hope the Lord will bless them while in their isolated state. The Lord will meet them in the closet and at the family altar, if they will call upon him. Brother H. took us to Fort Snelling, where we took cars. Having taken an accommodation train, we were obliged to change cars at Plymouth, the junction of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota with the Milwaukee and St. Paul road, and there wait until midnight. It being a small, new place, without a hotel, there was quite a fall in our accommodations from the previous week But the Shell Rock river was close at hand in which we caught several strings of fishes, making up for all other deficiencies.

The B. C. R. & M. rail-road afforded us excellent accommodations. The road is smooth and the running stock in good trim. This line extends from Burlington, via. Cedar Rapids, Waterloo, and Austin to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and is the most direct line from said points. Ask for through trains by said line.

FRIDAY, 26th. Arrived at Waterloo at four in the morning and worked our way to the house of brother Charlie Roberts, exceedingly anxious to receive word from home, having been without letters for about sixteen days. Had the pleasure of receiving some half dozen letters; also of seeing brother Charlie's new son. Mother and son were doing well. Spent the day in looking around the city, and reading No. 28 and 29 of C. F. C. which we first saw at this place. We do regard them as excellent numbers. It does appear that the paper can be run quite successfully without us. Glad of it, for it will not be very long until it will have to run or cease to run without brother H. R. H. However, at the present time we bid as fair for twenty years longer as we did that many years ago. The irregular appearance of the paper appears to be the only objection raised during our absence; and for this we hope the assistant's explanation will be satisfactory. When you do get the paper you have something worth reading.

Having had forebodings of evil we were much rejoiced at receiving all good news from home. What a glorious institution is our mail system, and what a blessing the ability of writing and reading.

Dined and lodged with brother Ephraim Spicher's, grocer and boarding-house keeper.

SATURDAY, 27th, Remained at brother Spicher's until afternoon, and wrote this report up to date, in the medical office of Dr. G. G. Bickley, one of the leading physicians of the city.

Our pleasure trip is now rapidly winding up. We have engaged to preach in town to-morrow afternoon, at Strayer's school-house beyond Black Hawk creek, in the evening, and at the meeting-house on Monday evening, and on Tuesday morning we expect to set out upon our homeward journey. Would it were already accomplished.

Brother J. B. Allensworth will please take notice that we cannot comply with his request to visit them, from the fact that we did not receive his notice in time, and we did not know where Vincennes is.

Done, with my hand, at Waterloo, Iowa, Saturday evening, July 27th, in fair health and good spirits.

H. R. HOLSINGER.

Editor's Report.

SATURDAY, July 27th. After having spent the day pleasantly, in looking around the town of Waterloo, we went with brother Benjamin Buechley on his wagon, to brother Peter Huff's where we lodged. They are formerly from Ohio, and originally from Pennsylvania; and are as all Pennsylvanians ought to be: sociable and kind.

SUNDAY, 28th. Accompanied brother Huff's to the Orange Grove school-house where we attended meeting and tried to preach, to an attentive audience. Accompanied brother John Spicher's to their home in Waterloo. Preached in the Christidelphian hall at 3 o'clock. Had a fair congregation, and good attention. Brother Spicher then gave us his conveyance, by which we went to our evening appointment, accompanied by brother Jacob Murray, at Strayer's school-house, about ten miles distant, where we addressed a full house of very attentive listeners. So we preached three times and traveled about sixteen miles in one day, and have nothing to complain of either. Took supper at brother Jacob Cobaugh's, and lodged at brother Henry McCartney's.

MONDAY, 29th. We now took final leave of our friends as we departed, not hoping to meet them again on the present visit, and some we fear we shall never see again. Made a visit to the harvestfield where brethren Murray and Cobaugh were cutting grain with the Marsh Harvester. It was the first we had ever seen. Tried our hand one round, and took our sheaf every time, but some of them were not too well done. It was a little out of our line. Those who follow it as a business have our sympathies.

Thence to brother Abraham Good's, who lives near the meeting-house, where we dined. Brother Joseph Burkhart, of Mineral Point, Cambria county, Pa., who was visiting among his friends and acquaintances in the West, accompanied us. After dinner visited brother Paul Cobaugh's, across the road from brother Good's, where we had expected to spend more of our time, but our visit was now rapidly winding to a close.

At three o'clock preached the funeral of JAMES QUINTER HARRISON, son of Samuel Harrison and wife, aged 4 months and 15 days. Text: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Hope the bereaved parents will strive to meet their little one in the kingdom of God. To do which they must become converted, and become as a little child; not in understanding, but in malace, be ye children.

Called in at brother Matthias Miller's to bid farewell. Brother Miller was afflicted with a painful felon. Here we took leave of elder E. K. Buechley and wife, and other friends.

This afternoon we had also expected to visit brother Moore; who is very much afflicted, and whom we shall now most likely never see again in this world; but the funeral having been delayed from two to three o'clock, all our spare time was taken up. Hope brother Moore, if still living, will accept the will for the deed, and that the brethren will not neglect to visit him often.

Thence to brother Joseph Saylor's, where we packed our baggage, enjoyed a social meal, with other friends, and then took leave from this kind family, where we had enjoyed so many kindnesses. Brother Martin Buechley and wife were in our company and conveyed our baggage to town. Went by brother Michael Reber's to bid farewell, and went away with more than we had expected. Many thanks.

Lodged at brother John Spicher's in Waterloo, and were the occasion of considerable trouble, all of which was cheerfully borne by the kind family of our host.

TUESDAY, 30. Took the cars at 4 o'clock in the morning. Made close connection at Cedar Rapids, and arrived at Chicago at about four in the evening. Found our way to the house of Dr. Fahrney where we were entertained for the night.

WEDNESDAY, 31st. Took a stroll over the city, and enjoyed the hospitality of Dr. F's. We expect them to Dale City shortly when we hope to have an opportunity to return some of the kindness received at their hands. At five in the evening, took the cars, on the

PITTSBURG, FT. WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD.

This road is now under the control of the Penn'a. Central Railroad Company, and forms the most direct route from Philadelphia and New York to Chicago, and all the great cities of the west. The Penn'a. Central is undoubtedly the most popular Railroad Company in the United States. This is accounted for from the fact of its almost unlimited resources and wealth, and consequent ability to do well everything it undertakes; and the promptness and precision with which all its business is transacted. When it is known that this company is connected with the building or management of a railway, the whole community is inspired with confidence and enthusiasm. This is not only true in Pennsylvania and Ohio, but throughout Iowa and Minnesota. The accommodations are excellent, and the rate of fair reasonable. Through tickets may be obtained at reduced rates.

THURSDAY, Aug. 1st. Arrived at Pittsburg, at noon. Put up at the St. James Hotel, opposite the Union Depot. Spent the afternoon in seeing sights, of which there are always plenty in Pittsburg. Also visited the office of the Pittsburg, Washington, & Baltimore Railway Company. The President and Superintendent were both out along the line, looking after the interests of the road. But our business could all be attended to by the attentive clerks who represent them in their absence. The evening train having been taken off the road to make room for the extensive freight traffic, we were obliged to remain until morning.

FRIDAY, 2nd. Took cars at six A. M., and after a pleasant ride, arrived at Dale City, at noon. Found our families all at the station awaiting our arrival. You had better believe we had a happy time. We left home on the 16th of May, and returned on the 2nd of August. A long while to be from home. But the strangest thing of all was, that our family had changed places of residence, and we had now to be conducted to our own house. It took some time before we became reconciled to its being our own home. But the familiar faces and furniture were strong arguments, which, with the convincing words of our brother Beer, could not be resisted. But we cannot remain long. An all upstairs home is a thing to be suffered, but cannot be enjoyed.

Found the Brethren, neighbors, and friends generally enjoying reasonable health.

SATURDAY, 3rd. Perhaps our readers had expected that now, having returned home the publication of our daily journal would be discontinued. And so it shall be if they desire it; but some have asked us to continue it and let them know what we do at home. Therefore we shall continue for a time at least, unless some one treads on our toes.

The forenoon was employed in looking through our office and learning its condition and working. We found it in every way fully equal, and in some quite superior to that in which we had left it. Good for our assistants; we'll go again. But financially we need help. Every dollar due us should now be paid. The very outside limit of our trusting time has now expired. Will not those of our subscribers who have not yet paid their subscriptions do so at once, and thus greatly relieve us. Some of our agents tell us that some of you owe them for two and three years past, and have never once offered to pay, when you are worth thousands of dollars. And some have even neglected to make provisions in their wills for our just claims. Please pay over at once what you owe, to our agent to whom you had subscribed. And will not our agents make an effort to collect every collectable dollar and forward to us immediately? Please do. And if you cannot collect the whole of it at once, can you not afford to advance it for a few weeks until you can collect the balance. Do if you can.

To Seek the Light.

I saw a little blade of grass
Just peeping from the sod,
And asked it why it sought to pass
Beyond its parent clod:
It seemed to raise its timid head,
All sparkling, fresh and bright,
And wondering at the question, said,
"I rise to seek the light."

I asked the angel why his wing,
To upward flight was given,
As if he spurned each earthly thing,
And knew no home but heaven:
He answered, as he fixed his gaze,
Undazzled at the sight,
Upon the sun's meridian blaze,
"I rise to seek the light."

I asked my soul, what means this thirst,
For something yet beyond?
What means this eagerness to burst
From every earthly bound?
It answers, and I feel the glow.
With fires more warm, more bright,
"All is too dull, too dark below,
I rise to seek the light!"

Hints for Teachers.

GET OTHERS AT WORK.

The teacher who wins his class to become workers with him or the upbuilding of the school, starts them upon a certain good development which his words could not give them.

The pastor who can arouse his church to come to the school, to aid its finances, to help the children in their lessons, and to feel the school to be their own, has succeeded as a Sunday-school man.

The superintendent is a master workman, if he has power to organize the work of his forces, and get each to take a field of activity and devote himself to it assiduously. Though he may lack the gift of excellent speaking, or of the impartation of large stores of information, he does the greatest thing if he works others.

He will not do this unless he proves that he himself is aroused. It may or may not be manifested physically, but he will make his band of teachers feel that his soul has a thorough stir in the deep places and out to the wide limits. He will be a leader in willingness to work and make sacrifices, saying, "Come," not "Go."

The present time qualifies and accustoms people to thorough executive activity.

Let us keep the tone of the school earnestness abreast with that of the age.

Yes, go beyond it, in proportion to the excellence of our cause.

A GREAT WORK.

A certain philosopher was always talking very much to his friends about the garden in which he was in the habit of walking, and where he carried on his studies. At length one of them came to see him; and he found his garden was a patch of ground about twice the size of the floor of his own room. "What!" said he, "is this your garden? It's not very broad." "No," said the philosopher, "it's not very broad, but it's a wondrous height!" And so I would say to you, Sunday-school teachers: your work in your class is not a very large one, but it's a wondrous height. It goes up to heaven; to conceive of it aright, it goes right out to eternity.

TEACHING BY EXAMPLE.

"Mary, what do you wish to be when you grow up?" asked a little girl of her companion.

"I want to be like my teacher," was the quick, earnest reply.

My interest was awakened, and drawing near, I said, "Why do you wish to be like your teacher, my dear?"

"Oh, because she is so kind and good. She knows a great deal, and she takes such pains to teach us. Then, she is always trying to make us happy. I am sure she does good wherever she goes."

The little girls were members of the same Sabbath-school class; and on further inquiry they told me of the pleasant exercises of their class, of their visits to their teacher, and the means which she employed to interest and instruct them. It was evident that she had gained a strong hold on their affections, and as they turned away I thought, "After all, is not this the great secret of a teachers success? Where can a child be found whose heart may not be swayed beneath the gentle touch of love?

"Like teacher!" How much is expressed in those words!

Dear fellow-laborer, let us ever seek to meet our children with hearts attuned by the constraining love of Jesus. With earnest affection let us press the truth home to their hearts.

NEED OF STUDY.

It was an admirable reply which Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, made to some one who inquired why he continued to study his lessons over and over previous to teaching his classes: "Because I prefer that they should be supplied from a running stream, rather than from a stagnant pool."

Working for Jesus.

"I wish I could do something for my Savior besides loving Him, not in order to show my love for Him, since he can see my heart, but I want to do something for Him because I love Him. I will ask Him, He will tell me what to do."

So talked a young disciple to himself a few weeks ago. Soon a friend, his Sunday-school teacher, came to him, saying:

"Henry, would you like to work in the vineyard to-day?"

"Yes, sir," was the eager reply; "I was just asking for work—anything that I can do, with Jesus' help, I will."

"Well, Henry, I want the Christians in our class, each to take a member of the class who is not a Christian, and pray and labor with him. I have given you Fred Haines."

"Fred Haines; oh, let some one else take him. I can't!"

"No, you can't, but Jesus can. Good morning."

Thus urged, this young disciple trembling sought his wild classmate. He was laughingly received; his earnest words and tearful appeals seemed unheeded; yet he left with a glad heart, for Jesus had paid him for his work with His own loving presence. Jesus gave him courage to go again and again, to pray and never faint, until his thoughtless friend learned to love the Savior.

"Oh, Mr. B——," said Henry to his teacher, a few weeks after their first conversation, "working for Jesus pays. We deserve no reward for such little services, but Jesus gives it all the way along; it is now my daily prayer, 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do.'"—S. S. Times.

To Brother Jonas Price of Hatfield.

Beloved in Christ Jesus: By this I inform you, for the first time, of my affliction, which kept me confined to my bed nearly one year. In last August, the latter part, I took a severe attack of colic and congestion of the liver, and almost unendurable pain in my abdomen and side. The doctor put me under the influence of chloroform. I was then very poorly, for three weeks in bed. I then lingered four weeks, up, but unable to work. Then I took my bed. An abcess made its appearance in my abdomen, accompanied with pains hard to endure. Called a physician. He fearing it would break inside made every possible effort to draw it to the outer side, and was successful by the help of the divine power. In November he opened it. Since that time it has been opened at nine different places, which are discharging pus up to this time. In the month of December six of our children took diphtheria: one we had to part with. My wife at this time was very poorly; but has since been restored to good health. The other children recovered. A month later, the children six in number, all took scarlet fever, one after the other. All recovered. Now the first of April was coming on fast; we had to move six miles distance, and I still closely confined, not able to sit up in bed. Moving day came; my friends made arrangements by making a box, lifted me out of bed, and carried me into a close spring wagon. I endured the hauling tolerable well, and now live near Wellsville, still confined to my bed, most of the time suffering very much pain. About the first of June I became afflicted with dropsy. My limbs and feet are since swollen that I have fears it may prove serious or fatal. The first of July I took a severe attack of dysentery. Most of this time I had little or no appetite, and I have not been able to walk one step since I took my bed with this last attack which is close on to a year. Now brother Jonas, and all the readers of the C. F. C., can see how soon mortal man can be brought down in affliction. Now I much desire the prayers of the little church at Hatfield, as that is one of my favorite places to mingle in the worship of God. My prayer is that the Lord bless that people, with all others, so that when our time of suffering is over in this life, we may suffer no more. I wish to hear from you soon. Brother Jonas, I send greetings to you and yours. May the blessings of God rest with us all. Amen.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

Brother Holsinger: Please announce through the C. F. C., that the brethren of the Vermillion arm of the church, Livingston Co., Illinois, contemplate, the Lord willing, to hold a lovefeast, commencing Friday, Sept., 20th, at 2 o'clock P. M., at the residence of Brother Adam Younker, 4 miles south of Cornell, and 7 miles north-west of Pontiac. A cordial invitation is extended to all, the brethren and sisters, and especially to the laboring brethren, as we have but one minister in this arm of the church. The territory to which he has to travel over is about 30 miles wide and 50 long. Yes, brethren, truly might we say, "The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few." We expect to have preaching over Lord's day. Those coming by railroad will stop off at Cornell. They will please call on the writer, and arrangments will be made for conveying them to the place of meeting. By order of the church, and especially by our minister.

K. HECKMAN.

WRIGHTSVILLE, July 26, 1872.

Brother Holsinger: Enclosed you will find a check that will pay for three subscribers of the COMPANION for 1872 the names are as follows: (We omit names. ED.)

The money had been sent before and was lost. It will be a dear paper for me; but rather than do without it I would pay ten dollars for it. May God's blessing rest upon your efforts, so that the C. F. C. will be circulated far and wide, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

MARY R. CHARLES.

That sounds to us like true generosity. Not every one, under similar circumstances has so expressed himself, and very few have ever been willing to bear part of the loss when money failed to come to hand. But we do not expect sister Charles to bear the whole loss, unless she feels entirely able and willing to do so. We credit her with the amount, and if she thinks it is too much for her, she must only say so, and we will credit her with one-half the amount more, on account of next year. We too want to do what is fair.

To J. D. Myers.

You wish an explanation of the 16th verse of the 11th chapter of 1 Corinthians. To get at the meaning of the 16th verse, you ought to examine the foregoing verses to see what Paul was teaching his Corinthian brethren. He was instructing them in what manner woman shall appear in the church—the covering of the head, and other things. Then comes in the 16th verse, which means about this; "Should any at Corinth contend that it was proper for women in worship to appear like men or men like women, I inform them that this is contrary to the teaching of the apostles, and to the practice of the churches at large, and must therefore be avoided." They were not accustomed to do otherwise than his teachings showed them; consequently there should be no contention about the matter, but receive it as being right according to his teachings.

Your brother in the faith.

GEO. W. BURKHART.

Nolo, Pa.

From Jewel Co., Kan.

This morning, through the mercies of God I am yet in the land, amongst the living; and I thank God for his kind care over me since I am on my mission of love here in the far west. I am this morning at the house of brother James L. Switzer.

I learned by looking over the map of Kansas, that I am over one hundred miles farther west than I had intended to go when I first came to the state. But the field is lying wide open, and the call for laborers is great. The Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," is the cause of my being here. I will still go some farther west. But how will I ever get to the point I aimed for when I left Nebraska, about the 20th of June? Since that time I came to places where the Brethren had never preached. This made it more important to visit such places. This is the cry all along. Some say they did not hear any preaching for the last year. But they all want on Sundays to hear. This I cannot always accept, and so I read for them, and tell them to search the scriptures and pray God for wisdom.

I was with the little church in Republic county, Kan. I remained with them over two weeks, during which time there were eleven added to their number by baptism. This afforded great joy both to them and to me. Among them the youngest was fourteen, and the oldest nearly or altogether 80 years of age. This truly affords joy both to the sower and the reaper. They agreed to hold the communion meeting at Richard Miller's, near Haddan, on the 7th and 8th of September, and the 10th and 11th at Burr Oak, Jewell county, Kansas, near brother Allen Ives. I have been remarkably well in all my travels, for which I thank the Lord. Brethren pray for me. I remain your brother in the bonds of love.

M. FORNEY.

UNION BRIDGE, MD
July 30, 1872.

To the brotherhood, through the COMPANION. Our beloved brother and overseer, Philip Boyle, has a wish that his brethren may know his condition; therefore I write in compliance with his wishes. He, naturally feebly constituted, has at different times suffered from vertigo for a number of years; but the church has still had the benefit of his labors and counsel until recently. It has now been some eight or nine weeks since he has been confined to his chair, not being able to lie down to rest. From his attending physicians, (Dr's. Brown and Englar, successors to Dr. E. L. Brown,) I received the following statement of the nature of his disease, "Dilatation of the right side of the heart, attended with dropsical swelling of the lower extremities, and aggravated paroxysms of dyspnoea." He suffers considerably at times, but is patient, and desires an interest in the prayers of the church. He also wishes me to have our fall meetings published. The brethren at Meadow branch will, the Lord willing, hold their communion on Saturday the 12th of October, commencing at 1 o'clock P. M. Also at Sam's Creek, on Tuesday 15th same month at same hour. To both of which we extend a hearty invitation, especially to ministering brethren. And inasmuch as our district is small, and congregations not very far apart, and only five of them, and I expect a lovefeast in each of them, Monocacy immediately following ours, and Bush Creek and Beaver Dam likely to follow, will not some of our brethren from Virginia and Penn'a., be provoked to come and see how we do, feast with us, and call to others to come and enjoy what all the true followers of Jesus are enjoying? Brethren, what say you to these things? I fancy some brother, when he reads this, will say, "I'll come." The Lord grant it may be so.

EPH. W. STONER.

Brethren Editors: I feel as though I should contribute something for the COMPANION, but language lacks, education is needed; notwithstanding, if we have but one talent, we should try and make use of the same. Hence, I read the reports of the brother Editor, and brother Dr. Beachley's travels west, and whilst I read over the same, I was brought to remembrance of many of my old acquaintances who then resided in Pa., at the time when I lived there. And moreover, some of the places which they named in their report, whilst on their tour, I was a visitor to, over twenty-seven years ago. And since then, some five years ago; to Dixon, Ill., Ashton, Chicago, &c. I could not refrain from writing, after I had read the names of so many persons, who were named in their report, with whom I had many a pleasant interview, whilst I lived in my old native home. Although many whom I did know, both old and young, are now gone to their long home from whence there is no returning; hope that all may have landed safely in the care of our blessed Jesus, from whence they do not desire to return—nor would I wish, or desire to call them back, if I had the power to do so. Brother Dr. Beachley remarked in his travelling report, that he read the inscriptions on the tombstones of several of his friends; when born, and when departed this life. His grand-father, I knew well, and others too, whose bodies are resting under the mother earth, in the west. Oh! that I could only see some of my old friends, brothers and sisters in the Lord, who are still living near my native home in Pa. Another report I received of late, from an old friend, Samuel M. Haller from Cumberland, Md., by sending me several daily newspapers, brought the sad news that my old county-seat had met with a conflagration on the 9th of May last, which nearly consumed the the whole town. Many persons named in the report, who suffered by said conflagration, I was personally acquainted with. I felt sorry indeed to hear the sad news. Why did not the COMPANION give us the result of the above disaster? I could not see any wrong, or harm in it if it had. But indeed, I am thankful for the present privilege and the past, and that we can read the many interesting articles published in the COMPANION. I hope to continue, taking the same, as long as it and myself may exist. I would farther add, that we have an interesting Sabbath-school in our arm of church, in our meeting-house, which affords ample room for many scholars. The writer is one of the superintendents, and a friend to Sabbath-schools. Notwithstanding, some members are opposed to the same. It is true, that in some instances, evil may result from the same; but care should be taken in all things. We can abuse good things, if we do not resort to proper means. I shall close, and ever remember the past favors, and still look, while the privilege shall be extended, to read the COMPANION with interest.

I am your humble brother,

JOHN LONG

Hausertown, Ind.

Brother Holsinger: You may announce, that the Brethren of Clinton county, Mich., intend to hold a lovefeast on the 14th of September, if the Lord is willing, at the Baker school-house, two and a quarter miles south of Sheparsdville. As there has never been any held here, the Brethren most earnestly invite all the brethren and sisters of the surrounding counties to attend; and especially ministers are very much needed here. To brother John Nicholson I would say, come out here and attend our lovefeast, and select a home and preach for us, as we have no preacher here. We have a nice country here. Brother David Henry informed us of your intention of coming out here. We say, Come. It is 12 miles to Eureka, where David Henry lives.

D. BAKER.

Brother Henry:—Please say to the readers of your valuable paper, that we intend the "Lord willing," to hold a communion meeting on the 14th and 15th days of September, at the house of brother William Roberts, in Grundy county, Missouri Brethren desiring to be with us can inform us of their coming, and they will be met with conveyance at Tyndal Station, three miles from the place of meeting. Said station is no C., R. I. & P. R. R By order of the church. J. H. ROBERTS.

Correction.

In COMPANION No. 28, Page 446, in my article, 3rd line, should read, properly for the first time. 16th line should be, the wholesome doctrine I sought in my weakness to propagate for our mutual benefit, &c. Where it reads "adversities of gifts," it should read diversities of gifts. In COMPANION No. 29, page 459, read, to number your days that you may apply your heart's unto wisdom.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

St. Joseph county, Michigan, Sister REBECCA SHERRICK, departed this life May 22nd, aged 26 years; leaving three children, and a kind husband (a brother) to mourn her deep-felt loss. We have confidence that she died to live again. She was kind and a very consistent member for seven years. Funeral services by D. M. Truby and H. Gephart, from John the 11: 25.

July 14th, at his residence on Stagg's Run, Mineral county, West Va., brother DANIEL FINK; aged 92 years 4 months and 29 days. Funeral services by Elder Solomon Biser assisted by Daniel B. Arnold. from 119th Psalm 58th and 59th verses. Brother Fink was a member of the church before my recollection, which is 25 years, and has survived his companion about that length of time. He leaves 4 children with families of grand-children, to mourn his loss. The cause of the brother's departure appeared to be, overwo n by slowly rolling years. Had passed through many wintry blasts and summer heats, chilling winds and beating rains, for nearly a century, until the ear was ruined and the eye grew dim, and the hair was blooming with white, the the cheek was pale and furrowed, the frame was tottering, and the mind was short but firmly fixed on the great point "Victory," until he finished his course and ended his race.

In the West Branch church, Ogle Co., Ill., July 26th. Sister ELIZABETH, wife of Brother John Diehl; aged 55 years 4 months and 22 days. She left a mother, three brothers, a husband, and seven children, to mourn their loss. All the family were present to witness her death and burial but one. Her disease was consumption, from which she lingered about 22 years. She bore her sickness with Christian fortitude. Funeral occasion improved by the brethren, from 2 Timothy 4: 6—8, to a large concourse of people.

July 2nd, near Foreston, Ogle county, Ill. CATHARINE BRANT, wife of J. J. Brant; aged 48 years 10 months. Her last breath was spent in prayer to God; and with an eye of faith looked to her home on high. Sadly and silently we saw her placed to her last resting spot on earth. We meet mother no more in the family circle; she has passed away. Her desire was not gratified, to be immersed, yet she did what she could. Whatever befalls us, may it tend to fit us for that country, to which every loved one who is gathered draws our hearts more closely. Then fear and care shall only be known in grateful remembrance.

Twenty-three miles the shortest. Three express trains leave daily, except Sunday, for St. Louis and the West. The only line running Pullman's celebrated Drawing-Room Sleeping Cars from New York, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Louisville, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, to St.Louis, without change. Passengers should remember that this is the greatest West Bound Route for Kansas City, Leavenworth, Lawrence, Topeka, Junction City, Fort Scott and St. Joseph. Emigrants and families, who are seeking homes in the rich valleys and the fertile prairies of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, take notice this is the cheapest and the most direct route. This line has facilities for transporting families to the far West not possessed by any other line. Save time and money. HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Cause of Joy.

The following was submitted as supplementary to "Cause of Sorrow," in No. 25.

BY J. L. SWITZER.

"Where two prayerful hearts are united am I;
I've witnessed your anguish I've heard you on high;
Shall hell overcome and banter my might?
Faith and prayer go unheeded, lose their power to night?
No, the pray'rs long ascended have moved me at last;
My arm is uplifted, endurance is past;
I'll smite with my arrow, his heart I will melt,
My Spirit shall crush him, my power be felt."

The chamber is darkened, a form pale and thin
Tells how broken to atoms its spirit has been:
The quivering lips speak of glory and life—
Life eternal for husband, and daughter, and wife.
'Ah! the idols were broke in the temple of Baal'
God's power has triumphed where sin would prevail;
And the Sequel is victory, bloodless and bare,
When the wife and the daughter united in prayer.

An Important Word Just Now.

To Clergymen, and all other persons, in regard to the Importance and Necessity of Christians Taking a Deep Interest in Peace.

Peace is a Bible principle—a moral duty, enjoined on all, universally, but especially required of Christians. It is a virtue, quite incompatible with wars and fightings. A true peace cannot exist with carnal warfare better than a fountain can yield sweet water and bitter at the same time. Some will say they "believe in peace in the abstract." But such a belief has no gospel proof to sustain it. As well might we say it will do to believe in Christ "in the abstract," or do to believe any of God's commands in this way. Is this a Christian way of believing God's truth? To believe it wrong in the abstract to steal, to commit adultery, to worship idols, or to kill our fellow-men, and yet right to commit the same deeds of wickedness on some extreme occasions to suit one's convenience, somewhere outside of the abstract, is the most senseless and criminal absurdity.

All virtues rightly belong to one unbroken chain; and all vices belong to another, tending to opposite ends. It cannot be denied that Peace is one of the most prominent virtues taught in the Bible, when its author is declared to be "The Prince of Peace," and from the very lips of this Prince himself come the commands and precepts touching this point with so much prominence and frequency. In two commands were comprehended love to God and love to our fellow-men. Everything, in which it is ever duty to engage, must harmonize with these. See Matth. 22: 37–40.

As Peace belongs to the chain of virtues, it will accord with love; but carnal warfare will not under any circumstances, for it is an opposite principle, coming from a different quarter, "even of your lusts," (James 4: 1,) producing the greatest destruction of human life and happiness of any crime known. Dr. Dick in his "Philosophy of Religion" page 100, estimates the number who had "been slaughtered in war, since the beginning of the world," to be "fourteen thousand millions," then "equivalent to the destruction of the inhabitants of eighteen worlds of the same population as ours." This estimate must have been made some thirty or forty years ago. How many millions have been butchered since, later histories will show: enough, we think, to prove to all that war is a crime of crimes—the blackest of all vices—enough to palsy the hearts and hands of savages from lending it their approval. It is attended with the greatest destruction of bodies and souls of men, causing more suffering and waste of treasure than any vice in which man ever engaged. It is therefore the duty of all, and especially of Christians, to take no part in it whatever under any circumstances. And what is greater than all considerations is, that it is in direct opposition to the commands and precepts of Christ. "But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil;" Math. 5: 39; "Love your enemies," 44th verse. and many others might be cited.

Did not the example of the just accord with Christ's command? "Ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you."

James 5: 6. Whose commands and examples is it proper to follow, the just or the unjust? It is important that the duty be urged upon professed Christians, especially to retain God's word in its purity, and not to pervert its meaning, or let it pass with neglect, as the many are wont to do, by denying its plain truths both in principle and in practice, as in rejecting the little word not in plain commands. They really do this when they resist or kill their enemies, or encourage others to do it, whether in self-defence or for any other cause. We are always to trust in God, obey his word, and leave consequences with him, are we not? Then let it be actively and faithfully applied. "Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." Eccl. 12: 13.

God has given us no exceptions when we may kill our fellow-men, or resist with deadly weapons. "The weapons of our warefare are not carnal." "He that said, do not commit adultery, said also, do not kill." James 2: 11. If it be wrong to kill our enemies, it must also be wrong to vote for one who might do it, or order the wicked deed to be done. We cannot expect one of defensive war principles to act on peace principles when placed in power, unless his views be changed. Therefore no consistent peace man will deem it safe to vote in political affairs under a war goverment, when the nominee is to be invested with any power to take the lives of his fellow-men, or should claim the right to do it in any case under any deliberate provocation.

Did governments duly appreciate the words of Christ, they would be disarmed of carnal weapons, and in a condition to justify co-operation; but so long as their codes of human butchery are retained, it will be quite inconsistent for Christians to grant them voluntary support, by vote or otherwise giving any approval of their evil deeds of whatever nature. "For he that biddeth ... God speed, is partaker of ... evil deeds," 2 John 11. What deeds are more truly evil than those of war? Nothing has ever competed with such a vile exercise of man's powers, impelled by every war government. Is it not proper for Christians to walk in wisdom's ways? How can war be one, if "all her paths are peace?" Prov. 3: 17. Why should the Christian feel to approve any other path or weapons than those "not carnal, but mighty," alone provided by God himself?

Redeeming Love.

Look beyond, and see with an eye of faith, those infinite numbers who stand before the throne of God. The palms in their hands, their white robes, their songs of praise to God, and all the beauties and excellencies by which they are forever surrounded, are purchased by the precious blood of Christ. Away, far beyond the dreary, clouded days of this vale of tears, those redeemed sons of men are pouring forth their anthems of praise in an eternal summer of love. They shout aloud the praises of their Savior God, the Lamb once slain. Away, far beyond the earth, and sun, and moon, and the starry host, the echo's of their swelling notes of praise and joy reverberate, and fill an everlasting day. The eye of the poor, unknown, humble Christian never tires when looking upon the glorious hosts of the redeemed sons of men. Neither does his ear grow weary of their strains of music. The brightest and clearest views of heaven from earth are often beheld by the poorest slaves, who toil with pains and groans at every step of their lives. But the world neither sees nor knows either the Christian or the glories of heaven. Often the most obscure people in the world, have the purest inspirations of hope and joy. They see and are seen of God and angels. Their life is hid from the world with Christ in God. They will soon pass over. And when, at last, they reach that better land: their eyes shall be cleansed, no more will they "see through a glass darkly," "but face to face." Well could David, the sweet psalmist of Israel, when contemplating, even in his time, the endless, boundless love of God, call upon all nature to praise Him to whom all praise belongs. Well may sinners be ashamed of the ingratitude, the irreverence, and the indifference they have brought before Him in return for his loving-kindness and forgiving love toward them. Well may all be ashamed of themselves, and at His command be eloquent with endless praise to Him. There is efficacy enough in the flowing blood of the Lamb once slain to cleanse from all sin. Though the soul is stained with sin, that blood will purify it, and prepare it for heav-

on. It will unconditionally wash and purify whenever it is applied. It will save the vilest. It will save you and me. But we must drink it by coming closely to Christ, even to the historical facts under which he is represented in the gospel. We must transfigure his life in us, and enlarge it by reason and imagination. Our God, in order to save us, is ready and will live in us, if we will live in him. We must not leave him sleep in the Bible all day, week, year, or years long, but take him out with us wherever we go, so that there may be in us an ever-increasing conception of him—a continual expansion of heavenly excellencies, and thus a real living or growing into God. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us." In the darkest, dreariest hour it causes all hope to return, and in the brightest, loveliest hour it causes all actions done by men or angels to fly away.

No Home.

No home! What a misfortune! How sad a thought! There are thousands who know nothing of the blessed influence of comfortable homes; merely because of a want of thrift, or dissipated habits. Youth spent in frivolous amusements, and demoralizing associations, leaving them at middle age, when the physical intellectual man should be in its greatest vigor, enervated and without one laudable ambition. Friends long since lost, confidence gone, and nothing to look into old age but a mere toleration in the community where they should be ornaments. No home to fly to when wearied with the struggles incident to life; no wife to cheer them in despondency; no virtuous household to give zest to the joys of life. All is blank, and there is no hope or succor except that which is given out by the hands of private or public characters. When the family of the industrious and sober citizen gather around the cheerful fire of a wintry day, the homeless man in seeking a shelter in the cells of a station house, or begging for a night's rest in the out buildings of one who started in life at the same time, with no greater advantages; honesty and industry built up that home, while dissipation destroyed the other.

In all thy ways acknowledge the Lord.

A Good Rule.

BY ALICE CARY.

A farmer, who owned a fine orchard, one day,
Went out with his two sons to take a survey,
The time of the year being April or May.

The buds were beginning to break into bloom,
The air all about him was rich with with perfume,
And nothing, at first waked a feeling of gloom.

But all at once, going from this place to that,
He shaded his eyes with the brim of his hat,
Saying, "Here is a tree dying out, that is flat!"

He called his sons, Joseph and John, and said he,
"This sweeting, you know, was my favorite tree—
Just look at the top, now, and see what you see!

"The blossoms are blighted, and sure as you live,
It won't have a bushel of apples to give!
What ails it? the rest of the trees seem to thrive

"Run, boys, bring hither your tools, and don't stop,
But take every branch that is falling alop,
And saw it out quickly from bottom to top!"

"Yes father," they said, and away they both ran—
For they always said father and never old man,
And for my part I don't see how good children can.

And before a half-hour of the morning was gone,
They were back in the orchard, both Joseph and John,
And presently all the dead branches were sawn.

"Well, boys," said the farmer, "I think for my share,
If the rain and the sunshine but second our care,
The old sweeting yet will be driven to bear!"

And so when a month, may be more, had gone by,
And borne out the June, and brought in the July,
He came back, the luck of the pruning to try.

And lo, when the sweeting was reached it was found
That wind-falls enough were strewn over the ground,
But never an apple all blushing and sound.

Then the farmer said, shaping his motions to suit,
First up to the boughs, and then down to the fruit,
"Come Johnny, come Joseph, and dig to the root!"

And straightway they came with their spade and their hoes,
And threw off their jackets, and shouting, "Here goes!"
They digged down, and down, with the sturdiest blows.

And by-and-by, Joseph his grubbing hoe drew
From the earth and the roots, crying, "Father, look, do!"
And he pointed his words with the toe of his shoe!

And the farmer said, shaping a gesture to suit,
"I see why our sweeting brought us no fruit—
There's a worm sucking out all the sap, at the root!"

Then John took a spade with an awful grimace,
And lifted the ugly thing out of its place,
And put the earth back in very short space.

And when the next year came it only is fair
To say that the sweetings rewarded the care,
And bore them good apples, enough and to spare.

And now, my dear children, whenever you see
A life that is profitless, think of that tree;
For out of ten chances to one there will be

Some habit of evil indulged day by day,
And hid as the earth-worm was hid in the clay,
That is steadily sapping the life-blood away.

The fruit, when the blossom is blighted, will fall—
The sin will be searched out, no matter how small.
So, what you're ashamed to do, don't do at all!

For the COMPANION.

This World is not our Home—To the Young.

Oh! when shall we be separated from this world of sorrow? This world is not our home. We do not wish to stay here in this world always; for no lasting pleasure, peace, or comfort can be obtained from it. Those pleasures that it affords endure only for a season, and soon fade away. Yes, those sinful pleasures which the wicked enjoy to-day they may not enjoy to-morrow, and, perhaps, enjoy them no more forever; for we do not know what to-morrow may bring forth. It may bring forth death, and then the pleasures that earth can afford have disappeared and fled from us. We cannot take them with us into eternity. We will have to leave them behind. Then it would be well for us to turn our backs to the world now, and set our faces Zionward, and "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith," believing "that he is, and that he was a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

But some will say I cannot leave the pleasures of this world; for my youthful friends and companions will not love me anymore, and they will point the finger of scorn at me and say, "Why is it that one so young should forsake the pleasures which youths so well enjoy?" O listen not to such delusive insinuations. I am young myself; but I find it very pleasant to serve the Lord, and to devote some of my time in trying to do good. Jesus loves the young as well as the old. This world is not our home. Heaven is the Christian's home. How sweet the words, "A home in heaven!" My dear young friends, do you really think if you would obey the scriptures it would make you miserable? and if you were a Christian you would never see any more pleasure? Let me tell you what I know by experience. The pleasures that you now enjoy are fading. The sweetest pleasures are enjoyed by those who obey God. What if our associates do laugh and point the finger of scorn at us? How much more did our blessed Savior endure for our souls! And what does he say? "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

O my dear young friends, why is it so hard for us to give up this world with its sinful pleasures, since we cannot stay here long? When we die our souls will wing their way to the bar of God; and if we are not prepared we will sink down into everlasting misery and woe. Then dear brethren and sisters, let us one and all try to be more faithful. If all the world would serve the Lord, what a happy world we should then have! Then wickedness would cease, and evil would be practiced no more. If only all that I love would take this step, then would my heart leap with joy, to think that we would all get home to heaven together. Let us from this day forth strive to serve God more and more, is my prayer.

Wisdom.

God, who is worthy to receive all honor in heaven and upon earth, has, after that which he had created after the similitude of his own image had fallen into the sea of carnal-mindedness through a spiritual death, given man endowments to replenish the earth: for, said he, "Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee." Had God not given man this power of mind or reasoning, through which may be obtained worldly wisdom, the earth would remain unfruitful and man would have no preeminence above a beast.

After the creature (man) was made subject to vanity, he could not have possession of the power which God gave him, to have dominion over the works of his hands, (we are the works of his hands). In man comes first the animal, then instinct, then intellect. By a proper cultivation of the latter, the former may, by the natural man, to some extent be brought under subjection, if the development of the mind is not too much neglected. It should be embraced in education which can promote the formation of man, and prepare him for the eternal destiny of his spirit. But this is man's wisdom, and far from being "the wisdom from above" unto which the inspired apostle, Paul, who had gained this world's wisdom to a great extent, did also bear testimony; for after the true light had appeared unto him, he testified that, "the things which were gain unto him, he counted loss, that he might have the excellency of the knowledge of Christ." Phil, 3: 7, 8.

May it then in truth be said that it is a gift of God? And must it be brought to naught, before man can be truly regenerated and become related with his Creator? Yes; because "after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom, (worldly wisdom) knew not God," it pleased God to choose the things that seem foolish to the carnal mind, "to confound the wise." And is it not true as the scripture saith? "For ye see your calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, but the things that are despised has God chosen;" Yea, the things that are greatly marred by the carnal mind, to bring to naught things that have an appearance. And thus could he who is of God make the wisdom from above. Even Christ will say, 'Behold! a greater than Solomon is here." For Christ, being the wisdom from above, did far differ from Solomon, who was great in the wisdom of the world.

Pride.

"Be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble," 1st Peter 5: 5.

Among those sins against which all believers must daily watch and pray, are pride, haughtiness of heart, which break out in words and works. We are naturally proud, as one of the results of the fall; but we must become humble through grace. No person can become Christ's disciple, or be pleasing to God, who does not become humble. Hence all true believers should earnestly pray for humility of heart towards their God, for "he hath showed thee, O man! what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humble with thy God?" Micah., 6: 8. We will become humble toward God by meditating the grandeur, majesty and glory of God; and reflecting that we ourselves are but worms of the dust, nothing but poor wretched man, whom God can destroy in an instant. But the Christian acts humbly towards his fellow-men; he remembers that his neighbor is probably much holier and better in the sight of God, and that in the grave he will fall to ashes like the meanest beggar He is consequently humble in his own estimation: He remembers that all his gifts, talents, graces, life and prosperity are not from himself, but God alone, who may soon take it all away from him. Therefore he should not boast of it. To guard against all pride, he must frequently call to mind the example of Jesus, who lowered himself before God, and all his creatures, and cries to us, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Written in love, by your unworthy brother.

Feet-washing.

To prove that feet-washing, as the Lord has given the example, is a Church Ordinance is not my object in view, neither the mode how to perform it, but I feel like saying a few words to the brethren and sisters, on the importance of it. I do not know why it is, but I find it to be so, that, in nine cases out of ten, at our love-feasts our ministering brethren always are trying to prove to the world that it is a command, while numbers of members may sit around the tables, submit to it, but never know why it is done. Perhaps the only reason they have is this, "The Church practices feet-washing, therefore I must also submit to it," and never know the grand reason why we practice it. Why is it that they have no better reason for it? Just because so little is said about this point, that those who do not make the word of God their study will only condemn others for something they themselves never realize any happiness in by observing it.

We wish it distinctly understood, that we, as a Church, practice feet-washing for this grand reason, the Lord, our Savior, who had power to say on what conditions we should be saved, has commanded it. His disciples and followers were always, and are yet, willing to obey all he has commanded. The Savior says, "Ye are clean, but not all." Those that are his true followers in feet-washing will be cleansed from their sins; if there is a Judas in the Church, neither in feet-washing nor in any other washing will he be cleansed, just because the devil has possession of him. But the penitent believer will not only be cleansed but also will feel happy when he obeys the Lord.

You may talk of rejoicing when you have repented of your sins. The jailor and his house only rejoiced after they had obeyed the word of God as preached by Paul and Silas. The Ethiopian eunuch only went his way rejoicing after he had obeyed God according to the preaching of Philip the evangelist. Others may rejoice when they are in error The christian rejoices only when he obeys God according to his word.

Who of you, brethren, who have obeyed the Master where he says, "Wash one another's feet," has not felt happy? Others may say, nothing is in the dead letter. Of course not, but the living letter contains a great deal, even eternal salvation. "My Father has given me a command what I shall do and speak; and I know his command is eternal life." Has he not commanded feet-washing? Has he not given us the example? who then will be so shameless as to say it is not contained in God's will. Well, if others think they can be saved without obeying the will of God, all right; we claim, after we have done all that God commands, salvation is a free gift. Brethren let us show to the world, when practicing feet-washing, that we do not observe it as a fashion, but that we thereby show obedience to him who has commanded. How important to be a christian. May God help to consider.

Night.

Darkness is on the earth, and even the fathomless waters are covered with gloom. The sailor boy is dreaming of home; and the helmsman is slumbering at his post. Night has wrapped her dark mantle o'er the face of nature, and beautiful flowers stir not at the passing wind. God is keeping midnight vigil over the land and the sea, and his guardian angel hovers o'er the ship, as it courses the mighty deep. To-morrow, the darkness of night will recede before the rising orb, and at the dawn of day thousands will behold the rising sun, and thousands will have gone to their sepulchral rest. Night, beautiful night, in thy solemnity and stillness thou comest kindly upon a tired multitude, and drawest around the tranquil couch the drapery of repose! Meet time for folding of the hands in slumber; meet time for communing with the spirits of a better world; meet time for contemplation. Night is the time for thought, aye, for recounting the events of the past and recording on the tablet of memory the duties of the morrow! Another night may not be ours. Another morn, and our eyes may not open on the glaring light of day. When we lie down, let His praise be in our hearts; for if we should awake our sins may not be forgiven. Night is the time for prayer. Thank Him that he has given us a season of repose, with its darkness and its quiet, that we may the better sink into forgetfulness: not a forgetfulness of the manifold duties which we owe to our Creator, nor the unconcernedness of the varied obligations of life, but we must cease to remember all the injuries we have sustained through malice, and through envy, and we should bury in oblivion all feelings of hatred, of anger and revenge. As we would that our Judge should forgive us our trespasses, even so let us forgive those that trespass against us. The eye that is never closed is his; the sentinel that guards the tower is God. The light of the universe may be eclipsed, and there may be, as in days of old, darkness upon the face of the earth, still he seeth all around and watcheth over every little insect. Night is the time to watch.

Secret Prayer.

Secret prayer is the golden chain that binds the soul to Christ; and on it swift messages are sent to and fro. When the heart is burdened with sorrow and temptation, it repairs to the secret chamber, and there, at the feet of Jesus, casts the heavy burden; and soon it is borne away on the wings of faith, and joy and peace return to fill the soul. The wisdom, knowledge and glory received through such a holy communion are worth more than all the world beside. Although many times the anxious heart is waiting for an answer to prayer, when it is sent in a dark cloud, apparently contrary to what was asked; but in God's own time and way it is unfolded, and is more bright and glorious than was expected. Thus blessings are often sent that they may prove more beneficial.

But the golden chain can only be kept bright and free from obstacles by constant use. Since every pure thought and noble desire comes from God, every thought should be a prayer in connection with every duty. If this was the rule of every brother and sister, how many more would be saved by the influence of the light and example which would continually shine forth.

As time is shortened, each hour the vessel of life is drawn nearer and nearer to God, till it reaches the shore where it will glide quietly into the haven of rest, and before the throne the anchor will be cast forever.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us pray for each other, that we may hold out faithful to the end. Let us be very careful that we do not as Judas did to his Lord and Master, when he betrayed him with a kiss.

"I am waiting for the dawning
Of the bright and blessed day,
When the darksome night of sorrow
Shall have vanished far away.

I am waiting for the coming
Of the Lord who died for me
Oh! his words have filled my spirit
'I will come again for thee.'"

THE WATERY WAR:

OR,

A POETICAL DESCRIPTION OF THE EXISTING CONTROVERSY BETWEEN PEDOBAPTISTS AND BAPTISTS, ON THE SUBJECTS AND MODE OF BAPTISM.

BY JOHN OF ÆNON.

And so they wrap it up.—Micah.

So Christendom is doomed to feel
The fiery strife of flint and steel,
And parties still will be disputing,
Opposing each, and each confuting,
With verbal warfare and contention,
In growing times, or in declension.

A watery strife of old begun,
Is now more fiercely coming on,
And parties with much haste prepare
To fight the elemental war.

This seems the ground of this dispute.
As near as one can well compute:—

Has Christ enacted all the laws,
Intended for his holy cause;
Or must we search the Jewish code,
To guide us in the Christian road?

Must gospel churches now be made
Of parents and their infant seed;
Or are professing saints alone,
The only subjects Christ will own?

Is't Apostolic or perversion,
That Pouring, Sprinkling, and Immersion,
Are all the same baptismal rite
In substance one, and either right?
Or is immersion only good,
Exclusively the Scripture mode?

The other note to pitch the tune on,
Is "anti-Christian" close communion.

These propositions thus related,
Our subject being briefly stated,
We ask, like preachers, small digression,
Before we come to full discussion.

Sweet charity so much abounds,
And utters forth such pleasing sounds,
Our friends will hold us right, if we,
Will to their banner quickly flee,
And own a rite of man's invention,
To be Divine, and quit dissension;
And to their shattered, stale tradition,
Resign our creed, with full submission.
But should our feet refuse to move.
It seems as though their blazing love
Would quite consume us with its flame,
And load us all with guilt and shame.
We value friendship, but could wish
To have it in a smaller dish;
And they'd increase our obligation,
To deal it out with moderation;
For while we yet have life and breath,
We beg not to be lov'd to death.

How troublesome this Baptist band
Have always been in every land;
How much they have disturbed the peace,
Of those who wish to live at ease.
'Tis but unlike, that sleepless beds
Have oft supported aching heads,
In fear of this unruly clan,
Who fear their Maker more than man.
Who take the Bible for the guide,
And follow that whate'er betide,
Who have the badness to reject
What others treat with much respect;
Who hold that sinners must believe,
Before the Lord will them receive;
Who wish to let all strife alone,
And Jesus Christ their Savior own.

O wicked Baptists don't you know
What ills you cause where'er you go,
How parsons fear you'll break the peace
Of each enlightened diocese;
And with the Bible rend the blinders,
Which now the light so nicely hinders.

How many ways have been invented,
To make you settle down contented,
To make you quit that watery way
In which you always loved to stray:
Yes, priests and princes, fire and slaughter,
Have tried to cure your love of water.

Sometimes you hear the learned assertion,
There are no places for immersion,
Your friends have taken it for granted,
Your geographic skill was wanted;
And kindly for your information,
Have told, to stop your innovation,
That Jordan has a little stream,
To talk of dipping's all a whim;
At Ænon too, and all around,
No dipping places could be found.
What though there was much water there,
'Twas in small brooks, you often hear; (*)
Ye Baptists, dare not controvert
What learned men so oft assert.
This country though exceeding dry,
Yet brooks and fountains could supply
Full large enough, 'tis thought for John,
To sprinkle people one by one;
And had he used them sparing too,
As moderns are inclined to do,
These many brooks we make no doubt,
For sprinkling might have long held out.

But lest this dry and brookish proof
Should not be found quite strong enough,
They not unfrequently rehearse,
Suppose the Ancients did immerse;

(*) Since sprinkling came into fashion, criticism, unheard of in all former ages, hath endeavored to derive evidence for a scarcity of water, from the Greek text of the evangelist John, and to render polla udata, not much water, but many waters, and then by an ingenious supposition, to infer that many waters signifies, not many waters collected into one, but parted into many little rills, which might all serve for sprinkling, but not any of them be used for dipping; as if one man could possibly want many brooks for the purpose of sprinkling one person at a time. It is observable, that the Euphrates at Babylon, the Tiber at Rome, and Jordan at Palestine, are all described by polla udata.—Robinson. So that the Euphrates, the Tiber, the Jordan, according to Pedobaptist criticism, may be nothing, more than little brooks, springs, and rivulets.

Yet as we live in colder clime,
To change the mode, can be no crime;
For mercy, you must all have heard,
To sacrifice must be preferred.
Besides, we now are more polite
Than those that walked in gospel light;
With dipping then they might dispense,
But now it causes great offense.
But look again ye ign'rant band,
Behold the great in every land,
Great men, great doctors, fam'd for learning,
Great Bishops, too of shrewd discerning,
Who have retained the infant rite,
And held that sprinkling might be right.
If we are wrong, can any doubt
Such men would not have found it out? (†)
Immersion, too, we're often told,
Expose folks to taking cold,
And many ills our friends resound
Which we as yet have never found.

But now away with old objections,
Which fills the Pedobaptist sections,
These dreadful bug-bears, all have found,
Are nothing more than frightful sound.

Not all their logic, scoffs and flings,
Their witty, or their bitter things,
Can stop the progress of the band,
Though water was as scarce of old,
As many have so gravely told;
Yet now it richly doth abound,
Now dipping places may be found,
And thousands to the floods repair,
To own their Lord and Savior there.
Not all the learning toil and pain,
Of those who treat us with disdain,
Who take the Bible in their hand,
Who feel resolved no more to trample
Beneath their feet the Lord's example,
And finding all their efforts fail,
The rigid Baptists still prevail,
Our friends of late, use all their art in Maintaining nothing can be certain
About this strange baptismal rite;
Ergo, we all may still be right.

Thus, having tried all ways to still us,
With terror and with shame to fill us,
To prove their own foundation strong,
And that we sure are going wrong;
But finding all their former schemes
Evaporate like empty dreams,
Our later writers seem inclin'd
Unless we much mistake their mind,
To quibble, cavil and evade;
To give their old tradition aid;
To show that no specific mode
Is mention'd in the holy code;
One drop, a fountain, or a flood,
To pour, and sprinkle, are all good,
Your mode may differ much from mine,
But yours I own may be divine;
And charity requires of you
To make the same concession too.

Since all the Pedobaptists say
Of our immodest, frantic way,
Of shallow Jordan, rills and springs,
Of great men too, and other things,
Cannot suffice to stop believers
From going into ponds and rivers,
At last a wide catholicism
Has been devised to heal the schism.

So when the doubtful sons of Galen,
Perceive their healing art is failing,
And all their Patents being spent,
A new catholicon invent.

If John, as many lately say,
Though Luke may lean another way, (‡)
Existed in the Jewish state,
Our friends would please us to relate,
What section in the Jewish book,
Requir'd the work he undertook.

But leaving things of other moment,
To those whose business 'tis to comment,
We can but feel a wish to know
Why John should keep the water so.
If sprinkling might have been the mode, (‖)
Why should he take so long a road?
Or, if he design'd to pour,
Why then to Enon take a tour?
The answer comes as quick as wink,
The man was looking out for drink.
And kindly seeking watering places
"For horses, camels, mules and asses."
The reason seems as clear as day,
As Pedobaptists wisely say,
Why John chose out a watery station,
To do the work he was engaged in.
'Tis plain that multitudes came out
From all the region round about;
'Tis likely too, we lately hear,
Th' encampment lasted more'n a year. (§)
And who but Baptists once could think
That man and beast would want no drink?

This question answered with such ease,
We'll state another if you please.
Admitting John a public cater,
Providing man and beast with water.
And that his mind was more intent
On drink, than on the sacrament,
And having now obtained his end.
And near by Jordan made a stand,
We humbly ask, if 'tis no sin,
Why he should need to enter in?
To this full many have replied,
And here's the answer, cut and dried:
That since the concourse was so poor,
There was not found in all their store,
A basin, pitcher, or a cup,
With which to lade the water up.
'Tis likely John, as others do,
Proceeded down a step or two
In Jordan's stream, to take a stand,
To do what might be done on land.
But ere we give the subject o'er,
We beg to ask one question more.

Since John was so intent on thinking,
To find conveniences for drinking,
'Tis wondrous strange he had not thought
To bring, or see some one had brought,
Some vessel Jordan's wave to lade in,
Which might have sav'd him tedious wading.
You'd think, to help the water-fetchers,
He'd brought a load of pails and pitchers.

Though old divines could tame the Greek,
And learned what it design'd to speak
Yet moderns find it strangely wild,
They chase it hard through flood and field,
And strive with industry and pain
To overtake it, but in vain.

(†) That the multitude should reason in this way, is not surprising; but that men of acknowledged abilities should think of establishing a professedly Scripture doctrine by such arguments as these, is enough "to amuse one." On what does Mr. Worcester's "fair and invincible conclusion rest, that sprinkling or effusion is Scriptural and valid," but that great men, and a great many of them, for many centuries have practiced it! Vide Worcester's Two Discourses, etc., p. 66.

(‡) "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every man presseth into it." (Luke xvi. 16.) Mark speaks the same language, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God: as it is written in the prophets, Behold I send my messenger before my face," etc. (Mark i. 1-4.

(‖) "It seems therefore to me that the people stood in ranks, near to or just within the edge of the river; and John, passing along before them, cast water upon their heads or faces with his hands or some proper instrument, by which means he might very easily baptize many thousands in a day."—Gwyse's Paraphrase, vol. 1. p. 13.

"The Jews in Jordan were baptiz'd,
Ergo ingenious John devis'd
A scoop, or squirt, or some such thing,
With which some water he might fling
Upon the long extended rank
Of candidates that lin'd the bank;
Be careful John, some drops may fall
From your rare instrument on all,
But point your engine, ne'erth less,
To those who first their sins confess;
Let no revilers in the crowd
The holy sprinkling be allow'd."
Salopian Zealot, p. 15.

The Child's Mission.

You've a mission, little one,
Though your life is just begun;
For there's work for all to do
In the world we're passing through.

Many a child has weary grown,
Struggling on through life alone;
Give to such a helping hand,
Guide them to the better land.

Many a one has gone astray
In the dark and sinful way;
Lead the erring, lest they fall,
And show mercy unto all.

Many a heart is crushed with grief;
Gentle words will bring relief;
Wipe away the falling tear,
Prove a loving friend is near.

You may be like angels here,
Making sorrow disappear;
Winning crowns that shall be given
To the faithful ones in heaven.

From the cradle to the grave,
Every precious moment save;
Fill your life with deeds of love—
Treasure bright for you above.

Fragments of Faith.

Some would have the sun set by their watch, and not the watch by the sun; some measure the truth of all doctrines by their own experience, and acknowledge them as true, if their experience attests them.

We seldom trust in God till a desolation comes upon the means. A widow that is desolate trusteth in God. So long as one who is learning to swim can touch the bottom with his foot, he does not trust himself to the stream; and so long as a man can stand on the seconed cause, he does not commit himself to the stream of mercy. Thus the apostle says, "We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead."

If you would believe you must crucify that question, "Why?" God would not have us so full of "wherefores."

Faith, having seated itself upon the high tower and mountain of God's omnipotence and all-sufficiency, hath a great prospect: it can look over all the world and look into another world too. But reason gets upon some little mole-hill of creature ability, and, if it can see over two or three hedges, it is well. Therefore, what pain is it to faith to be tied to reason? Faith can foot it over mountains of difficulties, and wade through wide rivers of affliction; but when reason comes to any affliction that must be waded through, or to any difficulties that must be got over, it cries out, "O faith, good faith! go back again." "No," says faith, "but I will take thee upon my back, reason." But oh! what a luggage is reason to faith!

There is meaning in the word, when we are called to commit ourselves to God "as into the hand of a faithful Creator." When you are called to the exercise of faith, you are not to look on God as a potter that works out of clay or other materials, and then look all around to see if there is a supply at hand; you are to look on him as a Creator that works out of nothing, and as a faithful Creator who will be sure to do it.

It is with our affliction as with sea-water, it is salt and bitter; but drawn up by the sun into the clouds, it becomes sweet, and falls down in refreshing rain. So take affliction in itself, and it is grievous; but drawn up by the divine love, it becomes joyous, and yields the peaceable fruits of righteousness. If a soul tastes the love of God in affliction, and sees what a loving end the Lord will make, he will find it very sweet, and will say, "I do not see how one twig of this rod could have been spared."

If you want assurance you must turn your eye and your thoughts from these objections that invade your faith. It is said of Abraham that he considered not the weakness of his own body; it was imputed to him for believing that he considered not that which might invade his faith. And so this will be imputed to you for faith, if, when those objections arise, you turn your eye from them unto Jesus Christ.

Suppose you see a company of children playing together for a while, and soon you see them fighting; then you see a man come and carry away one of those children and begin to chastise him; but he leaves the other children alone. Which of these children will you say the man is father of? I leave you to apply it.—Church Advocate.

Only a Grain of Sand.

A man who had for years carried an old and cherished watch about him, one day called on its maker, and told him it was no longer useful, for it would not keep time correctly.

"Let me examine it," said the maker; and taking a powerful glass, he looked carefully and steadily into the works, till he spied just one little grain of sand.

"I have it," he said. "I can get over your difficulty."

About this moment, by some powerful but unseen power, the little grain suspecting what was coming, cried out, "Let me alone! I am but a small thing, and take up so little room. I cannot possibly injure the watch. Twenty or thirty of us might do harm, but I cannot, so let me alone."

The watchmaker replied, "You must come out, for you spoil my work, and all the more so, that you are so small, and but a few people can see you."

Thus it is with us, whether children or elders—one lie, one feeling of pride, vanity, or disobedience, may be such a little one that none but ourselves know of it; yet God, who sees all things, knows it, and that one sin however little it may appear, will spoil all our best efforts in his service.

Dress Plainly Girls.

An old man who knows what he is talking about, says: "Girls, let me tell you a stubborn truth. No young woman ever looked so well to sensible men, as when dressed in a plain, neat, modest attire, without a single ornament about her person. She looks then as though she possessed worth in herself, and needed no artificial rigging to enchance her value. If a young woman would spend as much time in cultivating kindness, meekness, mercy, and other good qualities as most of them do in extra dress and ornament, to increase their personal charms, she would, at a glance, be known among a thousand, —her character would be read in her countenance, and there her beauty will be found."

A Man who was Determined to do Right.

Some time ago we received a request from a man to know what he owed us, stating that he had long desired to pay us, but had been unfortunate; that he had now resolved to join the church, and wished to know and pay his indebtedness. But we could find nothing against him in our books. He however persisted that he did owe us, and gave such explanations as enabled us to find his name on our subscription books, and sure enough, one dollar was unpaid. This he promptly sent, and now is a brother in the church. O, for such consciences in all our patrons. Would we not have a rush of old delinquents, of one to seven years standing! In looking over our old subscription books, when we sent to everybody on his own account, without farther entry, we find a number of names who are still in arrears. Perhaps this will never reach their eye, but our pocket would feel it if something would touch their conscience, and make them resolve to do right. The brother referred to is proverbial in this office as the man who was determined to do right.

Editor's Diary.

SATURDAY, Aug. 3rd. In the afternoon we attended a counsel meeting at our meeting-house in town. A fair representation of the congregation was present, and different matters were disposed of as the church thought best, if individuals could not just see it in that light at the time. Elders Henry Myers, of Dutchtown, Ills., Jacob Blough, of Berlin, Pa., and Tobias Myers, of Middle Creek, Pa., were with us. Preaching in the evening, so we had a good opportunity of seeing the greater number of our brethren and sisters immediately upon our return.

SUNDAY, 4th. Not being convenient, nor officially necessary, to attend preaching, we did, what we considered the next best work, visited brother Joseph B. Sell's, who moved to this place from Altoona, last Spring, and we had not yet been in his house. Found them in good health and cheerful spirits. Brother Joseph is a minister, is a poor man with a large family, and is doing his best to make an honest living, and we believe he will succeed.

Attended Sunday-school in the afternoon. This was the first time we had been in our school for nearly three months, and we were pleased to see that the interest was unabated. During our absence two German classes were organized, one spelling, and one reading. We joined the latter.

In the evening was our regular appointment for preaching. We had expected one of our elders to be with us, but they failing, it fell our lot to serve. We very much enjoy the privilege of attending meeting every Lord's day evening, but the duty of preaching we would sometimes prefer to avoid. But somebody must do it. Wonder why it is that those who want to preach are not permitted to do it. We sometimes hear it said that such and such brethren would like to preach, and that they are dissatisfied when an election is held and the choice does not fall on them. They think they are specially called to preach. Then again we have known some who were regularly elected, and still would not, and could not preach. Can any one explain the cause of this trouble? It is our opinion that it does happen, and that perhaps not unfrequently, that the voice of the church is not the voice of God. The Brethren are endeavoring to avoid such occurrences; though we fear not always by the best means. For instance it used to be the order among the old brethren, to consult the congregation whether they would hold an election or not. If it was agreed to, then at an appointed time, sometimes a month after, the choice was held. This plan is thought objectionable, as it affords too much time for electioneering; and to avoid which some have run into the other extreme, and hold the election in the same afternoon, and sometimes begin in the same hour, in which it was agreed to hold an election. We think this is a mistake. We believe the members should at least have time enough to retire to their closets, and invoke the guidance of the Spirit of God, that his will may be done. This they should be heartily admonished to do. And the congregation which cannot be trusted with a night's, or a week's time for prayer, upon so important an occasion, is not in order to hold an election at all. We do think that our elections are often too lightly entered upon, and too loosely conducted. The members are not instructed as to their duty. Almost every congregation is annually receiving some members that are not acquainted with our church polity, or customs. These necessarily inquire of their associates, which at once gives opportunity for prompting. Would to God that a reform could be brought about that would bring the right men to the right places.

MONDAY, 5th. Wrote out our last weeks' report, and attended to a number of visitors, among whom were brother Tobias Meyers, and Daniel G. Lint, of Somerset.

TUESDAY, 6th. Wrote a number of letters to correspondents put off until our return. In the evening sister Sallie Buechly, wife, and I, visited Wm. Horner's. Brother William is sick. His affliction began with erysipelas, then turned to dysentery, and he was fearful the next stage might be typhoid fever. He is confined to his bed, but has still strength enough to sit up. He is resigned to the will of God, but has a desire to be restored to health, for which he has our sincere prayers.

WEDNESDAY, 7th. Observed in our obituary columns, of No. 32, that sister Diehl, wife of brother John Diehl, of Ogle county, Ills., had departed this life. Well do we remember her emaciated form, but submissive countenance, when we bade her farewell, at her own house in May last. What a lifetime of suffering she must have endured, and what a relief to be freed from the body of affliction. The family has our warmest sympathies in their bereavement.

SATURDAY, 10th. This morning we have the sad intelligence of the death of our dear brother WILLIAM HORNER. He died early in the morning. See particulars in the obituary department. Oh! how uncertain is man's life. Only a few days ago we were at his house, by his bedside, and although he was sick, neither he nor we had fears that he would so soon be summoned away. In the death of brother Horner the Church has lost a useful and beloved member, and this office a warm friend and supporter. Peace be to his ashes.

Dr. P. Fahrney and his family, of Chicago, arrived by the noon train. For want of association, sister Fahrney did not enjoy living in Chicago, and if our mountain city can offer anything more attractive, we have good hopes of having them become citizens of the place. And still there is room for as many more good people as may be pleased to come among us. In the meantime Dr. P. Fahrney's Medicine Business will be conducted at Chicago as heretofore, without interruption.

SUNDAY, 11th. We were confined to the house nearly all day and evening on account of headache. There was preaching at ten o'clock, the funeral of brother Horner at three, and preaching again in the evening, all at our meeting-house; but we could not attend. We had especially a desire to attend the funerak

MONDAY, 12th. We are still too unwell to be of much service in the office, but are more hopeful. Our usually quiet town was treated with the sound of a brass band. At first we thought it was some patent medicine vender; but were told it was gotten up to lead off an expedition to Mechanicsburg, to dedicate the Mineral Springs. We suppose the band was intended to awaken and excite the farmers along the road. Perhaps somebody will be called to take stock in the Mineral Spings Company, or something of that kind. Perhaps it will pay to do so. We should be pleased to learn that there is something real in the enterprize at Mechanicsburg. Who knows about it?

TUESDAY, 13th. Feel much better in the morning. Are able for duty, and endeavoring to discharge it.

Missionary.

Our readers will remember "A Proposition," by M. J. Thomas, published in No. 27. The object of that proposition is to raise a missionary fund. We were somewhat slow in acting upon it; but as a number of names were sent in, we have been obliged to open a list, and are now prepared to receive and enter all the names that may be sent us. The following is the plan with a little amendment:—

Let all who are willing to pay one dollar into the fund, send in their names, signifying that fact, and their names will be entered on the list.

If any are willing to pay two, five, ten, or more dollars, they can specify the amount, and it will be placed opposite their names.

When one thousand names are entered, it is to be announced through the COMPANION, and then those who are on the list shall send the amount they agreed to pay to the editor of the COMPANION, or to some person named by him.

When five hundred additional names are placed on the list, the fact is again to be announced, and the money to be sent in, and so on.

The fund thus raised is to be deposited in bank until next A. M., when it may be drawn and appropriated as wisdom shall dictate. Who will give us the best, most efficient plan?

Now, brethren and sisters, here is an opportunity for you to appropriate some of your means to the dissemination of the pure gospel. Many of you have, for a long time, felt desirous to do more in that direction than has heretofore been done. Now the way is open, and it is to be hoped that your professed zeal will manifest itsself by active co-operation in this work.

It would be well for some brother or sister in each congregation to solicit names and send them in; but no one should send the name of any that he is not willing to vouch for.

We will occasionally report the number of names on the list, so that those interested may know what progress is being made. We now report names. J. W. B.

Brethren's Almanac.

Brethren and sisters, what shall we put in our Almanac for 1873? Shall we go to the trouble of ciphering out beforehand what kind of weather we are going to have next year, or will you wait and see, and save us that trouble, and enable us to devote that space to more certain prophesying?

And those Catholic holydays, do you want them all inserted, or will you be satisfied to spare us that useless work. Would it be any more idolatrous to insert the birth days of the great men of our own church, than that of the church of Rome? Speak for yourselves. Of course, New Year, Easter, Pentecost, Fourth of July, and Christmas, must be marked. And then those signs of the Zodiac, are they really necessary in a Christian Calendar? Have really the distant, and visionary planets, so much influence upon us that it is necessary for us to know all their imagined movements aforetime? Of course we want to make an almanac that will sell, but we would love to leave it as free from superstition as possible. How much can we bear brethren? What effect had Braefogle's "Pow Wow" article, in this year's almanac, on our minds?

Then again: What kind of reading matter shall we have? Who has an anecdote of some old pioneer in the brotherhood? Or a remarkable circumstance? Something very new, or very old, or very good?

And do not forget the list of ministers. It wants to be revised. We wish all our readers to consider themselves a committee of revision. Send us the names and addresses of all who are not now found on the list. Do please attend to this matter brethren. We desire to have the list as complete as possible. We have already sixty names not before on the list, and we believe there are many more that should be on. Then there have been removals, deaths, silences, &c. These we wish to correct. Let us know them, brethren.

The place and time of having District Meetings, for 1873, with all necessary particulars, is also considered proper information for its pages.

A brief biographical sketch of ministers who departed this life during the present year, or previous years, would be acceptable.

And for all of the above we are now ready and waiting. Please keep almanac matter and other matter on separate papers.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book.

This work so long looked for is now nearly ready for delivery. It will contain all the hymns in the Brethren's Hymn Book, numbered in the same manner, with a tune, in character notes, on the same opening with the hymn. The book will only be about twice as large as the Hymn Book, and will cost, in sheep binding, by the single copy, post paid, $1.25. By the dozen, by express, $10. We are now ready to receive orders, and as soon as the books are delivered from the bindery, they will be shipped in rotation as they stand in our order book. The prices above given are for cash accompanying the order. Do not forget that we need the money.

Change of Form.

We have for some time been considering the propriety of changing the form of our paper from the octavo to the folio form. That is, to put the COMPANION out in the common newspaper form, so that by one opening, you will have the whole side of the paper before you for reading. And now we wish to lay the matter before or readers for their consideration, and unless there will be too much objection to the movement, the change will go into effect with the beginning of next volume.

The reason for the change is:

First. Convenience in making up. It is sometimes quite troublesome to arrange the matter in our paper, in departments, as we would desire to do, and occasionally, it becomes impossible to do so, and matter is crowded out entirely, and others must be set up, thus delaying the paper and confusing the office.

Second. Covenience to the readers. Many of our readers find its present form inconvenient. To be read conveniently they should be stitched and the leaves cut open at the top and sides. This requires more trouble than most readers are willing to go to. Consequently they are either unfolded, or cut open with a finger, or a pencil, and often badly torn. The folio form will be convenient to all.

Third. The folio form will be more convenient for enlarging whenever we feel able to do so, as we can add a few inches to the bottom or a column to the sides.

Another argument in favor of the change is, that in that form we will give as much more reading, as would fill at least two pages of the present form, besides giving us more room for advertisements.

The only objection we have, or that one can positively have, to the change of form, will be the inconvenience of binding. And we agree this is an important consideration, and the only one that has hitherto detained us from proposing the change. But we think we have fairly met this objection. Our paper is being published more especially for the benefit of its patrons, and its present readers (and in many cases it will have no other). It should therefore be issued in such a form as is most convenient to them. If there are those who wish to preserve the papers for future generations, it may still be done, with a little extra expense, though not with as much convenience to the reader.

Now, brethren and sisters, and friends, let us hear from you, pro or con; and especially pro. Where there is no special objection, silence will be taken for consent. But where there is much preference we would be pleased to have it made known, and that at once. We do not propose to defer the decision of the matter until the present year is up. We wish to announce the new form with the prospectus for 1873 if it will be adopted. What have you to say?

Answers to Correspondents.

J. C. LEHMAN: The money was credited to you on our book, but we made a mistake in our acknowledgment.

P. J. BROWN: We neglected to put the No. of box on the address of Samuel Detwiler's paper; but the papers have been sent and he can get them at the office.

AARON DIEHL: Yours of June the 1st arrived during our absence, and for that reason was not answered sooner. We cannot enter into a private correspondence such as you propose. It is a matter in which the public is equally interested with ourselves.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The Family of Nations.

"Family of nations." This is a phrase of rich and most charming significance. Its frequent use by jurists, diplomatists and statesmen, and by writers and speakers who treat of the relations of nations to each other, is one of the most hopeful "signs of the times." It indicates that, in the progress of society and the advance of intelligence and Christian civillzation, the moral personality of nations has come to be recognized. It is an acknowledgment of the great fact that nations constitute a fraternity, and, that it is their duty and conducive to their true interests to regulate their conduct toward each other by the golden rule; by the same rule that secures prosperity and happiness of the family.

True it is, mountains interposed have made enemies of nations, that had else like kindred drops been mingled into one. True it is, lands intersected by a narrow frith have abhorred each other. But lo! the marvelous enterprise of this age has leveled or tunneled the mountains. It has bridged the rivers and chasms. It has underrun the firths and the oceans with submarine cables. It has virtually swept away the barriers that once shut the nations in from a knowledge of and intercourse with each other. By the invention of the electric telegraph, steam machinery and man's wonderful mastery over the very forces of nature, the world has been brought together. Nations that were once remote from and strangers to each other, have been brought into proximity and familiar acquaintanceship.

Into ever clearer view is emerging the great truth, that all nations of men that dwell on the face of the earth, are made of one blood. It begins to be understood that all men compose one universal brotherhood. It is now seen that whatever benefits and exalts, or injuries and degrades one member of this family of nations, benefits and exalts, or injures and degrades all the rest. It is as true of the family of nations as of the charmed household circle, that "whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored all the members rejoice with it."—Advocate of Peace.

A Statesman's Verdict.

In his words of congratulation to his colleagues composing the Tribunal of Arbitration at Geneva, the President Count Sclopis, used the following language: "The assemblage of this tribunal signifies that a new direction has been given to the impulse of ideas governing the policy of the nations most advanced in the path of civilization—a direction which prevails over the tendencies of the ancient system of routine which induced to disastrous wars, and thus places the interests of our common humanity above that of a mere temporary policy." These are the deliberate expressions of a statesman and jurist, distinguished for his broad and liberal views, his profound scholarship in public law, and the beneficent influence he has exercised on the laws and politics of Italy; and they should, therefore, outweigh whole volumes of inconsiderate criticism, such as many English and American journals have uttered on the Washington Treaty during the recent "contentions" about the "indirect claims." A lamentable proportion of the criticism referred to seemed to be inspired by a desire to gain transient advantages for political parties, rather than to support and encourage the efforts of the two nations "most advanced in the path of civilization" to settle an irritating and threatning controversy by peaceful means, instead of resorting to a destructive war. The words of Count Sclopis should be carefully noted, and held in rememberance by every one who has turned his attention to what is the true meaning of "war," as a device for settling political or national difficulties. We refer now to its meaning for the great body of the people of a country involved in a war. For these it means the breaking up of their business and their homes, families deprived of their natural protection and support, distress and death and sorrow for husbands, sons and brothers slaughtered; widowhood and orphanage, scarcity and high prices, heavy exactions for the support of armies during the war, and equally heavy taxes for debts, pensions, and extravagance after the war; waste of life blood, the energies and the industry of their country. It would be difficult to find an end to the catalogue of cost, and every item of the cost has to be paid at last by the body of the people. It is therefore, for the masses of the people to cherish the words of the President of the Tribunal of Geneva, and to give their best encouragement and support to the Treaty of Washington. This Treaty is the first fruit of seed that has heretofore been scattered upon barren or inhospitable soil. All the efforts of the world's philanthropists and of innumerable peace congresses and conventions had passed without practical or visible results. Even the notable effort of the Paris Congress of 1856, promising as it was, failed as to the main point. It remained for the treaty of Washington to set the grand example of two powerful nations appealing to law and reason and equity instead of bloodshed and slaughter. The exact truth was declared when it was said in the British Parliament that "the Treaty is an example to all other nations." We do not of course entertain the belief that the success of this example will put an end to war even among the nations regarded as "civilized." Some nations will doubtless continue to be involved in war as it suits the purposes, the ambition or the passions of their rulers, and the nations assailed will have no recourse but to defend themselves by arms and battles. But it will put a stop to some possible wars, and operate as a check upon some nations and their governments, Hereafter every government contemplating war must hesitate, and no government responsible in any degree to an educated, intelligent people will dare to make unnecessary war, or to engage in purely aggressive war, unless it feels sure of the sympathy of the body of the people.—Phila. Public Ledger.

Romish Schools.

Upon a basis furnished by the publications of Catholicism, there are to-day at least 250 schools or convents for young ladies in this country, and 50,000 pupils are in attendance. It is safe, I think, to say that one-half of this number are from families not in sympathy with the propagandism of the Roman Church. In some of these schools three-fourths, and in one, four-fifths were from Protestant families. But reasoning upon the fraction one-half, there are 25,000 young women in these schools who are being manipulated, as adroitly as human ingenuity can invent, in the interest of the Romish Church.—Dr. Bugbee.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Answer to Brother George W. Burkhart's Reply.

Dear Brother, your reply in COMPANION No 24 is thankfully received, hoping, as you say, you differ in love; that is all we want. It seems you differ with me in your opinion on the subject I had written on, and that my explanation on Matth. 12 : 27, differs a little from the general tenor of the scriptures. The point in which we differ is this, I said, others cast out devils that were not followers of Christ. You say, no one can perform miracles that is not a genuine follower of Christ. Now I will try again to see if I cannot substantiate my reasoning or opinion on scriptural ground. In my explanation I had reference to Mark 9 : 38, "Master we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him." Now there is no doubt in my mind that the disciples had a conversation with him, and if they had found that he was a disciple, they would not have forbade him. When we get into conversation with a man or woman, it will not take us long to find out whether they are of our number or not. Our Savior said, "Forbid him not; for there is no man which will do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me." This is no proof that he was a disciple. How many men have we got in this, our day, that will not speak evil of Christ under any consideration? They tell us they love the very name of Christ; but when it comes to the point that they shall confess him before men by obedience to his commands, they shrink back and will not have Christ to rule over them. Do we call such men disciples, or followers of Christ? I think not.

Further, I had reference to Matth. 7 : 22, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? And in thy name have cast out devils? And in thy name did many wonderful works?" Here you say, if I read the 23 verse I will find out that none of these hypocrites did so. "And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Here I can see no contradiction. Our Savior does not say to them, they did not do it. No he does not even call them hypocrites; he does not accuse them of telling a falsehood; but he says, "I never knew you." This proves that they were none of his. "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity" proves that they had done what they said. They were workers, and not idle men; but they worked iniquity. I think this is the very class of men our Savior foretold us of in Matth. 24 : 24, "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Therefore the warning of our Savior, "Take heed that no man deceive you." If Satan can make us believe once that none but genuine followers of Christ can or will perform signs and wonders, he has gained his point, and he will have little trouble to deceive us, and lead us astray through the instrumentality of these men. Satan transformed himself into an angel of light. "No marvel," says Paul, "if his angels transform themselves into preachers of righteousness." Under these transformations all these signs and wonders will be performed; therefore I say again in the language of our Savior, "Take heed that no man deceive you." Farther, you say I have failed to read Acts 19 : 15—16, or I could see that those vagabond Jews I had reference to, did not cast out evil spirits for sport. Here you misunderstand me. I did not say that they did cast out evil spirits, Acts 19 : 13 don't say so, I said, I think they did for sport what they did do, that is to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus. 15th and 16th verses don't contradict my opinion that they did it for sport, neither does it prove yours that they did it for mockery; it only proves to us that they were no disciples, and that they were punished or rebuked for their doings, for they fled out of that house naked and wounded. I for my part can see no bearing on Mark 9 : 38—40, or Numbers 11 : 26—30. But for more proof that miracles were performed without the power of God. Moses by the power of God did miracles before Pharaoh. When Pharaoh called together his magicians they did the same with their enchantments, but not by the power of God. But yet I don't understand that doing miracles was only a labyrinth that any one could do it; even Pharaoh the great king could not do it. Neither do I understand that doing signs and wonders now is only a labyrinth that any one can do it; but in the language of our Savior many will do it and that without the power of God. Therefore I say once more let us take heed that no man deceive us. Dear Brother, I have written these few imperfect lines for your reflection, hoping if you are not benefitted by it, it will do no harm, and if you still think my reasoning differs from the tenor of the scriptures, I am ready for correction.

Yours in love,

JOHN HAMMER

WHITE ROCK MOUNTAINS,
Jewell Co., Kansas.

Dear Brother Henry: We have lately had a visit from Brother Michael Forney, who is on a mission of love, visiting and encouraging the scattered members of our brotherhood out here on the western frontier. Think, brother Henry, of an old standard bearer of 62 winters, travelling, afoot, around the picket lines, hard by the borders of Zion. Then think of your fishing parties averaging half a fish to the man, with carriages and complete outfit of rigging and tackle. At the word of the Master Brother Michael let down the net, and we have ten more members than we had before. Fishing on the borders is not only attended with better success, but—is it health you are seeking? We have pure air, well ventilated houses, hard beds, coarse diet, and stiff springs under our buggies. Add to this the exhilaration of preaching to a people hungering and thirsting for the word of God, and you have enough to make a man "run and not be weary, and walk and not faint." We now number about 50 members in Republic and Jewell counties. Brother Forney will next visit brother Hime's, and the scattered sheep in Russel Co; then to Abilene, in Dickinson county, and thence homeward.

Several brethren have written letters of inquiry, and signified their intention to visit us this fall, and settle here if we have land, water wood, coal, health, climate, &c., &c., &c., to suit them, and preaching enough to keep them busy. Now to such I have an important word in conclusion. It is this: on the 7th and 8th of September, we have a communion meeting at the house of brother Richard Miller's, on Mill-creek, in Republican county, Kansas. On the 10th and 11th of September, we have another at the residence of brother Edwards on Elk Crreek, Republican county, Kansas; and the 14th and 15th another at the house of brother Allen Ives, Burr Oak, P. O., Jewell county, Kansas. Now here is a chance, brethren to come and see the country for yourselves, and make yourselves useful too. A hearty invitation is extended to all, whether laboring brethren or others, we have a prospect that there will be more added to the church, and desire to have our meeting made as interesting as they should be. Affectionately.

J. L. SWITZER.

Reply to Leah Crouce.

In No. 29 Leah made an attempt to prove that hell is the grave, but in vain, I think. I am not fond of controversy, but when I see a thing so misrepresented, I feel that it needs some attention.

We read, "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumtuously every day. And there was a certain beggar, named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs that that fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man died also and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." Luke 16: 19—23.

Now if the grave is hell, then the rich man opened his eyes in the grave, and the grave must be a place of torments. To look at the word itself it is most unreasonable. Verse 24th, "And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my parched tongue for I am tormented in this flame." If hell is the grave, then the grave is a place of torments and of fire. I have five places yet to prove that hell is not the grave, which I will do if necessary.

District Meeting of Southern Ill.

Notice is hereby given to the brethren and sisters, that, the Lord willing, the District Meeting for the Southern District of Illinois, will be held in the Ottercreek church, at the Pleasant Hill meeting-house, three miles southwest of Virden, Macoupin county, Illinois, begining on Monday, the 14th of October. Also a communion meeting at the same place, on Saturday before the District Meeting, to which the usual in vitation is given. Appointments for preaching will be made in the neighborhood as early as Thursday evening before, and brethren from a distance are requested to fill them. We hope, therefore, that a sufficient number of ministers will respond to this request, so as to make those meetings interesting and profitable. Those coming by railroad can stop off either at Virden or Girard, where they will be met by the brethren. By order of the church.

DANIEL VANIMAN.

The Brethren of the Fairview branch, in Appanoose county, Iowa, the Lord willing, will hold their love-feast on the third Saturday in October. The meeting will be at the meeting-house 2¼ miles south of Unionville. The usual invitation is cordially extended.

JOSEPH ZOOK.

The Brethren in the Big Creek congregation, Richland county, Ill., have appointed their love-feast meeting at the house of Elder Michael Forney, 8 miles east of Parkersburg, commencing Saturday, October 19th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. The usual invitation given to the brethren and sisters everywhere. By order of the church.

SAMUEL M. FORNEY.

Our communion meeting will be at brother John Burges's, on the 14th of September, preaching at ten o'clock Also preaching next day. This meeting will be about four miles south of Shanesville, Tuscarawas county, Ohio. We extend a hearty welcome to all who desire to be with us.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

If the Lord will, we anticipate having a communion meeting in the Red Bank congregation, Armstrong county, Pa., on the evening of the 7th of September. Meeting to commence on Thursday evening, the 5th. We give a general invitation to all, and a special invitation to the ministering brethren. Elder C. G. Lint and J. W. Beer are to be with us on that occasion—God willing.

J. W. HETRIC.

Oakland, Pa.

The brethren composing the Whitesville branch, will hold their love-feast, if the Lord is willing, at the house of brother Daniel Glick, in Andrew county, Mo., on the fifth of October, commencing at four o'clock P. M. The usual invitation is extended. We think it prudent, for some of the ministers to arrange their matters so as to remain with us a few days and preach for the Lord, as much good might be accomplished here. Please think of this, brethren, before starting. Those from a distance desiring to be with us, can address brother Daniel Glick, Flag Springs, Andrew county, or J. B. Bashor, Whitesville, Andrew county, Mo. By order of the church. SAMUEL BASHOR.

The Brethren expect to hold a communion meeting, the Lord willing, commencing on Saturday the 17th of August, at 5 o'clock P. M., in Pleasant Grove church. The meeting will be held in Brother John H. Ayers's barn, Miami county, Kansas. This notice is more especially for brethren who intend to come into our country from the East about that time. They may probably make it suit to be with us. The brethren and sisters are invited to be with us, and particularly ministering brethren. By order of the church. GEORGE MEYERS.

Queries.

Some one wishes to know our authority for not pronouncing a "Blessing," or "Benediction," upon the congregation at the close of our meetings. I would like to hear the views of some of our fellow-members upon this subject.

A friend also wants to know our authority for not keeping the seventh day of the week instead of the first. Also wishes to know where the change was made from the seventh to the first day, and by whom.

Her suffering was great, but she bore it all with patience, and said she was willing to leave this world of sorrow, for she felt sure of a home in heaven where there was no sorrow and pain. She selected the 643, 644, and 645 hymns to be sung at her funeral. She leaves a sorrowing husband and two little boys, with many sympathizing friends, to mourn her untimely death. HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

I Have no Father Now.

BY LOVINE H. BURKHART.

I have no father now! he's cold in death's embrace,
The winding-sheet has hid from view that dear, old, smiling face;
The coffin lid now holds him fast, the clods down on it fell;
He's left us all to mourn his loss, yet God doth all things well.

I have no father now! tears will unbidden flow,
To think that one I loved so well has left me here below:
That never more on earth can I his dear old body see,
It fills my heart with grief, but ah! his soul from earth is free.

I have no father now! the room looks dark and drear,
And oft I think to go and see if he's still lying there;
Then, when I think how deep he lies beneath the cold, damp sod,
My heart grows sad, and tears will come, for one that's gone to God.

I have no father now! I miss him ev'rywhere:
Behind the stove, that sacred place, there stands an empty chair—
A chair he occupied so long—oh! can it never be,
That he again will sit therein and kindly talk to me?

I have no father now! the last kiss has been given;
But while I mourn his loss below, his home will be in heav'n;
For he was not afraid to die—to him death had no sting.
I wonder if in heav'n he hears my angel sister sing!

I have no father now! tears will unbidden start,
To think that he can never more in all my joys take part.
Life's thorny path to me seems rough—God's chast'ning rod severe;
Friend after friend departs from me, and all to me seems drear.

I have no father now! My heart is sad to-day;
The clouds hang heavy o'er the earth, but wont they pass away?
The days seem weeks, the weeks seem months—my God why is this so?
Did I not give my heart to thee, that time runs on so slow?

I have no father now, to warn me when I'm wrong—
To guide me in that narrow path which he had walked so long.
This world is full of troubles here, I must not wish him back,
But pray, that when the Lord shall come, in oil I may not lack.

I have no father now! Oh why those bitter tears?
Dear father, if it be God's will that I should live for years,
You still will be more dear to me than all the world can give,
Your face and form will never fade, but in my memory live.

I have no father now! but as those lines I trace,
His boot-jack, coat, his hat and staff, still occupy their place;
But idle now—they useless hang—their owner's gone to rest—
His body mould'ring into clay, his soul is with the blest.

I have no father now! but tokens of his love
Are twined around this wayward heart, that earth can never move;
Some valued gifts, some kindly words, are sacred in my mind;
They'll help to turn my wand'ring heart to purer thoughts—refined.

I have no father now! While suff'ring here below,
He dreamed a dream so sweet, he said he hoped it would come true.
He dreamed that God had angels sent to take us all away
To heaven where glory was so great—no human tongue could say.

I have no father now! The pine tree, watched with care,
Stands waving in the dewy breeze—twelve years he watched it there;
But now no more his hand will touch that tree he loved so well.
Do pine trees grow in that bright world where he is gone to dwell?

Have I no father now? I hope I've two in heaven,
Whom if I live a Christian here, a hope to meet is given.
My heavenly Father watches me with all his tender care.
And will my earthly father know I'll try to meet him there?

I have a father now! Then why those bitter tears?
Has God not power to smooth our path and calm our griefs and fears?
And if I put my trust in him, the waters may be deep,
But, on that other, brighter shore, will be no cause to weep.

I have a mother now; but soon the time may come,
When God may send his messenger to call her to her home;
And I may soon be called away: oh, may I ready be,
To sing God's praise around his throne through all eternity!

Dear readers, of the C. F. C. I hope we'll meet in heaven,
To join our loved ones gone before, and from them ne'er be driven.
'Twill pay us for our trials here, our sorrows and distress,
To live in paradise with God, where all is happiness.

Declension in Religion.

The following, sent by sister Mary Rohrer, was clipped from the Presbyterian, of January 23, 1833. This paper was published in Philadelphia, by Russel and Martien, and was edited by Jas. W. Alexander. The article is very good, and we hope our readers will profit by it.

"When the young believer sets out in Christian life, he expects it to be a path of constantly increasing brightness. The thought that it may be otherwise is distressing to his soul. He is aware of no reason why he should necessarily grow remiss in duty, or fail in enjoyment. Indeed no such reason can be given. Yet there are few who do not, at some period of their lives, experimentally learn what is meant by declension, backsliding, lukewarmness, and formality. There is a "perpetual backsliding," of those who draw back unto perdition, which is only another name for final and hopeless apostasy. This was the sin of Judas, and of many who have walked in his steps. There is likewise a falling away into some gross sin, under the power of sudden temptation; such as the denial of Peter, whose faith, however, "failed not" entirely, through the intercession of the Lord. Of these cases it is not my intention to say anything at present. I would beg the liberty of communicating a few thoughts upon the more common declensions of believers, often unknown to any fellow-creature, but lamentably frequent in their occurence, so that some who are perusing these lines may possibly feel in themselves that this is their condition.

The symptoms of this state are such as these: A want of relish for divine things in general, leading to the neglect of prayer, of meditation, of reading, or formality and coldness in attendance upon these duties. Every one of these symptoms becomes, in turn, the cause of still further departures from the right way. The conscience becomes less tender. Those truths which once affected the soul lose their efficacy, and are read or heard with indifference. Religious enjoyment ceases, and worldly enjoyment is sought in its place. By these and the like tokens, the professor of religion may discover whether the desease has begun to prey upon his spirit.

It is manifestly important that those who are commencing a religious life should be put upon their guard against such things as have led others to this calamity. To such I desire to speak, with humility, and with the mournful reflection, that in many points I am recording my own sad experience.

1. The neglect of Prayer deserves to be placed first, among the causes of backsliding. The young convert scarcely needs to be exhorted to prayer. He delights in the exercise, and accounts it the very breath of the renewed soul. It is in this exercise that we are made most to feel our absolute dependence on God, and this is the temper in which all graces best thrive. After a time, however, and often before the mind has fairly awaked to the change, an alteration takes place. The closet is less frequently visited, or if visited is soon left vacant. The duty is performed with haste, and formality, and without delight; rather to satisfy conscience, than with the ardent expectation of grace. Thus backsliding commences. "Apostasy begins at the closet." The young Christian should, therefore, watch this point with sedulous attention. This is the thermometer, by which he may to a good degree of exactness, measure his warmth of heart. The first appearance of indisposition towards converse with God should cause alarm. The moment in which he finds himself making excuses for the neglect of this duty, should be seized upon for humiliation and repentance. If you have already discovered a remissness, and begin to detect yourself pleading business, or pleasure, or weakness, or pain, as a reason for short, careless, and infrequent prayers, you should solemnly pause. It would be well, in such a case, to set aside a day for special fasting and prayer, to seek God's face and renew your spiritual taste. It would be well from the beginning, to have stated hours of prayer. These become hallowed seasons, and when the habit is fully formed, conscience more readily checks us for omissions. A stated place for prayer is desirable; if possible a place entirely consecrated to devotion. The natural association of ideas is thus brought in aid of piety, and the very approach to the closet sometimes renews past emotions of awe or love.

2. The neglect of the Scripture is a fruitful source of declension. However it may be with others, it has always been my experience, that the sensible progress of my soul in divine things has been almost in exact proportion to the attention which I have bestowed on the word of God. This is partly because the truth of God is the very nourishment of the soul, and partly because the lukewarm Christian loses his relish for this truth. The reading of a few passages of Scripture will sometimes awaken a dead spirit, and the regular and devout attendance upon this duty never fails to keep up a genial glow of spiritual health. Let the youthful servant of Christ read the Bible in course. Let him set apart certain times, as early in the day as practicable, for this delightful task. Let him feel alarm on the first suspicion that, for any cause, he is beginning to neglect the sacred volume; and let him be assured that, so long as he lives in the devout performance of this duty, he will enjoy increasing measures of divine influence.

3. The neglect of stated meditation.—In this I include the daily self-examination of the heart. A duty greatly neglected, but rich in fruits of piety, to those who practice it. A single text of Scripture, seriously revolved in the mind for a few minutes every day, will communicate a holy fragrance to the soul for many hours.

4. The neglect of Religious Conversation.—How great the difference which a few months makes in a young convert, in this respect! At first, he can scarcely permit himself to talk upon any other subject. After a season, he prefers to converse upon all things else. As I must be brief, let me recommend to my young brethren, as far as possible, to let no day pass without some discourse upon divine things; and this not merely upon the externals of religion, such as preachers, sermons, societies, controversies, &c., but upon the precious truths from which the soul derives its strength—the grace of God—the love of Christ—the evidences of piety—the everlasting rest of heaven. Seek those for your companions, with whom you can thus converse with freedom. If necessary go out and look for them among the poor, the afflicted and the aged. But, as you value the peace of your mind, do not suffer a reluctance to this duty to grow into a habit.

5. The neglect of Social Meetings.—I refer to those smaller group of Christians, who assemble often in private houses, for frequent acts of worship and fellowship. There are many seen in "the great congregation" on the Lord's day, whose faces never appear at the weekly lecture. We observe many also at the weekly lecture, whom we never meet at the humble prayer-meeting. At the last of these—at the select circle for social worship, are generally found those whose hearts retain some degree of special ardour. Here it is that revivals of religion begin. Here the delights of Christian communion are more richly enjoyed. Here the vacant seat too often betrays the first symptoms of backsliding. Oh, if the new convert could duly value these occasions of simple devotion and primitive love, he would solemnly resolve, as long as Providence should permit, never to neglect them.

I could draw out these remarks to much greater length, but I am already becoming tedious' and with prayer that they may, through the Divine blessing, not altogether fail of being useful, I close these lines." MOESTUS.

The Value of a Friend.

We understand the word "friend" to signify, one joined to another by affection; an intimate; a confidant. It is necessary for every person to have friends, but not every person knows how to appreciate them. They are even sometimes mistreated by us. Take, for example, our Savior. There never was a truer friend on earth than he—true to all mankind. But how little his friendship seems to be appreciated by some! It is cast aside and trampled upon, in many cases, instead of being cherished as a treasure of great value. We should spend our lives entirely in his service, if we would know the real value of his friendship.

At the departure of friends we frequently hear persons saying, "I feel forsaken; I have now no friends in whom I can confide; they have all left me." Now we all very well know that if our parents, brothers, sisters, and all earthly friends should forsake us, there is "one who sticketh closer than a brother"—one who is ever willing and anxious to have us place all confidence in him, if we will only heed his callings. What a soul-cheering thought, that we have a friend at such times in whom we can rely— to whom we can tell our trials and troubles, and feel confident that "he doth all things well."

It is only when we stand in great need that we can most appreciate the value of a true friend. It is not the worldly minded people to whom we go to seek a friend, but to the true followers of Jesus Christ. Their friendship proves a blessing to us; and in order to retain their friendship, we must walk in such a manner that they may see that we too are Christains, and trying to follow the teachings and examples of our blessed Master.

Be kind and loving to your equals, and thus behaving yourselves, all persons will naturally desire your acquaintance, and every one will be ready and willing, upon opportunity, to serve and assist you. Your friends will then be those that know you.

Lovers of virtue should have none but virtuous friends; because where there is no virtue there is no security that our honor, confidence, and friendship will not be betrayed and abused. True friends are indeed great treasures, and the wise know how to prize them

THE WATERY WAR:

OR,

A POETICAL DESCRIPTION OF THE EXISTING CONTROVERSY BETWEEN PEDOBAPTISTS AND BAPTISTS, ON THE SUBJECTS AND MODE OF BAPTISM.

BY JOHN OF ÆNON.

And so they wrap it up —Micah.

O Luther, Calvin, Poole, and Wall,
And lexicographers, and all,
What pity ere ye drew the quill,
Our moderns of superior skill
Were not at hand to show you how
Baptizo may be rendered now.

Though you so oft have made assertion,
Its meaning primely is immersion ; (¶)
Yet such improvements have been made,
To give the cause of sprinkling aid,
Our critics in this learned day,
Have the great modesty to say,
Its meaning can't be ascertain'd
'Tis "open, general," unrestrained,
And sprinkling, pouring, washing, cleansing,
May be its true and native meaning.
The most specific sense they get,
The term imports somehow to wet ;
If water only be applied,
That will suffice, can't be denied.
Each one may choose his manner now,
If each is pleased, no matter how.
No matter how ? Then why is't where ?
And why the crown of face prefer ?
Why should the region of the nose
Be deem'd more fit than of the toes,
Why should you not baptize the hands,
To execute Divine commands ?
The feet, to run the Christian road ?
The shoulders, to sustain the load ?
The neck, the Christian yoke to bear,
And serve the Lord with holy fear ?
Why not the sacred rite impart
About the region of the heart ?
What, in the nature of the case,
Should make you always choose the face?

'Tis something strange, we freely own,
That those who preach immersion down,
Should, after all the things they say,
Consent to tread this frantic way,
And from the pulpit straight repair
To practice what they censur'd there.
How can we without wonder mention,
Such vast, such friendly condescension ?
Rather than lose a wandering sheep,
Whom all their reasoning cannot keep,
To please the man, (*) but not this God,
They will immerse him in the flood.
Now be consistent condescender,
Thy own good name due service render,
Make not thy reputation bleed,
By ridiculing thy own deed.
Remember, too,(pray don't despise
What one sincerely would advise,)
Before thou dost the work begin,
"What'er is not of faith, is sin."
But why should willing souls, who view
What urgent duty bids them do,
Desire from such reluctant hands
A work which full belief demands ?

Ye Baptists listen while we trace
The numerous and convincing ways,
By which the art of searching man,
Support the Pedobaptist plan.
Observe how straight, how wondrous plain
They've made their inferential chain,
And how immersion meets destruction
From analogical deduction;
And so amazing is their skill,
"Though vanquish'd, they can argue still."
All but conjecture they have urn'd
And seem to leave no stone unturn'd
Or else, speak more rightly rather,
They've tumbled all in heaps together.
Such is the mode of their disputing,
Their monstrous guesses; (†) and wild shooting,
That some, 'tis thought, might find it hard,
Should charity be off her guard,
To think that in Jehovah's fight,
They fully credit all they write.

While thousands unconcern'd to know,
If Scripture prove their creed, or no,
Embrace what has been handed down
From Father to succeeding son,
Well pleas'd to walk in custom's way,
Nor from tradition ever stray ;
Yet may venture farther out,
And chase a devious round-about,
Of ancient rites and promises
Of probables and doubtlesses,
Of Scripture silence and negation,
Of inference and implication ;
The doubtful tales of oral rites,
For washing Gentile proselytes ;
Good Lydia (*) and the Jailor too,
And supposition not a few ;
Convenience and expedition,
For which you know we all are wishing ;
And many things which critics speak,
Of skeptical, evasive Greek ;
And books, too many now to name,
Of ancient or of modern fame,
And what of Scripture may befriend,
In trying times to gain an end,
But from its "silence" who would look
For aid from such a speechless book ?
For 'tis said by more than one disputer,
In this debate the Bible's neuter.

Such, Anabaptists,(†) hear with dread,
Such is the Pedobaptist creed,
But when we ask for Scripture proof,
We're gravely told 'tis plain enough !
And many of these sons of light,
Who read what God did never write,
With blustering force asault your skull,
Why proof? dear sir, the Bible's full !
But Baptists, doubtless ne'er expect
To gain such strength of intellect,
To tell from silence what is said,
Nor from a blank their lesson read.
They often to ther minds recall
What Samuel said to prudent Saul ; (‡)

(¶) Mr. Booth has quoted 82 Pedobaptist authors, who have conceded that the primary meaning of baptizo is to dip, to plunge, etc. Supposing our friends can prove that some of these authors admitted, that the term, in a remote and secondry sense, meane to wet, to wash, etc., how much will it help them in the case ? At most, it will prove them but second best,

(*) "In condescension," says Dr. Osgood, "to the consciences of those who request it, our ministers scruple, not to baptize by immersion."

(†) Vide Dow's Pedobaptist Catechism, pp. 20,, 21, 22, etc., where you will find guesses in abundance.

(*)"Pray Mistress Lydia, let us know
Are you in social life or no ?
If married, what's your husband's name
And why hath Luke conceal'd the same
Where doth he live? We want to spy him
Pray have you any issue by him ?
If you have children, please to tell
What is their age, and where they dwell
And whether they were all rantiz'd,
When your whole household was baptiz'd
We hope for your own reputation,
They were not born of fornication :
Your answer, madam, we solicit,
Pray be particular and explicit :
'Tis on your evidence depends
The cause for which their priest contends"
Salopian Zealot, p. 22

(†) "Anabaptist," Mr. Worcester informs us, "is not intended as a term of reproach." We shall not dispute the purity of his intention. But it certainly looks like a slanderous act, whatever was his design, to revive an old reproachful term, and impose on a denomination, which, for centuries past, has uniformly rejected it, was customary for Baptists, in former times to style themselves "the people commonly but unjustly called Anabaptists." Nothing more is designed to be conceded in the use of this term, in the subsequent part of this poem. Names, generally are of little consequence, but this is too reproachfully significant to be received with indifference.

(‡)1 Sam. xv. 23.

And what in good Isaiah stands,
"Who hath requir'd this at your hands?" (*)
They too are loath to build their faith on
The rock of silence and negation.

O ye who strive with mighty pains,
And tax your mathematic brains,
To prove a point to demonstration,
And quite foreclose all disputation;
Give o'er your philosophic care,
And learn this method, wondrous rare
Let parents now no longer feel
The fear of losing that strange seal,
With which they mark their infant charge,
To let them run again at large;
Nor fear the law will give the slip,
Which now secures their membership.

Go, Baptists, read the Bible through,
And search the Scriptures, old and new,
Indulge no quibble nor evasion,
From Genesis to Revelation;
What did one single author write,
Which once forbids the infant rite? (†)
Be patient, too, and hear again,
From apo, eis, and ek, and en,
'Tis doubtful, trusting their assertion,
If John or Philip used immersion.

Reader, excuse my wandering rhymes,
Since they describe peculiar times.

But close communion is the thing,
In which each writer thrusts his sting
This seems the bug-bear of the world,
At which their fiercest shafts are hurled.
What, bar the table of the Lord,
From Christians, who revere his word,
Because in your beclouded eyes,
They do not lawfully baptize!
Though errors plenteously abound
O.er all the Anabaptist ground,
Yet on this practice, most of all,
Their pelting censures oftenest fall;
At this they aim their greatest force,
This is the butt of all discourse.
Thousands are often heard to say,
We don't despise your watery way;
We entertain a high respect
For many of your "little sect:"
And with them feel a Christian union,
But can't endure your close communion.

Ye Baptists, view the friendly band,
Each pleading with extended hand,
That you would break these hateful bars,
And thus expel all painful jars,
And who can think but in this case,
Each pleader means the thing he says?
But should a lurking doubt arise,
From what appears before your eyes,
The point we'll strive to clearly prove,
By some expressions of their love.
Now hear the words of cordial friendship,
In which they paint their hopeful saintship.
"Ye dipping Baptists, and duck-divers, (*)
Who stream away to ponds and rivers;
And when th' indec'rous rite is o'er,
Come drench'd and shivering from the shore (†)
Ye narrow souls, devoid of light, (‡)
Who think none but yourselves are right.
Ye frantic sons of Munster's plain;
Yes, Anabaptists, hear with pain,
The solemn truth may make them tremble,
But for our lives we can't dissemble;
Unpleasant as the fact appears,
'Tis hardly now three hundred years,
Since (sober truth we do not strain)
Your noisy sect began its reign.
This clam'rous and ignoble crow
To fifteen hundred and twenty-two,
By us, its friends, has oft been chased,
But farther back it can't be traced." (‖)

O, mighty sir, what hath possess'd
Thy foaming and terrific breast?
Thou need'st not with such thunder frown,
For half thy weight would sink us down.

A thousand things we might report,
All of this friendly, loving sort,
Which serve to show the great respect,
They have for all your pious sect,
And can you, after all you hear,
Suspect your friends are not sincere,
When they so movingly request,
To meet you at the sacred feast?
Think ye, that after all they say
About your close and narrow way,
It matters not with them a great,
If they commune with you or not? (*)
This threadbare and worn out objection,
Suits their design to great perfection;
O how they strike their flocks with terror,
By thund'ring 'round this monstrous error.

'Tis known we must have left the plan,
To which we now are called again;
And when we felt constrain'd to go,
What friendship follow'd—many know;
Denied dismissions whence we came,
The reason why, we all could name.
And is our sect now less perverse,
Or Pedobaptists grown some worse?
Or how, or why, should Baptists gain
That fellowship denied them then?
But why converse of distant then,
As though the world were purged of spleen,
As bigotry had done her work,
And charity presided clerk?

Behold the pulpits far and near,
The seats of sermons sound and clear,
In wisdom kept from Baptists' use,
To shun the ills they might produce. (†)
The preacher tells th' inquiring friend,
He freely would his pulpit lend,
But fears in case—but if—and but;
And so the desk continues shut.
To guard against all fearful jars,
He wisely holds his pulpit bars.
That Pedobaptists should be able
To sit around the Baptist's table,

[*] Isaiah i. 12.

[†] "Scripture forbids us in no place,
To sprinkle infants in the face;
(Nor yet to give them bread and wine;)
Ergo, this rite must be divine:
And ergo, we may quite as well,
Religiously baptize a bell."
Salopian Zealot, p. 37.

[*] It ought to be observed, that in the original it is "duck dipping Baptists;" but as ducks generally dive in dipping, it is hoped the candid author will not complain of being misquoted, so long as the important sense is literally retained.

[†] Dr. Osgood's Two Discourses, etc., p. 8.

[‡] Mr. Anderson, out of the abundance of his charity, has informed the world, that "the light of the truth has been a hundred, perhaps a thousand fold greater in the Pedobaptist churches than in the Baptist." Of course our light must be a hundred or a thousand fold less than theirs, which, we think, would reduce it to an almost imperceptible particle.—Mr. Anderson's Letters, p. 14.

[‖] "Unpleasant as the fact is, it ought not to be dissembled that the history of your denomination is easily traced back to the German Anabaptists, who made their appearance at Munster, about the year 1522, and who, by their wild irregularities, gave so much trouble to Luther and his worthy associates: but farther back than this it cannot be traced."—Serious and Candid Letters, etc., p. 145.

We do not say that Mr. Worcester is beside himself, but has not much controversy made him mad?

"The rapid traveler could not call,
Where any Baptists lived at all.
From Jordan's banks to Munster's plain,
Where German ranters fix'd a stain."
Salopian Zealot, p. 36.

[*] That many of our Pedobaptist brethren sincerely desire to unite with us in the sacramental feast, we fully believe; but that this is the case with many of these flaming writers on the subject, who are constantly loading us with a torrent of reproach, we think we have sufficient reason to doubt.

[†] In justice to some of our Pedobaptist brethren, it ought to be observed, that there are honorable exceptions to this general rule.

And mingle there in free communion,
Is more of use than pulpit union.

Do not pretend that party spirit,
Which we peculiarly inherit,
Inclines us to that close belief,
Of which you speak of so much grief.
Our reasons have so oft been shown,(*)
We think they can't be still unknown.
The humble godly and sincere,
Of all communions we revere,
And hope at last to meet them where,
We all shall sweet communion share.
And while we walk in this vale of woe,
We wish with all the saints to go,
In all the paths the pious tread,
So far as we can be agreed.
But that broad creed which strives to hold
In fellowship within its fold,
The pour'd and sprinkled, plung'd and all,
Or such as are not wet at all; (†)
"This modern Babel of confusion,"
With watery rites in such profusion,
We freely own we disapprove,
As coming from the court above.

Such is the sad and piteous strain,
In which your writings all complain,
'Twould seem that you were quite forlorn,
And all in exile doomed to mourn;
Shut out, by our unkind behavior,
From ever feasting with the Savior.

But what so dreadful is the matter,
That you should make so loud a clatter?
Have you not all your churches, where
Your holy brethren may repair,
To sit around the sacred board,
And sup together with the Lord?

But now to draw towards a close,
On this vile scheme you all oppose.
You safely offer us a seat
Within your folds so learn'd and great;
Since 'tis well known, such are our views,
That the offer we shall refuse.
But should the Baptists, in their turn,
With such incessant wishes burn,
With your enlightened host to join,
To celebrate this feast divine,
Would not your wide extended doors
Be bolted then as close as ours?

We beg to say to each disputer,
Who may resume his pen in future,
That, notwithstanding all they say,
We too have eyes as well as they.
And though they may be less discerning,
And we possessed of small learning;
Yet when dispute may chance to rise,
Of whom and how we should baptize,
We think we have sufficient light
To show the path, and guide us right.

Think not to still us with conjectures,
Nor please us with romantic lectures;
Remember, friends, we most have been
In the same case that you are in;
We long have labor'd too, like you,
To make tradition somehow do;
We've felt the straits to which you're driven,
To prove it truly came from heaven;
And by conviction's powerful sway,
Have been impelled to leave the way.
The soft allurements which still hold
So many thousands in your fold,
With all your subtle reasoning force,
Were oft employed to stop our course.
But since we have resolved to stray,
Pray leave us to our chosen way.

But should you choose to write again,
And pour on us your force amain,
Excuse us, if we advertise you,
And with sincerity apprise you,
We wish to see some little more
Than any writer's shown before.
Show but one solitary case (*)
Where babes were sprinkled in the face;
Your probables no more rehearse,
But name the chapter and the verse;
And likely specify the book,
That we may all know where to look.

Be pleas'd to speak with more precision,
Of your rare Christian circumcision,
Produce some text in what you write,
To set the proof in clearer light,
The Jews and Christians are the same.
And differ only in the name;
And that the ancient cov'nant seal
Retains its use and meaning still;
Then, tell us what your infant daughter,
As well as son, is seal'd with water.

What stations do your children hold.
Who are thus seal'd within your fold?
Do give this point a full digestion,
And answer this important question, (*)
If they are members of the church,
Why leave them sadly in the lurch,
And let them run as gay and wild
As any Anabaptist's child?
Why don't you with your minor clan,
Pursue a more consistent plan,
"And give the babes of Alma Mater,
Some bread and wine, as well as water?"
Then, though with Scripture you may vary,
The force of one great charge you'll parry,
By telling all these Baptist elves,
We're now consistent with ourselves.

The Jewish babes you oft declare,
(At which perhaps the Jews might stare,)
Were not requir'd till twelve at last,
To celebrate the paschal feast,
Admitting this a sober truth,
Why suffer all your tender youth,
To manly years to go astray,
Before they walk the sacred way;
While thousands live to hoary age,
And never in the work engage?

When they receive converting grace,
And at your table seek a place,
Do you not then require of all,
(You who indeed require at all,)
The special marks of pardon'd sin,
As they ne'er had sprinkled been?
Excuse, dear friends, our wild suggestions,
And please to answer these few questions,

[*] See Dr. Baldwin's Appendix, Sec. 1 & 8.
[†] Mr. Austin evidently denies "that baptism is ever an indespensible prerequisite to the Lord's supper." When this point is given up, baptism appears of too little importance to merit any further controversy on the subject. For does not this principle go to exclude the ordinance altogether? If a person may be admitted to the supper once, without baptism, why not ten times with equal propriety? If ten why not a hundred, or as long as he lives? If one may be admitted, why not ten? why not a hundred? why not all? Is not this the leading tendeneney of this extraordinary maxim? Whether Mr. Austin advanced this novel sentiment, from a deliberate conviction of its correctness, or with a view disentangle himself in the easiest way, from the defiles of controversy in which he was struggling, we shall not determine.

(*) Mr. Dow, in the Pedobaptist Catechism, p. 26, has this remarkable answer to the following question:
"Q. What is the whole amount of evidence in favor of immersion?"
"A. The whole amount of evidence in favor of immersion is one solitary instance, of a person, viz: the Etheopian enuch, being baptized in a certain water, as he was journying, and under such circumstances, as leave room to guess that the baptism might have been administered by immersion or in any other mode." Is it possible?

"We love the Christian as sincere;
The zealous Preacher we revere;
But think the Writer and Logician,
Stands much in need of a Physician."
Salopian Zealot, p. 13.

(*) Dr. Reed has labored hard in his Appendix, pp. 309, 310, and 311, to show in what sense infants are church members. But we believe it would puzzle any mathematical head to tell from the Doctor's own account, where they stand, or what peculiar privileges they are entitled to on account of their being "devoted to God by baptism."

Are you in earnest or in jest,
In calling John a Jewish priest?
Do tell us in some leisure hour,
Who gave him his official power.
And did he too, in fact and deed,
As is supposed by Doctor Reed,
Baptize the babes of all who came
To visit him at Jordan's stream? (*)

Was Christ who sprang from Judah's race,
In which the priesthood had no place,
By John the Baptist set apart,
With Levi's sons to bear a part;
And was his holy separation,
By true Aaronic consecration?
Be clear and plain, no longer hope
With fumbling terms to "wrap it up,"
Your explanation some may swallow,
And think it "impious" now to follow
The dear descending Son of God,
Who was immersed in Jordan's flood;
While some reject without much pain,
This tale, devis'd by Fish and Crane. (†)

Why give baptizo such a scoring,
To prove the lawfulness of pouring?
For this, you know as well as we,
With your own practice don't agree.
With words which chance to mention sprinkling?
Or why still make so loud a tinkling,
While those which indicate immersion,
Are thought unworthy of insertion. (‡)

We say not, nor presume to utter,
The things you write in such a flutter
Are not the dictates of the mind,
But with a wise intent design'd,
Within your fold secure to keep
You wav'ring and uneasy sheep:
No; of our province 'tis no part
To judge the purpose of the heart;
To the great Searcher of us all,
Both you and we must stand or fall.
But leaving out what some might mention,
Of your apparent prime intention,
Such is the spirit of your style,
Your flaming pages make us smile.
Do not explode our creed in air,
Nor drive us all to wild despair.
Why with hard names so oft abuse us,
And with such rancor still traduce us?
You wisely urge the vast importance
Of Christian friendship and accordance,
And shall we, sirs, from your example
Select ourselves a standing sample,
And imitate in all we do,
This worthy pattern set by you?
We beg you'll read these few lines more,
And then we'll give the subject o'er.

No more with foul invectives broach us,
Then say you mean not to approach us;(*)
But own what seems your leading aim,
To load us all with guilt and shame.

Pray deal no more in Serious slander,
Nor woo us with your fiery Candor;
And by your Friendly crimination;
Don't be so "fierce for moderation;" (†)
And should you still avoid the flood,
Do not immerse us all in mud.

(*) "When we consider the habits and circumstances of the Jews, nothing is more natural than to suppose they brought their children with them to the baptism of John. There is to say the least, as much evidence that he baptized infants, as that he baptized women!"—Reeds Appendix, p. 328.

The very mention of baptism, seems to excite in the minds of the Pedobaptists, the idea of children, let the circumstances be what they may.

(†) The reader may see this novel notion of Christ's being inducted into the priestly office by his baptism, which of late has become a favorite topic with the Pedobaptists, maturely considered, and amply refuted in Dr. Baldwin's Appendix, pp. 299–305.

[‡] "Figurative expressions," says Dr. Baldwin, "are constantly resorted to by our brethren, to support their practice; such as 'sprinkling many nations, sprinkling clean water, pouring out of the Spirit,' etc. With these we have only to contrast other Scriptures, which represent the same thing by an entire washing or plunging, such as the following: 'In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and uncleanliness.' 'Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins, in his own blood.' 'These are they who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.' These latter afford just as much evidence of immersion, as the former do of sprinkling. But as none of them have anything to do with the subject, neither can afford any direct evidence in the case." Appendix.

[†] Serious Remarks, Candid Reasons, Friendly Letters, etc, are made the vehicles of that torrent of reproach, which our moderate brethren are so constantly pouring upon us.

Early Training, or the Family Nursery.

"Ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Eph. 16 : 4.

Brethren and sisters, Christian parents, we that have charge of families, are we complying with this injunction of the apostle? How is it? How doth the matter stand with us in relation to the bringing up of our children? Are we bringing them up in the ways of the Lord? Do we set them a good example, by a holy life and chaste conversation, in all godliness and honesty? If this is not the case, dear, Christian parents, we are certainly not discharging our parental and Christian duties?

The term "Nurture," as defined by Webster, means "The art of nourishing, nursing, tender care, to feed, to nourish, to bring or train up, to educate."

Dear brethren and sisters, it is with sorrow and remorse that we must see so many of our brethren's children become alienated, turn out to be wicked and impious, never to become members of the church, notwithstanding their pious parents. I ask again, why is it so? There certainly must be some cause for it. I am seriously inclined to think, dear parents, that the chief fault is in you; that you are not bringing them up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." There must be a neglect on your part, of proper training and culture, in the proper time and place. The wise man saith, "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven." Eccl. 3 : 1. The horticulturist must know the proper time and season to train and form and shape his twig, in order to raise an ornamental tree. Should he let it grow up without care and attention in the proper season, when young and tender, it would grow up as any other tree of the forest, without beauty, grace, or ornament; but supposing, instead of training and shaping it, you would twist and bend and distort it out of all shape and form, what think you would become of it? At best but an ill-shapen, crooked tree, fit for no other use than to be burned.

Dear parents, even in a temporal point of view, our children deserve the most tender care and attention; they must have wholesome and nourishing diet; they must be kept clean and comfortable. And as they advance in days and strength, so that they commence to crawl about, they must be kept from danger: everything hurtful must be kept out of their reach; they must be taught to walk and to speak, &c. And as Christian parents our chief and greatest concern for our children, ought certainly to be to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" their eternal welfare and destiny should engage our attention more than all else, hence the care and concern that we should have to bring them up in the right way and manner. All other objects are but secondary objects. This being the case, dear parents, let us then begin in time.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Prov. 22 : 6. This is true to a very great extent; early training goes a great ways. Try, then, dear parents, to teach them, whilst they are young and tender, to be obedient. Do as the horticulturist with the tender twig: then is the time to train and shape and form the tender twig. The juvenile mind can now be formed by proper care and training. Now try to impress the mind with truth and justice; yea with everything that is right and honorable in the sight of God and man. Teach them that they will be rewarded for doing that which is right, and that they will be punished for doing that which is wrong and sinful; show them what sin is, and what the awful consequences thereof will be; teach them to dread sin as they would an adder, and that the "wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." As soon as your children begin to lisp, teach them to speak the truth. Be sure and always speak the truth to them yourselves. Try to impress their young minds with everything that is good and virtuous. Whatever impressions are made upon their minds when young are very apt to remain in after life, whether of a virtuous or vicious character. Much, yea, very much, therefore, depends upon early training, (nursing.)

Some parents, I am sorry to say, yet it is nevertheless true, are in the habit of scolding and threatening their children. In speaking to your children, always be mild and pleasant.

Whenever you have occasion to reprove them, let them know by your disposition that you are sorry for it; yet let them know that your word is law, and that it must be obeyed. Never threaten your children with this, that, or the other thing, which you never intend to inflict upon them. "Forbearing threatening." Scolding and threatning children is unbecoming any Christian parent, and consequently should never be. Reprove your children for every wilful act of disobedience. "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for the crying." Prov. 18 : 19. "He that spareth his rod, hateth his son. Prov." 22 : 8. "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten." Rev. 2 : 19.

Thus, dear Christian parent, we see that it is incumbent for a Christian to correct (chasten) his children in case of necessity. This however must be done in the fear of God, out of love, from a pure motive, for the good of the child; not with threatening and scolding; not in anger; but in anguish of heart; prayerfully, for its future and enternal welfare. To chasten a child in anger would be sinful in the extreme, and I hope no Christian parent may ever be guilty of it. Above all, dear brethren, be often engaged with your children in prayer for them. Let them hear and know by your prayers, that you felt deeply concerned for their present and future welfare. And very frequently let your closet prayers ascend to the throne of grace for them. Yea, pray for them without ceasing; wherever you be, at home or abroad, by land or sea; for what is there besides your own salvation that you should feel as much interested for as for the eternal welfare of your children? Discountenance every sinful act that you find them guilty of; every act of disobedience, of pride, of folly, rudeness; of profanity, of lying, or whatever it may be that is sinful. And, upon the other hand, encourage them in everything that is noble, and good, and just and honorable.

In conclusion I am constrained to say, I fear that a great many so-called christian parents are the cause of their children's destruction: instead of restraining them, they suffer them to go on in all the foolish fashions of the world; they indulge them in everything they wish or ask for, no matter how sinful it may be. Why not try and keep them from becoming so fashionable and proud? Don't you know that pride is an abomination in the sight of God? Don't you know, dear parents, that God will hold you accountable at the judgment day for the bringing up of your children? Why not, then, "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?" But to the contrary. Don't you bring them up for their eternal ruin and destruction? Will you not be held accountable for all this? "For these God will bring thee into judgment." Eccl. 11: 9. Will you have your children rise up in judgment and condemn you for this neglect of your Christian and parental duty? May God help us all to bring up our children "In the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

In a temporal point of view, how pleasant it is to see a well trained family of children! They are an ornament and blessing to their parents, a blessing to themselves and to the surrounding community; but, on the other hand, a family of untrained, wicked children, are indeed a curse to society, a disgrace to their parents, and a pest to all those whose misfortune it is to come in contact with them. Let us then take warning, lest we may lament our negligence when it is eternally too late. I have heard some apparently pious parents lamenting that they had neglected the training of their children when they were young; now they cannot train them any more; now they have become habituated in their folly and sin, consequently they must now let them go on in sin and folly to their own destruction. O deplorable condition!

Before I close this article I will give you a sketch of what I read of a young lady who had been somewhat religiously inclined, but, like a great many others, put off religion. She thought she would yet, for a short time longer, enjoy the sinful pleasures of the world. She got herself a fashionable and very costly dress; she went into gay and fashionable society, and for a short time enjoyed herself in sin and folly. But alas, alas! she soon took sick. The physician was sent for. The medical man examined her case. He soon found that her case was an incurable one. He told her that all the physicians in the world could not help her any, that her time was short, that she should prepare for death. She then called for her mother and said, "Bring me that dress." Her mother did so. She said, "Mother, this dress is the price for my soul: with it went all my anticipations of religion—of future happiness. O mother, I am lost, forever lost! I must now die and go to hell! And O mother, thou art the cause of it, thou hast never restrained or warned me from indulging in sin and folly! Now I must forever suffer the vengence of God's eternal wrath!"

Dear Christian mothers, take warning before it be too late, eternally too late. Do not let your daughters indulge in pride, but ten-thousand times rather restrain them. "Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" lest you may also witness such a lamentable and horrible death-bed scene as the one above described. Beware, dear mother, beware. I may probably be induced to say something to the children, as the auther of our text saith, "Children obey your parents in the Lord." For the present, however, I forbear.

Invitation.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Matth. 11: 28—30.

These are words spoken by our Savior when he was here upon this earth of sorrow. They extend an invitation to all who are weary and worn down with the load of sin and folly; for he says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Now sinner, let me call upon you for a moment—you who ofttimes labor under your load of sin: your enjoyment in this world is vain, while the faithful Christian has many consoling promises in the word of God to strengthen him, and to encourage him on his journey toward the heavenly Canaan; and at the end of his sojourning here in this sin deranged world, he has the promise of hearing that welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." But, O sinner! where are your promises in the word of God? God's word says to you, if you die in your sins, where God and Christ are there you cannot come. Then hear the Savior; come and forsake all, and turn to Christ, and he will give rest to your souls. "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." So said David; and Moses esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt." Be persuaded then to commence the work of the salvation of your souls, and come to him who this long while has been saying, "Come unto me;" "For the Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will be withhold from them that walk upright. O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee." So says the 84th Psalm, 11th, and 12th verses. What I have written I have written in love, as the prayer of your unworthy young brother.

Had He a Mother.

"How does God know when you try to pray?" I asked of a Sunday-school scholar. He looked up sadly, and said slowly, "I never prayed." "Never!" said I wonderingly. "Did you never try?" "No," he answered, and a sad hungry look came into his eyes.

I was sad, too, and could only exclaim, "What a sweet lesson you have yet to learn." Some one who heard the remark asked me, "Had he a mother, she surely would have taught him 'Now I lay me,' or 'Our Father.'" Strange she did not. Strange that she could allow him to say, "No one, not even my mother ever taught me to pray!"

I hope there are few mothers in this gospel land, whose sons and daughters can speak thus. Oh mothers, teach your children to call on their heavenly Father, even if you connot yourselves; try lest of all to teach them by example, so that in after life, your sons and daughters may gladly say "Mother taught me to pray."

DALE CITY, PA., Aug. 27, 1872.

Editor's Diary.

WEDNESDAY, 14. Enjoyed a short visit by brethren Forney, Walker, and Raymond from Berlin, who report "nothing strange" from that part of the moral heritage. This office was made the recipient of a bushel of fine apples from the liberal hand of brother John J. Fike. It was an opportune gift, as we had just received orders from the culinary department, that an article of that kind was indispensible. But for brother Fike's thoughtfulness we would have been obliged to expend some of our stamps of which our stock is becoming very precious, in view of the tardiness with which delinquents are coming to our rescue. Should any of our other neighbors have a superabundance of fruit, they might follow brother Fike's good example.

THURSDAY, 15. Brother Henry Meyers spent the best part of the day in our sanctum, posting us upon many things appertaining to the old order of church government, and other matters belonging to religion. Had the good fortune to receive a new hat, a present from M. D. Miller, of the firm of M. D. Miller & Co. Many thanks. The above firm has quite a stock of hats on hand, as well as all other articles usually kept in a well supplied country store, all of which they will sell at fair, living profits.

FRIDAY, 16. Received an invitation to deliver an address at a public meeting gotten up by the temperance people of Somerset county. Wonder what our readers would advise us to do. Of course we are all friends of temperance, but for our ministers to make temperance speeches has been considered of doubtful propriety. We understand old brother Isaac Price used to do so. Spent the evening at Aunt Sallie's, and enjoyed a feast to the outer and inner man. This was our first regular visit to our old neighbor's since our return from the west.

SATURDAY, 17th. Brother Jacob T. Meyers from the Middle Creek congregation, our county, paid us a visit in the morning. Brother M. was lately called to the ministry, and is endeavoring to prepare himself for the calling, and with that view is thinking of attending high school a few terms. We are in favor of high schools, in their proper place and purpose, but brother Meyers does not go by our advice, though our prayers follow him that he may be made a useful worker for God and righteousness.

Brother J. W. B. took the noon train for Middle Creek, to preach for them on Sunday.

Spent the evening at brother Daniel Buechley's—familiarly, Grandpap's. Dr. Fahrney's were also in the company. Enjoyed a very pleasant season. Had occasion to recount some of our experience and associations among the friends in the west, which is always pleasant.

SUNDAY, 18th. Attended preaching at Mechanicsburg meeting-house at 10 o'clock. Large attendance. Six preachers present: Henry Myers, Lint, Berkley, Kelso, Gnagy, and self. Elder Myers led in German. Text: Heb., 12 : 18—24. Wife being quite unwell when I left in the morning, I hurried home, and on that account did not attend Sunday-School nor evening meeting.

MONDAY, 19. Wife is better, for which we feel truly grateful. There is no blessing on earth equal to that of health. Heard of the severe affliction of sister Silas Keim of Salisbury. Hope the Lord will spare her.

TUESDAY, 20. Received a dispatch from brother Ephraim, now living at Confluence, Pa., that his son (a child) was about dying. Wife went to see them on the evening train.

WEDNESDAY, 21. Wife returned in the morning. Ephraim's child is still living. Disease: Dysentery. We go to press in the forenoon.

The Companion for the Campaign.

As we are entering upon a very important presidential campaign, during which it becomes the duty of every Christian to take such action, as will be consistent with his holy profession; we have concluded to offer the COMPANION during the fall campaign, commencing with the first of September, and closing with December, making four months, for the small amount of

FORTY CENTS.

It is very important that in such a momentous struggle, the brethren and the sisters, too should stand up bravely for the doctrine of Christ. The contest is going to be a very warm one, and party spirit will run high, and there is danger, unless our brethren are upon their guard, that they may be found among those who "despise government," and are not "afraid to speak evil of dignities." This we want to persuade them to avoid, by giving them better employment: reading wholesome, religious instruction and admonition, awakening their minds to an ivestigation of the important subjects that are weekly being introduced through our columns. Every family of the Brethren should have the COMPANION in the house. And it would be useful in all other families. Will not all friends of true Christianity aid us in extending our circulation? Let us have at least several hundred campaign subscribers. Most any one can be induced to invest forty cents in a paper that will tell him how to get over the election excitement without getting injured. Who will send us the first subscriber on this call? And who the largest list?

Put it in Writing.

How many misunderstandings rise from the loose manner in which business matters are talked up, and then when each party puts in his own construction on the conversation, the matter is dismissed by each with "all right," "all right." Frequently it turns out all wrong, and becomes a question for lawyers and courts. More than one-half of the expensive and useless litigation of the country could be saved if people were in the habit of putting their agreements in writing. Each word in our language has its own peculiar meaning, and memory. May be the change of its position in a sentence, conveys an entirely different idea from that intended. When once reduced to writing, ideas are fixed and elastic.—Ex.

We regard the above as most excellent advice for good. Its truthfulness was made apparent to our mind lately at a church business meeting when a difficulty between two brethren was brought up for settlement, which grew out of neglect of this advice. Let all our contracts and bargains be reduced to writings, and let all the items of the agreement be enumerated, and leave nothing to be "taken for granted," or "understood." Bargain with everybody as though he were a rogue, and if he proves to be an honest man, it will not injure him, and he cannot injure you.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book.

We have now had the pleasure of seeing and examining a bound copy of the above work. We believe it is what we have been promising our readers it should be: one of the best collections of sacred music now before the public. It contains all the hymns but one, (No. 801) in the Brethren's Hymn Book, with an appropriate tune to each opening of hymns.

The object of this work is to aid the churches in obtaining good congregational singing, a necessity to a devotional Christianity. It is also hoped by its use a general uniformity of tunes will prevail throughout the entire Brotherhood, thus vastly improving our song when we meet from far and near, as we often do in Annual Council, and upon Lovefeast occasions. Appropos to this thought we adopt the following from the Preface of the work.

"If it be desirable that all be in the same mind, and speak the same thing, surely it cannot be less desirable that all likewise sing the same thing, that there may be a union in song as well as in doctrine.

When we visit distant branches of the church, and look in vain for one familiar face, how comfortable we are made, and what a home feeling we enjoy, and what a deep sympathy springs up in our hearts for those around us, when we join with them in singing some good old tune which we learned in our heart's first love. The retail price of the book is $1.25, on receipt of which it will be sent free. By express, ten dollars a dozen.

We, however, regret to say that the books are not yet ready for delivery; but we are doing all we can to have them finished. Those who have already sent in their orders will please exercise a little more patience. Orders solicited.

Thanks.

We acknowledge the receipt of a box of very nice pears from Brother S. J. Lichty, of Salisbury, and we hereby return our thanks for the same. May his trees bear every year, and may he live long to enjoy their fruits. J. W. B.

The Little Beggar.

In a pretty country village about six miles from London, where on a bright summer's morning everything looked gay, peaceful, and happy, little children might be seen, with bright smiling faces, running to school clean and neat: for there were many wealthy inhabitants who were much interested for their poorer neighbors, and provided schools for their little ones; so that they might be able to read and know the great truths of the Bible and other good books. They also instituted saving clubs for the parents, where they might deposit one penny or two pence per week, by which means their children, as well as themselves, were respectably clothed; and these half pence, with what the ladies added to them, were of great assistance to careful industrious mothers at the end of the year. You might observe them about Christmas time, when the cold winds blew, and the rain fell heavily, with good new shoes to keep their feet warm and dry, and their children still going to school warmly clothed. But there was one poor boy, who we shall call Ragged Jack, who was very often to be seen wandering about this pretty village without shoes, and with such clothes as would scarcely hang upon his poor shivering limbs, they were so torn and old. This poor boy called often to offer his bundle of matches or beg a little bread at the house of a kind-hearted lady, who intended, if he came again, to inquire into his case; and finding that he had no parents or friends to look to, she determined to enable him to provide for himself; for it is always better to help ourselves than to depend upon others. For this purpose she procured as large a basket as he could carry; purchased an assortment of cotten, needles, tapes, pins, and other suitable things; procured of the friends some decent clothing, and sent him around, from house to house, to sell what he could. Sometimes he was very successful, and would gain generally from one to two shillings a day. Every night he brought his money to his kind benefactress, who used to stock his basket again, ready for the morning; and she had the pleasure of seeing the spirit of independence growing in the bosom of this poor motherless boy, who was now clad in such apparel as he never before could call his own. But you will say, what became of him at night, and through the cold dreary days of winter? In this village there was a kind aged widow, with one only son, living in a neat, pretty little cottage, with a nice garden at the back and front. This kind widow took care of him. But he was no longer the little beggar. It would have cheered you to see him after the labors of the day, seated by her comfortable fireside, learning to read, by the kind assistance of the widow's son, while she adopted him in some measure as her own. He was now able to repay her for her kindness, and entirely support himself from the profits the basket produced; and while he kept steady and honest, he gained the esteem of those who knew him, and it is hoped did not fail to raise his heart in gratitude to the Almighty who had bestowed such blessings upon him; for we must ever remember, my dear little children, that all our blessings and comforts come from God. He it is that inclines the hearts of those who have it in their power to help the needy, the destitute, and the afflicted; and even very little children are invited in the Bible to pray to God, in the name of their Savior, to protect and bless them, and the more grateful we daily feel for past mercies, the more likely they are to be continued to us.

Talks to Boys and Girls in their Teens.

BY G. W. GREEN.

Life is said by some to be a day's journey: The poet has it "a winter's day," which means, very short. But short as it is, there may be a great many things crowded into it.

Now my young friends, I have no doubt that many of you have spent the sweet morning hours of life very pleasantly; and most of the time your dreams have been pleasant ones. I do not grudge one single drop of your pleasure; but now you are getting pretty well along in the forenoon, and it is time you begin to wake up from your dreams.

But I am aware that life does not look so very short to you, and I know also that to many of you it looks bright; but it does not matter so much how long or how short it may seem, only so that every moment of it is well improved; and as one who has traveled a little farther along this journey than you have, I think I am prepared to tell you something about the way.

Some of you may think I am trying to frighten you, by telling you that life is a failure, and that dark clouds await you, and that you will find little else that thorns for your feet, and that the few flowers you may chance to find along your paths are all delusive and will only produce thorns. If these things were so, it would seem cruel for me to tell you, and thus blast many hours of pleasure and bright hopes. But they are not so; for our heavenly Father has so wisely arranged it that our lives are made up of lights and shadows, and they are as much as we make them a perpetual seed time and harvest. The poet says:

"We are sowing the seed in the morning light;
We are sowing the seed in the noontide glare;
We are sowing the seed in the soft twilight.
We are sowing the seed in the solemn night."

What will the harvest be? The harvest will be just according to the kind of seed we sow. One of old has said, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." He had reference to sowing in this world, and reaping in the next; while I have reference, in part, to sowing and reaping in this world; and in part to reaping in the next. Now if you want a crop of thorns, you must sow thorn seed, and if you want flowers, you must sow flower seed.

But some of you will not believe this, for you will say, that the best in the world often suffer more than anybody else. It may be true that there are many suffering sons and daughters of affliction, to whom one would suppose the world really looks dark indeed; but that does not prove them to be the most unhappy people living. On the contrary, we often find the brightest and happiest faces among the suffering.

And now my young brethren and sisters, if any of you should be found among that number, if you are disciples of Christ, take courage. You have everything to hope for and nothing to fear; for of you it is said, "All things are yours." I say again, look up and take courage! Think not for a moment that you have nothing to do in making this world bright. You have your mission. Some of the sweetest flowers grow best and yield their fragrance in the shade. You can give the world a better example of patience in such circumstances, perhaps, than in any other. And it may be that your heavenly Father has other work for you, and is preparing you through patient endurance for that work.

"Though the bud may have a bitter taste,
Yet sweet will be the flower"

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be writ en upon one side of the sheet only.

To C. C. Root of Mirabile, Missouri.

Dear brother: I have just read an article in the COMPANION, to which your name is attached; and as you have called public attention to the things concerning the work of the last District Meeting of Mo., in such a way as to cast censure and reproach upon the old and young brethren and sisters who composed said meeting and approved of what was done in the fear of God, and for the honor of his name, and the good of undying souls, we ask you to answer through the COMPANION, before we undertake a public defence of our work and the truthfulness or untruthfulness of your article, the following questions:—

1. Who says the Annual Meeting forbade the publication of the labors of the district of Mo. on account of its offensiveness.

2. Who is the A. M? is it brother Brightsman, or brother H. R. Holsinger, or any other brother who gets up and makes assertions which the brotherhood assembled does not regard worthy of notice, and let go by, unreferred to? or is the work done and decided by referring to the meeting, and by silence getting their united consent the work of the A. M?

3. In what sense do you use the word offensiveness? 4. What are the things you refer to as known to be facts? 5. Who are the brethren in Missouri, that if they had been present would have put different features on the appeal, or kept it from A. M. entirely? 6. Who is the reporter you refer to, that has imposed upon us the burden you speak of in volume 8, No. 26 of the C. F. C? 7. What position do you occupy in the church?

JOHN HARSHEY.

Baptism.

I feel to kindly thank those who responded to my former request, by sending me Quinter's and Adamson's works on baptism, but Wise's work has not yet been sent

In addition to my former request, I have another to make, which I hope will receive the attention of all our members. During the last ten years a great deal of matter on the subject of trine-immersion has been published in various periodicals throughout the country, all of which, no doubt, has fallen in the hands of some of our members, who design making no particular use of it, hence I desire all who have any such articles on hand, and wish to spare them, to send them to me. Any article that has been written in favor of or against trine-immersion; any article in favor of or against the backward action, in short, every and anything that speaks about single or trine-immersion, I would be pleased to have. Any pamphlet, book or extract of these subjects will be thankfully received: it makes no difference when published or written or whom by. But in sending matter be sure and state from what it was taken. We hope that in turn our members will soon receive a full compensation for their labor.

Brother Holsinger:—My attention was drawn somewhat to an article in number 31, written by brother S.S. on the use of tobacco, as being an herb not forbidden in the word of God, and belonging to the vegetable kingdom as food for man. We cannot say that God has forbidden the use of tobacco, in the Bible, directly. That is true. The brother says, "Man may use any vegetables at the proper time and in the proper place." How shall we know what and when we may use them, and when not? God has created man, as well as all animals, with an instinct, which will deceive neither man nor animal; however, it depends much on the cultivation of this certain instinct in all creatures. The instinct of animals appears to be somewhat sharper than that of man, being exempt of reason, which man is endowed with; therefore an animal will not eat tobacco. Man judging by his own reasoning what herbs or vegetables are for food and which not, which is not so correct as the natural instinct which God has laid in all creatures in the creation.

J. LANDIS.

Dear Brother:—We send greetings to you and the brethren in your arm of the church. I will say to you, that we made a request to publish in your periodical the condition of our brother David Sink, and the brethren have responded to the request as individuals, but I don't feel willing to be responsible for all money that is sent in individual letters. We wish the brethren to send their liberality from each arm of the church, giving the name of the church, Postoffice, county and State, and it don't require so many letters. I will here give a list of the money, and names of persons sending it to me, for the benefit of brother David Sink:—

Samuel Kinsey Dayton, O., $1.00
J. F. E. Arcadia, O., $2.00.
P. P. Brumbaugh Coffee Run, Pa., $1.00.

I have another letter with 50 cents inclosed in it signed B. C. Mo., no postoffice. Please publish and oblige. Yours in love.

An Impostor—Pass him Around.

There is a man lately come into our country who wants to pass himself off as being a member of the Church of the Brethren. I heard of him being in conversation with some of the brethren not long ago, and yesterday I met with him, face to face, in Charleston. He says his name is Samuel N. Ellsworth, and that he was baptized by a brother near Bloody Run, Pa.; had a little misunderstanding with a brother there by the name of Harshbarger before he left, and they will not give him a church letter. Says he was poisoned in the time of the war, and was attended by brother Dr. Sturgess, of Indiana, with whom he studied medicine; and now he professes to be an M. D. of no small pretensions.

Says he was formerly from Botetourt county, Va. ; that his wife's maiden name was Funk, of Rockingham Co., Va., and she was baptized by brother Shriver of that county, and says she has a church letter. He is a man of slow but good address while talking, very "smooth-tongued;" something like five feet in height, hair dark but not black, beard rather light, with a slight sandy cast, nose somewhat on the roman order. When he first came to the Kanawha Valley, probably two years ago, he represented himself to be a methodist preacher, and did deceive some persons of that persuasion most woefully. His doings there, if told, would be a tale indeed! Brethren look out for the man, and don't be deceived ; for judging from his past actions, he is trying to live by deceiving others. If brethren elsewhere know him, let us hear from him, and whether his wife is really a sister in the church or not.

Brother Editor: I appear once more before you, and your many readers. As I have been confined to my bed the greater part of the time for the last year, I was not able to do any service for any one but for myself—my poor, needy soul.

My abscess which is the cause of my affliction, is improving slowly; but the dropsy is increasing. The probability is, that, if it will not cease to rise upwards to my body, it will soon close in my mortal life.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset county, Pa., August 10th of typhoid fever, brother WILLIAM HORNER; aged 47 years 4 months and 1 day. The subject of this notice was elected to the ministry in June, 1855. He however did not labor any in that office himself, but was always willing, if called upon, to accompany others in their travels; and was willing to do all he thought he could do for the spread of the gospel: very zealous for the cause, he took an active part in the general management of the Church; so that the Church is under the necessity of saying, that another one of the pillars has fallen. The community has lost one of her enterprizing citizens. The family which consists of widow, daughter and son, have been called to mourn for one that was truly kind and affectionate. Yet with all this, we think we may say we weep, not because we have no hope, but because a dear one has gone. Funeral took place on the 11th at 2 o'clock. His remains were laid by the side of his family connections, on his homestead, followed by a large concourse of people. The occasion was improved by the writer and J. W. Beer, from the words, "Thy brother shall rise again." John 11 : 23.

C. G. Lint.

In the Owl Creek congregation, Knox county, Ohio, July the 23rd, brother DANIEL BEAL, son of sister Hannah Beal; aged 18 years 9 months and 25 days. Disease, rheumatism, and heart and lung diseases. He suffered very much for the last year, and was very willing to go to his long home in heaven. Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. 14 : 13.

Henry Keller.

In the Conemaugh church, Cambria county, Pa., June the 24th, sister ESTHER BURKHART wife of brother Joseph Burkhart, of Mineral Point, aged 63 years. Funeral services by the Brethren.

Also, on the 19th of July, brother EPHRAIM BURKHART; aged 75 years 10 months and 7 days. Funeral services by the Brethren.

Stephen Hildebrand.

In Cowanshannoc church, Armstrong county, Pa., June the 24th, CATHARINE WELLS wife of brother Levi Wells, aged 59 years 3 months and 24 days. Disease, consumption. She bore her suffering to the end with patience; giving herself into the hands of the Lord, she prayed the Lord to take her out of her sufferings. Her last words were that she would look back for her friends, and acquaintances and children to do right, and follow her to glory on the other shore of the Jordan of death. The occasion was improved by brother Robert Whitacre from 2 Cor. 5 : 1.

In the Union City branch, June the 3rd, of spotted fever, JOSIAH MINNICK, son of brother Jacob and sister A. Minnick; aged 20 years 7 months and 17 days. Funeral occasion improved by Adam Brown and the writer, from the language, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee."

Also in the same church, August 6th, sister NANCY PICKET; aged 75 years 9 months, and 15 days. Funeral occasion improved from 1st Thess. 4th chapter, by William Simmons and the writer.

Thomas B. Wenrick.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in the Elkhart Valley congregation, July 19th, our beloved brother DAVID BARINGER, after a lingering illness of many months, from the effects of dyspepsia; aged 45 years six months and 3 days. He leaves a sorrowing widow and 6 children to mourn their loss. The family has lost a father; the church, a worthy member, and the community a good neighbor.

Gabriel Frame.

In the Monticello Church, White county, Ind., our beloved sister MARGARET A. YOUNG, wife of brother Franklin Young, and daughter of brother G. R. and sister S. Keever; aged 34 years and 11 days. The subject of this notice seemed to be an object of suffering, being confined to her bed for about 15 months, not able, the most of the time, to turn herself, and a great portion of the time had to lie in one position only; yet in all her suffering she was fully resigned to the will of God, waiting with patience and hope to be relieved in due time, and then to go home to her reward. Being fully weaned through God's dealings with her from earth's transitory things, she set her house in order in due time. She obeyed the apostle's injunction, by being annointed in the name of the Lord. In her young and tender years she had given herself a hand-maiden to the Lord, and continued faithful to the end. We sorrow not as those who have no hope; but are comforted by feeling assured that she has gained the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord. Her funeral was largely attended, and appropriate remarks made by brethren Samuel Myers, Isaac Hanawalt, John G. Royer and the writer.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Jesus by Sea.

Oh! I love to think of Jesus as he sat by the sea,
Where the waves were only murmuring on the strand,
When he sat within the boat
On the silver wave afloat,
While he taught the waiting people by the land!

Chorus:—
Oh, I love to think of Jesus by the sea!
Oh, I love to think of Jesus by the sea!
And I love the precious word,
Which he spake to them that heard,
While he taught the waiting people by the sea.

Oh, I love to think of Jesus as he walked upon the sea,
Where the waves were rolling fearfully and grand!
How the winds and waves were still
At the bidding of his will,
While he brought his loved disciples safe to land

Chorus:—
Oh, I love to think of Jesus by the sea!
Oh, I love to think of Jesus by the sea!
How he walked upon the wave,
His beloved ones to save,
While he brought them safely o'er the stormy sea!

Is Feet-Washing a Christian Ordinance?

I desire to notice a few points in the article under the above caption in the C. F. C. page 468 of current volume. I will notice the paragraphs in order.

1. We do not condemn any man or judge any; that is not our prerogative. I conceive it is our duty to instruct, hence these lines.

2. No objection.

3. That was an act of hospitality. True, they washed their feet themselves. All right, there was no command to wash "one another's feet."

4. Undoubtedly Matthew, Mark, and Luke were faithful disciples, and observed what Christ commanded; and as they wrote for the benefit of those who lived contemporary with themselves, they were not so very particular to mention everything; knowing that enough eye-witnesses were still living, and the ordinances attended to, as Paul says to the Corinthians: "I praise you" in this, that "you keep the ordinances as I delivered them to you." But John wrote with a special view for the benefit of the church after his demise, hence he only seems to supply such points as the other evangelists seem to have left in comparitive obscurity. For instance, feet-washing, and the time of the institution of the ordinance. You say, "If feet-washing was a command  Matthew, Mark, and Luke should at least have mentioned it." The syllogism is this:

Since four witnesses speak, whatever three of four witnesses neglect to mention is not essential; three of the four neglect to state the act of feet-washing; therefore feet-washing is no command.

Are you ready to apply this syllogism to all passages, with this form, whatever any three of the four neglect to state is untrue? But "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established," and as you admit that Paul refers to it, and I think you will acknowledge him as a competent witness, I need say no more on this paragraph.

5. As to the time before supper, we are agreed. As to the persons, the disciples—we are again agreed; and we trust all followers of Jesus are his disciples—the sisters included. As to who is responsible for admitting the sisters to to this ceremony, I know not; but it was required in Paul's time, as you yourself acknowledge. Who is responsible for admitting the sisters to the communion? Christ only gave it to the clergy; therefore, according to your reasoning, the laity have no right to be admitted.

"The seeking after rank and honor was what occasioned feet-washing." Yes, Christ wished to teach his disciples humility, and that the chief should be as he that serves. If the lesson of feet-washing was necessary to teach the disciples humility, it is now necessary; for we are just as prone to exalt ourselves as they were. else "A reader" would not take upon himself the honor to teach meek and humble disciples how to worship God by neglecting to keep the commandments. The promise—on the condition of obedience,—is, happiness. I wish to be happy, therefore I desire to obey in feet-washing.

6. Rev. 22: 18' 19 has reference to "words of the prophecy of this book." If this includes the gospel, it has reference to feet-washing; if not to the gospel, does it give license to "A Reader" to reject as much of the gospel as he pleases? Will "A Reader" answer?

Matth. 28: 20, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Christ commanded feet-washing; therefore it is included in the teachings of the apostles and Paul requires it.

7. 1 Timothy 5; 10. The widow is required to have lodged strangers, and certainly, in so doing, if necessary, furnished water according to the custom as handed down from Father Abraham, that is, she must be "given to hospitality." But more than this is required, she must be self-abased, not exalted; therefore, she must "have washed the saints' feet." Mark you, "the saints' feet," not those of strangers. In such a case she must supply water, if necessary, but in case of saints, she must wash their feet; and, as you admit, "before the supper" alluded to in Matth. 26: 17–35, Mark 14: 12–25., Luke 22: 6–7, John 13. You see clearly, therefore, that we are right.

But "A Reader" would like to reason it away as follows:

Christ had no right to establish an ordinance that had already taken form and was practiced among the people.

Feet-washing had already taken form and was practiced among the people; therefore,

Feet-washing was not instituted as an ordinance by Christ.

This syllogism is about as good as the one I heard of lately, framed by a pedobaptist, which in its second and third propositions was as follows:

"Immersion was a rite of heathen worship among the Greeks, therefore, Christ did not establish babtism by immersion."

These syllogisms would bear some resemblance to plausibility, were it not for the fact, that, if all their propositions were true, we could not consistently partake of the emblems of the blood and body of Christ since it would debar us of the right of eating and drinking in a religious capacity. You iterate and reiterate that, because of the paucity of references to the ceremony, by the inspired writers, it cannot be a command. I suppose if you would have had a hand in writing the sacred Canon it would either be very often mentioned, or not at all. Time and space admonishes me to close for the present.

Feet-Washing Sustained.

In COMPANION, volume VIII, page 428, we notice an article on the subject of feet-washing as a Christian Ordinance, written by one who christens himself "A reader of your paper," the design of which is to refute the practice of washing one another's feet as a Christian ordinance. In this article we beg leave to present a few considerations to the candid examination of a few items, which the writer above referred to has laid before the public. What may have been his object in preparing such an article for the public, we know not. It certainly was not his intention to persuade us to follow the example and command of Christ more closely in our religious ceremonies, if so, then he has simply led us to the wrong source for information. The fact of the matter is, he aims to impart to his readers reliable information on the subject of feet-washing, and does so by making use of the following language, which you will find in the eighth paragraph of his article: He says, "The scriptures do not teach feet-washing as a command." This is the decision of the writers and we will simply contrast it with the command of Christ, who says, "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet." John xiii, 14. We will let the reader determine which to obey, man or Christ. Our brethren prefer to hearken unto the voice of the good shepherd, and wash each other's feet, and do not listen to the voice of strangers, when they say that feet-washing is necessary, and therefore not profitable. The writer says, that in our eagerness to establish our adopted dogma, we fail to give its origin; and then he proceeded to say before his readers, what he calls the origin of feet-washing, by refering them to the cases of Abraham, Lot, and Joseph, where persons washed their own feet, and not each other's feet. If this is what he calls feet-washing i. e. each one wash his own feet, then will he say that it originated in the days of Abraham, and that no one ever washed his own feet before this time? Secondly, if one washing his own feet is what he calls feet-washing, then, will he be so kind as to write to his readers and tell them that HE don't practice feet-washing? Certainly he must wash his own feet, and this is the kind of feet-washing that he aims to give the origin of in his article. Does he condemn this mode of feet-washing? If he does, then he certainly condemns his own practice.

The reader will please bear in mind that there are just two modes of feet-washing under consideration: first, washing one's own feet; and secondly, washing each other's feet: the first is observed as a necessary means of cleanliness, while the second is observed as a Christian and religious rite. The first is an oriental custom, but the second never was such a custom, used as a means of cleansing. Both modes are used by the brethren; the first as a necessary means of cleansing, and the second as a Christian rite or ordinance, agreeably with the command of Christ.

The writer, like many others, has blended these two modes into one, and then gives the origin of the first, and attempts to make it appear as the origin of the second. That the first was an oriental, domestic custom, used as a means of cleansing, we frankly admit; but we positively deny, and challenge the writer to prove, that the practice of washing one another's feet was ever merely a domestic custom.

The brethren observe the practice of washing one another's feet as a Christian ordinance, and this the writer has failed to give us the origin of; he can trace it no further than to the command of Christ, whose example we follow. He condemns the brethren for practicing feet-washing as a Christian ordinance, when it was simply an oriental custom. If he means each one washing his own feet, then we positively deny the charge of the brethren ever being guilty of observing this mode of washing feet as a Christian ordinance: they use it as a means of cleansing only; but if he means the practice of washing each other's feet, then we plead guilty of obeying our Master when he said, "Ye ought to wash one another's feet." This is the very fountain head of our mode of feet-washing—directly from the lips of our own blessed Savior.

As the writer's article does not appear in a proper shape to require a regular examination from the fact that he has blended the two modes, and has failed, in an attempt to prove the origin of the second by the first, we will here present to him a few things to prove, which if properly sustained, will at once bring the subject of feet-washing into a proper shape to discuss through our periodicals.

1. Prove that the washing of one another's feet was ever an oriental custom as a means of cleansing.

2. Prove that Christ never taught his apostles to wash one another's feet.

3. Prove that the apostles never did wash one another's feet.

4. Prove that the apostles never taught feet-washing. And

5. Prove that the practice of washing one another's feet, as a religious rite, was the command of man and not of Christ.

We submit these thoughts to the candid consideration of the reader, hoping that he may have the influence of the Holy Spirit in the search of what is truthful and what erroneous.

Urbana, Ill.

The whole history of Christendom, with all its dismal tracks of darkness and blood, seems to me to show that society in Christian times has somehow or other possessed a security, a charm against utter ruin, which society before them had not; that it has been able to go through the most desperate crises, and at length throw off the evil and continue on its path, not perhaps unharmed, yet with a new chance of life: that following its course from first to last' we find in it a tough, indestructible force of resistance to decay, a continual unworn-out spring of revival, renovation, restoration, recovery, and augmented strength, which, wherever it comes from, is most marked and surprising, and which forms an essential difference between Christian society and the conditions of society before and beyond Christian influence.—*Rev. The Resurrection.

"There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." Acts 24: 15.

The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead is glorious and glad tidings to men. It is a subject from which we may deduce a theme calculated to cheer the Christian, and fill his mind with thoughts of joy and comfort—with living hope, anticipating the time when these vile bodies shall be changed and fashioned like Christ's glorious body. In reading the Holy Scriptures it seems that the very staple of the preaching of the apostles was the resurrection of the dead. They always testified concerning the resurrection of Jesus, and the consequent resurrection of the dead; and it appears that the first and last of their gospel was the testimony that Jesus Christ died and rose again from the dead, according to the Scriptures. And after Judas had betrayed his master and become apostate, the apostles chose another in his place, saying, "One must be ordained, to be a witness with us of his resurrection," so that it seems the very office of an apostle was to be a witness of the resurrection.

Peter and John were arrested and taken before the council, "because they taught the people, and preached through Jesus Christ the resurrection from the dead," Acts 4: 2, and after they were examined and set free again, it was said, "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all." Acts 4: 33.

When Paul preached among the Athenians, it was this which stirred their curiosity. "They said, he seemeth to be a setter-forth of strange gods, because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection of the dead." It was this moved the laughter of the Areopagites, when Paul spoke to them of the resurrection of the dead. "Some mocked, and others said, we will hear thee again of this matter." Truly did Paul say when he stood before the council of the Pharisees and Sadducees, "concerning the resurrection of the dead I am called in question." And equally truly did Paul assert, "If Christ be not risen from the dead then is our preaching vain, and your faith is vain, and you are yet in your sins." The apostles preached the resurrection of the dead; the gospel is full of it, and we believe it; but is it not strange that so little is said about it, in these latter days? There is not a book extant that we know of, written especially on this subject. It certainly is a doctrine that has in it comfort for the true Christian, and I am persuaded there is a power in this doctrine which is capable of moving the hearts of men, and bringing them into the subjection of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It was the apostolic fashion of preaching, and they preached with power, and were successful. Paul, classes the resurrection of the dead with the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, and is therefore truth, and will remain truth while eternal ages roll; declaring, "all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." We see then it is a gospel truth and the apostles preached it, and now what are we to understand by it? We understand from the resurrection of the dead, something very different from the immortality of the soul. The light of nature is sufficient to tell us that the soul is immortal. Before revelation was given, the heathen discovered to a certain degree that all of man is not mortal. There are some faint glimmerings in men of reason, that teach that the soul is something so wonderful that it cannot die but must endure forever. But the resurrection of the dead is quite another doctrine; dealing not with the soul, but with the body. And we understand by the resurrection that this actual body, in which I now exist, is to live with the soul. Now to take in the whole Christian world there are comparatively few who believe this. They believe, or profess to believe in the resurrection, but deny that the bodies of men will actually start up from their graves at the coming of our Lord. They suppose they will have bodies in heaven, but will be some kind of airy, fantastic bodies, instead of believing that they will be substantial bodies, even such as we have here. Our position then is that our actual bodies which die, and are enclosed in the coffin, and deposited in the grave, though they decompose and moulder back to dust, shall be reanimated, made alive, and come forth from the grave solid, substantial bodies; changed, immortal, incorruptible, spiritual, and fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body: every whit made whole from the injury or loss sustained in consequence of the fall. In support of this we will offer some scripture testimony. That God is able to raise the dead, we think all will admit. Jesus Christ while here in the world, gave proof of this truth; he raised the dead in presence of many witnesses. The young damsel, the widow's son, and Lazarus. The widow's son was already enclosed in the coffin, and on the way to the grave when Jesus met them, "And he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto you Arise. "And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak." And Lazarus was not only dead and in the coffin, but had already "lain four days in the grave" when Jesus came. Here it was that Jesus "groaned in the spirit;" here it was that "Jesus wept;" and here it was that he cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth." And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot, with grave clothes, and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, loose him and let him go." This needs no comment; God is able to raise the dead. And Christ's promise to his people is "I will raise him up at the last day,, John 6: 44. "But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits: afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. 15: 23. May we not say in the language of Paul, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?" "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." We argue that our bodies shall be raised from the grave, and not our souls. The Savior said, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." John 5: 28. We believe the body that is dead and buried in the grave, must therefore be that which "shall hear his voice," and the body "shall come forth." Math. 27: 52, 53. We read, "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the Holy City, and appeared unto many." This is plain and indisputable evidence; many bodies of the saints, and not many souls or spirits which slept, arose. The saints with their bodies "went into the Holy City" and with their bodies "appeared unto many." This was at our Savior's resurrection; and his resurrection ensures the resurrection of all the righteous. "And when he rose from the dead, he came forth from the grave with the same body that the disciples had put in the sepulchre. "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they (the women) came unto the sepulchre bringing the spices which they had prepared and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre and they entered in and found not the body of the Lord Jesus." Luke 24: 1—3. The linen clothes they found, and the napkin that was about his head they found, not lying with the linen, but wrapped together in a place by itself; but found not the body of the Lord Jesus. Death, and the grave could not hold the body of Jesus; neither can the grave always hold the bodies of the saints. Death shall give up its victim, the grave robbed of its treasure. The apostle Thomas was so incredulous in this matter that he said, "Except I see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger in the print, and thrust my hand into his side I will not believe." And did not our Savior after he rose from the dead say to Thomas "reach hither thy finger and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side and be not faithless but believing?" Thomas, seeing, believed. "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." The resurrection of the dead is a doctrine confirmed by infallible witnesses. It is a glorious Bible truth, our bodies shall live again. Salvation, oh the the joyous sound! Not only shall our souls be washed, and made white from the stains of sin of deepest dye, but our bodies shall be redeemed from death and the grave. "This corruptible must put on incorruption; and this mortal must put on immortality, and be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body." Soul and body shall be reunited, saved with an eternal salvation. "Then shall be brought to pass, the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." I. Cor. 15: 54—57.

M. J. Thomas.

Shinbone, Pa.

Is Feet-washing a Christian Ordinance?

Under this heading, a certain reader of the C. F. C. treats us to a series of objections he has for not observing feet-washing as a church ordinance. I confess, it is rather amusing to read such self-conceived productions in the face of all that God has said through the mouth of Jesus our Lord. Our reader, no doubt, confesses Christianity; or, he perhaps, like others of the same stamp, not only professes to be a Christian, but also claims to be able to show us a way unto heaven without observing what the scriptures teach. No doubt he will find numbers who are ready to give heed to his doctrine, for with some it is easier to obey man rather than God. There are so-called preachers in this world, who only preach to please man. Perhaps our "Reader" is one of them. If he is, we will notice him not often; we will allow him the pleasure of perverting God's word here, and reap the reward of it in eternity.

Again, there are others who would like to be Christians, but who, at the same time, remember that true Christianity always was, and always will be, despised before the world; so, rather than follow the earnest convictions of their hearts, they try to make the word of God comply with their standing in this world; rather than comply with the requirements of the Gospel, they work and shift around, and pick up the ideas of some great man, and, because he seemed to be a good man, follow him instead of obeying God and his word.

Not knowing who our friend is, I would advise him, first of all, to believe that which the Savior, God's own son, commanded, to be true, and if it is even found that all great men are liars. I would advise you, my friend, believe the Savior when he says, "My Father has given me a commandment what I shall do, and what I shall say, and I know that his commandment is eternal life." Now, if you are a Bible reader, as no doubt you are, you certainly will admit that feet-washing was not only commanded, but also practiced by the Lord; therefore, it must have been part of the commandment of the Father; if part of the commandment, it certainly follows it is part of the eternal life. How this corresponds so beautifully with what Jesus says, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

But you go on and contend that as Jesus only washed the feet of the twelve apostles, so, of course, none but ministers ought to practice it. When I read this, I certainly concluded that you had forgotten what the Lord says in Matthew 28: 20, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" Now, according to your own reasoning, you admit that Jesus washed the feet of the twelve, and commanded them to wash one another's feet. Thank you for this admission. Then when you come to "teaching all things," you fly the course; you say feet-washing does not belong to the "all things." Come, my friend, all means all, not only part—not only what you and others of your stamp wish to tell us it should mean. Let us be honest in the matter, it is God's word. Let us not only admit the force of it as far as it suits what we teach, or the founder of some modern church, but always believe God, though we must be wrong with all our cherished men's conceived ideas.

But feet-washing was not to be observed by the Christians, just because Matthew, Mark and Luke do not mention it. Might you not argue in the same strain? John says nothing of the bread and wine, therefore this is not to be observed. Why not take this away? Perhaps on account of the perversion it has already passed through. If that were taken away altogether, even the most ignorant would see at once that your profession would correspond better with infidelity than with Christianity. So the best to do with this is to change it from a supper to a dinner. But, to be sure, a supper is not needed; a supper means a small portion of bread and wine. Baptism means moistening the face of a child. And when we come to feet-washing, that means nothing at all. The words of a sister come home to my mind: "If there is a place to torment one set of people more than others, it certainly is prepared for those who profess to be ministers of Jesus in order to carry out the plans of Satan." Christ commanded the apostles to baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," but just because nothing is mentioned in the writings of the apostles that they baptized in the three names, therefore it is clear that they obeyed not their Lord in this. More than this, Matthew only gives us the commission in these words. As the other three Evangelists do not give us the same words, so, certainly, it is worth nothing. But, my dear friend, if you have never experienced it, let me tell you here, once commanded, for the Christian it is binding: he is willing to obey God if he only calls once. When you become a Christian—one in reality as you are now by profession—you will not ask, "Is it commanded once, or a hundred times?" All the question you will ask, is, Has the Lord commanded it? and if he has, you will then be willing to obey.

Next you argue, that just because the apostles have not made it a part of their public preaching, it could not belong to the "all things." Now, could you not reason with the same arguments, because the apostles made not part of their public preaching the taking of the cup, it did not belong to the "all things?" This, we claim, is a good proof that it (feet-washing) belonged to the "all things;" for to a Bible reading person it is clear that the "all things" have only reference to those commands the Christians were to observe after they had complied to things or commands embraced in the public preaching. The apostles were to teach the people. After they had been taught and received the truth, they were to be baptized; and after they had been baptized and consequently admitted into the Church, they were to be taught "to observe all things." Teach them, you will admit, had reference only to those then inside the church.

But you will say, "We have no evidence that the apostles ever did so." Well, I have the command in plain words; and if you think they were like some of our modern so-called Christians, you certainly have the privilege to do so. I solemnly believe they were obedient in all things, just as the Christians are in our day. But you and the apostles for settling the point.

You say, "feet-washing, practiced in connection with the breaking of the bread, is the command of men, and not of the Savior himself." How inconsistent you are! You admitted that the Lord washed their feet at the supper table, and then commanded them to do as he had done—just as the Christians do in our time—and then call it a command of men. Well, if the Savior was only a common man, we are not ready to object to your idea.

As to the balance of your objections, I fear they only have arisen in your own mind. If Jesus says to Peter, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me," and then commands the apostles to wash one another's feet, and if they would do so they would be happy, how, in the face of all this, you can say that feet-washing is not profitable, I cannot cipher out. You have never obeyed God in this, or you would not talk so. I believe God's promises, and having myself experienced that we shall be happy when we do God's will, I think I and my brethren with me can testify that you are altogether in the dark as far as feet-washing goes. You may think what you please, I hold, whatever good there was in feet-washing when Jesus washed his disciples' feet, is now in the command, and only those who will obey the command will realize it. If Peter could have no part with the Lord without complying with the wish of Jesus, I doubt very much whether those of our day have, who are not willing that he shall rule, or who will not obey his commandment.

In conclusion, I feel glad that you are a reader of the COMPANION; so there are not all hopes lost. I hope you read the word of God also. If you do, obey it, if even the founder of your adopted society does not in all things agree with it, only so you obey the Founder of the Christian Church. I hope the time will come when you will receive the word of God as your only rule of living; then all your objections to feet-washing will vanish like mist when the sun commences to rise. Then we will be brethren, and that in Christ. With this I close.

Accommodation of Texts.

There is no doctrine or duty which may not be presented by the minister of the Gospel, in plain words of Scripture, taken in their primary meaning. It implies a deficiency in the word of God, to maintain the contrary. Yet there are some preachers who are constantly employed in what is called spiritualizing the words of Scripture; that is, accommodating the histories or predictions of the sacred volume to something which (confessedly) is remote from their original meaning. A worthy clergyman informed us that he heard a young man preach from the last verse of the book of Esther, applying what is said of Mordecai, to Christ. We once fell into the track of an itinerant, whose favorite subject was the marriage of Rebekah. The ten camels were the ten commandments. When Rebekah mounted the camel, she was under the "law-work" of conviction, &c., &c. It was also our lot to hear a truly excellent discourse upon the perseverance of the saints, founded upon Gen. xii. 5, "And they went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came." We could name three several preachers, noted for their talents, who have completely wrested in like manner the words, 1 Kings xx. 40, "And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone." In this instance the application was the departure of the Holy Spirit from the soul.

It is an obvious objection to this trick, for it deserves no better name, that it corrupts the word of God, by making it a vehicle of sentiments, it was never intended to convey. The sacred oracles become a nose of wax in the hands of the expert declaimer, and a lively imagination can extract any doctrine from any phrase. Those who descend to such a practice, would more consult the dignity of the Bible, if they were entirely to forbear taking a text. They do not pretend to believe that the construction which they put upon the words in accordance with the precise "mind of the Spirit." Were they to do so, they would fall into all the enormity of the Rabbinical notion, that scriptural words have all the senses which it is possible to impose upon them. The practice is at war with the simplicity of a Christian teacher, and the plain intent of preaching. The minister of Christ is an expositor of the Scripture. His great, primary duty is to open to his hearer the meaning of the word. He fails to do so, when he makes his text the mere hook, upon which to suspend an argument or declamation.

We further object to this method of treating, or rather mal-treating a text, that it manifestly tends to produce and foster erroneous principles of interpretation. Many of those who take these liberties, are greatly opposed, in theory, to the application even of plain Old Testament types to evangelical subjects. They should remember, that the ideas of the people, as to the principles of scriptural interpretation, are derived almost solely from what they hear in the house of God. They can scarcely fail, under such preaching, to imbibe the idea, that the words of Scripture signify any thing and every thing; and in the mean time, men of judgment, accustomed to estimate evidence upon other subjects, but predisposed to undervalue religion, are disgusted with the apparent disingenuousness of such a procedure, and confirmed in their opposition to the truth. It is somewhere said by a learned man, that "our theological differences all arise from ignorance of Grammar." The remark may be made with strict truth of Biblical Interpretation. In saying these things, we are far from meaning to decry the use of types, prophecies, and parables. We only plead that they have their true interpretation given. The real source of this abuse is a hankering after strange, striking, or odd texts. The most cogent passages are those that are common. The most cogent preachers we ever heard, used simple texts. In looking over the copious list of subjects treated by Whitefield and Wesley, as recorded in their journals, we observe that they constantly preached upon the most familiar portions of the word of God.—Presbyterian. Jan. 23, 1833.

For the COMPANION.

"It is I, be not Afraid." Matth. 14: 27.

These words were used by Jesus when his disciples were afraid; for they thought they were in great danger of being lost. They were on the sea, the winds contrary, the sea boisterous; and seeing Jesus coming toward them, walking on the sea, increased their fear; but at the moment of greatest peril they recognized their Master, who called to them, saying, "It is I, be not afraid." We, the followers of Christ are, often overcome with troubles and trials. The sooner we bring our troubles before him, the sooner we are relieved of them. It is true that we sometimes feel like giving up in despair, but immediately we hear a voice, saying, "It is I, be not afraid." God always works by means, and sometimes it is not agreeable to us—that is, we have to suffer much in this life which we cannot help, because we are prone to evil and must bear chastisement. Let us then be patient, seeing that our days are few, and full of trouble; let us try to live a life of peace, and be careful to have a "thus saith the Lord" for what we undertake to do.

To the sister who wished to know why I did not let myself be heard from through the COMPANION, I would say, I can scarcely give an excuse: certainly not a very good one; but plead, too much engaged, and ask your forbearance, hoping that opportunity may be more favorable hereafter.

If we meet no more in this world may we be prepared to meet each other on the sunny banks of deliverance where we can look back to those trials we had to undergo while sojourning here in this world. May our last be sweet and our joy be great when we arrive at those happy mansions which Jesus has promised to his followers.

Yours in love.

BENJ. BENSHOFF.

You may love, you may pity, you may help one of Christ's little ones without having him before your thoughts, just as you may admire the splendor of a broken sunbeam without thinking of the orb of light; nay, more, the further he and the relationship are for the moment out of sight, the more purely and entirely the sympathy and aid spring spontaneously from seeing and admiring and loving in a suffering brother the meekness and gentleness, the patience and the devout submission which Christian faith inspires, the clearer and less doubtful the evidence that the same faith dwells in your own bosom working there like results. The charity which flows unbidden from that inwrought kindredship of disposition by which all true followers of the Lamb are characterized, waiting not, when it sees a suffering brother, to make the inference that his belonging to Christ confers upon him a title to relief,—springs not from any anticipation of reward. It flows at once out of that love to Christ, supreme, predominant, which has taken possession of the heart. And hence the explanation of the answer which the righteous are represented as making to the declaration of the judge,—the simple, natural utterance of humility and surprise: "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? when saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee? or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came to thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them "Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."— Dr. William Hanna.

Submission.

Guide not the hand of God, nor order the finger of the Almighty unto thy will and pleasure; but sit quiet in the soft showers of Providence and favorable distributions in this world, either to thyself or others. And since not only judgments have their errands, but mercies their commissions, snatch not at every favor, nor think thyself passed by if they fall upon thy neighbor. Rake not up envious displacences at things successful unto others, which the Wise Disposer of all things thinks not fit for thyself. Reconcile the events of things unto both beings, that is, of this world and the next; so will there not seem so many riddles in Providence, nor various inequalities in the dispensation of things below. If thou dost not anoint thy face, yet put not on sackcloth at the felicities of others. Repining at the good draws on rejoicing at the evils of others, and so falls into that inhuman vice for which so few languages have a name. The blessed spirits above rejoice at our happiness below; but to be glad at the evils of one another is beyond the malignity of hell, and falls not on evil spirits, who, though they rejoice at our unhappiness, take no pleasure at the afflictions of their own society or of their fellow natures. Degenerous heads! who must be fain to learn from such examples, and to be taught from the school of hell.—Sir Thomas Brown.

The Proper Definition of the Word Cure, as Applied to Medicine.

To the unprofessional, the science of medicine consists in studying the names for diseases, and prescribing remedies. People come to us to find out what ails them, and to obtain what they believe will cure them. They never consider that every case is a problem to be solved for itself, requiring special examination, due deliberation and study; and then, after all, it may embarrass the most skillful, demanding consultation to determine what is best to be done. A doctor versed in the nomenclature of his profession is always preferred to one familiar only with therapeutics, as everybody is ready to prescribe the well-known remedies for any disease, however obscure or formidable.

A morbid condition is never considered to be a modification of the natural phenomena of life,—simply a perversion of the healthy functions,—but is attributed to some noxious agent in the system, a certain something superadded, which must be removed, counteracted by appropriate medicines before health can be restored. For instance,an inflamed finger suggests the name of whitlow,and, without inquiring into the cause producing it—alike regardless, too, of constitutional peculiarity, the age, sex, habits, season, state of health, stage of inflamatory action, or what tissue may be affected, whether the skin, the cellular tissue, sheath of the tendons, or the periosteum, etc.—simply because it once did good in a case, a small fly-blister (it may be) is recommended, with the most positive assurance that, in six hours, the felon, the source of all the pain, may be taken out with the point of a needle or scalpel.

The less medicine a physician prescribes, the more unpopular he becomes; the more he trusts to the efforts of nature relieving his patients, the less will he be appreciated; and he who ventures to decide, in any case, that the best thing to be done for it is nothing at all, may as well retire from practice. Yet is the assertion most true, the older a practitioner becomes, the less confidence has he in medicines; and, as a class, it is proverbial how little the physic doctors take themselves. In a recent discourse to his church, a minister, and he holding a medical diploma, made the ungracious imputation upon us for attending calls upon the Sabbath, because, said he, such patients ought not to be indulged on that day; he says, "The doctor cannot diagnosticate a cure. He has devoted years to accumulating knowledge on the subject of curing diseases."

That this is a true discription of medicine in the estimation of the public, no one, we think will deny. The whole of our science, if they admit we have any at all, consists simply in finding out what ails the sick and then trying to cure him by remedies for his disease.

In yielding to popular prejudice, our pofession has been placed in a false position, for which we ourselves are not wholly blameless. Practitioners of medicine are looked upon as curers of diseases and healers of wounds; and if we fail—as assuredly we must, and ever will, in the nature of things—we ought not to complain that efforts too are occasionally made to hold us responsible for bad results in practice. It is certainly the interest of our patients to do so, and as the world now is estimated by a moneyed valuation, these suits must be expected. Counting, then, the number of cases of alledged mal-practice, the question naturally arises if the time has not come for us to take the true position, that one by which this unpleasantness can be prevented, sustained too, as it is, by truth, the aim of all honest men, and sanctioned by the highest of all authority—viz., that in caring for the sick we do not profess to cure them. No minister of the gospel promises to save the souls of his hearers by his preaching, or by any other human means; nor can any surgeon heal the slightest wound, without the vis medicatrix nature, or what we more familiarly term nature. If the patients have not the constitution, the power within himself, to resist morbid action, no man living can give it to him. Then why shall we assume, or encourage the prevailing opinion that we cure—we heal? Away with all false pretensions—the arrogant assumption of functions beyond the power of man; and let us be thankful that we are even humble instruments in the great and good work of promoting health and prolonging life; ever acknowledging, as we should, that it is God alone who healeth all diseases.

In this definition of the word cure as applied to medicine, it is not denied but that there are therapeutic agents much better adapted to relieve certain afflictions,or morbid conditions of the body, than are others; or that it is wrong to search after, or to engage in preparing such medicines. The great probability, however, is, that there are no specifics. Mercury, we admit, is apt to salivate; sulphur to destroy the source of the itch; atropia to dilate the pupil; acids to neutralize alkalies, and quinine to prevent chills and fever, etc., so there never can be a remedy for any one of them, and no such a thing as a cure. The world is now about six thousand years old, and does not yet acknowledge one. The offer of thousands upon thousands of francs, by Monsieur Briant, of Paris, for a cure for cholera,has not yet been awarded, and it may safely be predicted never will. For as every one is recognized by his own peculiar countenanance, so may it reasonably be inferred that he also possesses a special organization, a constitution and system sui generis, distinct and different from all others. Daily experience teaches that what is food for one man may poison another. No medicine whatever will affect any two persons precisely alike: even the number of actions from a dose of salts, the most astute physician will not venture to predict. How, then, can it be possible, from these indisputable facts, the indiosyncrasies of individuals, and variability of diseases themselves, even epidemics, to prescribe for the mere name of affections. Yet those who do this are legions, and their advertisements alone, independent of the sales of proprietary medicines, ought to be sufficient to support a pretty strong government. By the definition of the word "cure" as applied to medicine proposed and advocated by this communication, let it not be inferred that modern practice is a do nothing system. By no means; far different. It does not simply while nature cures. Knowing how little can be done when the house is in flames, we are bestowing more attention to hygiene and to the preservation of health. If it cannot cure, it obviates the necessity for resorting to too much medicine. Its master-work is the prevention of diseases, by investigation into their causes. When cholera was announced, a few years ago, to have been imported into Blackwell's Island, New York harbor, the Faculty of that city proposed to extinguish it in five days. By disinfectants, cleanliness, and putting the patients into tents etc., in three days the threatened epidemic was at an end. We are aiming, not to cure as people will insist we are but rather to extinguish the spark, to check the incipiency of attacks, to cut short, to divert morbid action. Obsta principiis is our motto, and medical sciences teaches that we do abort, jugulate, arrest, and thus control, many ills that flesh is heir to. Then, by the more chary use of the word "cure" in its application to the practice of medicine, our profession will be better understood, our patients expect less from us, we will be acting more honestly, and consequently made happier. Truth should ever be our aim, and if in error a candid confession will do us good, and it is not reflection to acknowledge that the province to cure the body, like the salvation of the soul, belongs alone to him who made them.

The Inheritance of the Meek.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Matth. 5: 5.

We will consider the above text briefly, and see whether it really means what it says. I for one, hold the idea, that it means just what is expressed in it; and we ask the readers, is there any reason that we should believe otherwise, when it pleased God to make man in the beginning, on the earth, and from the dust thereof, and gave him dominion over all the earth? (Gen. 1: 29). God created man for a noble purpose, and that was to possess the earth and to rule over all the other of God's creation in the earth. But man forfeited his dominion, by the apostasy of the first Adam, and sold himself unto sin and death; so it took a second Adam (Christ) to purchase him. Now, I understand, all those who are recovered, by the mediation of the second Adam, (Christ,) will be restored, and welcome, in the resurrection, and in the final judgment, or at the time of which Peter speaks, in the 2 epistle 3 chap., in which he sets forth a wonderful time, in which "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth also, and the works, that are therein, shall be burned up. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." At the time when this great restitution has taken place, of which God has said, "Behold I make all things new," then it is, and not until then, that the full substance of our text shall be realized, and the meek shall inherit the earth. All this must be accomplished by and through the mediatorship of this second Adam, of which John heard it said in that new song, "For thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." Hence we think our text plainly showeth to us that the earth shall be and will be the final and everlasting dwelling place and inheritance of all the meek children of King Emmanuel.

We ask the reader, is there any reason why it should not be so? We answer no; but, on the other hand, many good, and I will say, substantial reasons can be produced, from a scriptural stand-point, of which we will touch but a few among the many. First, I ask, is there any other planet or world or spot in all the universe upon which God has bestowed so much honor? What spot in the universe have the heavenly hosts regarded with interest so intense as the spot where God was manifest in the flesh? Where do we read of another spot that God so much loved, that he gave his dear, only begotten Son to make it his abode for 33 years, or over. We see that it pleased God the Father to give him a body from earth, made of a woman, or as the apostle Paul tells us, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also, himself, likewise took part of the same." Remember, dear reader, it was upon earth he assumed our nature, taught us the way of life and holiness; it was on earth he performed the numerous and wondrous miracles; it was on earth he agonized in Gethsemane's garden, and his sweat became as great drops of blood; it was on earth he died for us, and redeemed us, or, in other words, he died for our sins, arose for our justification; it was on earth he sent the Holy Spirit from his Father upon his children, to abide with them forever: it was to them, while here on earth, he said, "I go away, and come again;" it was here said to his disciples, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Hence we expect him to return again, with power and great glory, to judge both the quick and the dead at his coming and kingdom.

I have reason to believe that Jesus loved this world; and to show that he did so, saith a writer, "He has carried a portion of its dust into the presence of Deity; a glorious pledge that creation shall be redeemed from its groans and travails, of which Paul so plainly speaks Rom. 8 chapter. Also, "We," he saith," which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." Having pronounced it very good when it was first made, it shall be so again when it shall be finally restored to its primitive state. Then it shall all be very good; for the meek shall now inherit the earth, with all the glory that heaven affords: "And I John, saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband; and I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." All the above is no more than what Christ promised those that love him and keep his commandments. Him the Father loveth, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him. Brethren and sisters, take courage, and continue to pray, "Thy kingdom come." Come quickly, Lord Jesus, is the prayer of all who love his appearing.

DALE CITY, PA., Sept. 3, 1872.

Editor's Diary.

Here is the trouble again. We had thought that we would write out our journal as the days pass and note the events as they transpire, but here is Tuesday morning, August 27, and not a line written since Wednesday the 21st. This is the manner in which we got up our Editorial Correspondence during our late pilgrimage. But it was easier then; each day's experience was so different from the rest, bringing new scenes, new faces, new voices, new pleasures, that we could close our eyes and pass over them all, enumerating the most trivial of all our experiences for a fortnight past. Not so now; we have so much monotony, one day is so much like the other that we cannot separate them after they are once joined by being classed with the things that are past. Then our memory is somewhat treacherous perhaps, and then perhaps not. May be it would perform to satisfaction what should reasonably be expected of it. Any vessel will run over when it is full. To our memory we must resort for the past week, and now we will see what we remember.

After writing our remarks, &c., in last week's paper on Wednesday morning already alluded to, by the courtesy of Mr. G. L. Beachly, we were granted the use of his horse and buggy to visit the Mineral Springs, a few miles south of town. Brother Josiah Fahrney, of the medicine firm of P. Fahrney's Brothers & Co., of Waynesboro, Pa., was our companion, and Grandpap Beachly, Dr. Fahrney, Dr. Beachly, Mr. Barclay, of Pittsburg, and others belonged to the expedition. After a pleasant ride we arrived at the spot designated. It is a short distance above brother Samuel P. Miller's, and nearly opposite brother Jonas Lichty's, at the base of the mountain. Two beautiful little streams issuing from under the mountain slope, on the banks of the river, each of the capacity of filling a half-inch pipe, constitute what we would call the Twin Mineral Springs. The waters have never been analyzed, but they are manifestly strongly mineralized. This is evinced by the dregs deposited along the little streams, as also by the peculiarity of taste. It is also said to possess rare healing virtues, but we forbear farther particulars at present.

After drinking to our satisfaction of the healing water, and taking a general view of the surroundings, we concluded to visit Salisbury, in order to give our friends a general espial of the Casselman Valley. (Friend G. L. B. will accept extra thanks for this extension of our excursion.) We stopped with Bro. Wm. S. Lichty, at Salisbury, and we shall long remember the excellent repast with which sister Sadie treated our company, and the fine, large, mellow apples that were passed around after dinner. After examining brother Lichty's Furniture House, in which articles he deals very extensively, we visited the office of the Salisbury Independent. Mr. Subrie, the editor, assured us that the Independent is a fixed institution, and is in as prosperous condition as times and circumstances will permit. May prosperity attend it.

Owing to the shortness of our visit, and the fact of having strangers with us, we did not get to call upon brother Keim's, but were pleased to hear that the sister is in a fair way to recover her health. And such is still the report.

We returned via. of the Wilhelm Church, and Mechanicsburg. At the latter place we tasted the water of the Humbert Mineral Springs, referred to in a former paper. We learn that subscriptions are being circulated to raise funds pretending to be for the erection of buildings, and other improvements. We would advise the good people of the community to be upon their guard, if they value their money. If a home company of honest men would be organized, the institution might succeed, but if it is to be run by sharpers, it would be best to let them find their own money. A man belonging to the "ring" remarked to a friend of ours, on the day of the "dedication:" "We are going to make a nice thing out of this, but you need not say anything." The whole thing looks to us like a scheme intended to fleece the "Amish and the Dunkards." If they will be fleeced they must not blame us.

Of the balance of the week we have but very little recollection. We read a number of letters, and answered some of them. Of some of them we have some remembrance. For instance, one letter proposes the calling of a meeting to establish a "school among us," just as though we had no school among us. We would have him know that Salem College, at Bourbon, Indiana, is under the auspices of the Brethren, and as long as they will continue to keep it open we shall do nothing intended to injure it, although we acknowledge it is not in our estimation favorably located for a school of the kind. When the brethren having the management of Salem College, think it prudent in calling a meeting for the purpose of advancing the interests of said school or a similar one we will gladly publish such a call.

Another letter is from brother Archy Van Dyke, of Mifflin county, Pa. He expresses pleasure in the hope that we shall meet at their Love-feast, in which we heartily join him. We regret, however, that we must already entertain fears that brother Lint cannot accompany us. Who will take his place?

Brother Van Dyke also makes a suggestion in regard to our "manner of dunning our delinquents." Why, we meant never to publish a dun, and here tried to make our appeals in such a form as not to be regarded as duns. He says: "Would it not be a good plan at close of every year to publish a list of delinquents in your paper? Say: Brother A. B. you owe this office 75 cents; Brother C. D. your account is $1 50; and Brother E. F. yours is $10 00, giving the full name. Would any one think hard of that? I think not; I would not. If you adopt this plan the list of delinquents will soon shorten."

Perhaps brother V's. plan might answer, but we would be rather fearful of trying it. Some can hardly stand dunning when it means nobody, how would they endure it when they would be named out? But brethren and sisters, would it not be better for this office not to trust at all. It would appear to us that every subscriber to the COMPANION would surely have some friend at home who would lend him the small sum of a dollar and a half, that he need not ask for credit so far away from home, and of a person to whom he is a stranger? What say you, patrons? Wish you would all say hereafter we will all pay cash in advance, and have no dunning, and no insinuations either. We know it to be very unpleasant to intimate in company that some one is owing you, and should pay you. And so it must be to our subscribers. We just now believe we will adopt the cash system again, and let them who have rich friends and farms to fall back on, run the long credit system, and do the dunning, which they can do with better grace.

The following letter is here inserted entire, for want of room in the proper place:

Inasmuch as we received letters from brethren to come and visit them, when we, as a committee visit the churches in Missouri, I therefore have adopted this as the best method to say to all whom it may concern, that my presence with that committee is very doubtful at present, on account of my mother's ill health, who has been a member of my family for nearly nine years; but just as the Lord over-rules the matter, so we feel perfectly satisfied.

A Mite.

I carelessly took up a piece of paper the other day, and my eye fell on a little piece, titled "Truth and Brief." I thought it very good. I know not the author thereof, but that does not make it void of richness; so I thought to commit it to the youthful readers would not be amiss, but perhaps would make some good impression, I think it an instructive lesson for us all, both young and old.

"Anybody can soil the reputation of an individual, however pure and chaste, by uttering a suspicion that his enemies will believe and his friends never hear of. A puff of idle wind can take a million of seeds of thistles and do a work of mischief which the husbandman must labor long to undo, the floating particles being too fine to be seen, and too light to be stopped. Such are the seeds of slander, so easily sown, so difficult to be gathered up, and yet so pernicious in their fruits. The slanderer knows that many a mind will catch up the plague and become poisened by its insinuations, without ever seeking the antidote. No reputation can repute a sneer, nor any human skill prevent the mischief."

Clara's Journal.

"Mamma, will you give me a book in which I may write what I do and what I think, the same as papa does?"

"Then you wish to keep a Journal," said mamma.

"Yes, and I will let you read it every night."

The book was given, and this is what Clara wrote:

"Sunday morning. I must be very good to-day, for this is the Lord's day.

"Sunday noon. I went to Sabbath-school, and knew my lesson. The teacher gave me a nice story-book to read. Papa preached in the church. I found the text in my own little Bible, learned it, and have just said it to mamma. I have been very good.

"Sunday night. Here I am, sent to my room for being a naughty girl. I was just ready to read my Sunday-school book when I saw Lizzie biting one corner of it in her mouth. I ran to her, and said, 'Give me my book.' She would not let go, but held on it with both her hands. I was angry, and jerked it away so rudely, that it made Lizzie fall backwards on the floor, and hurt her head badly. Mamma said, 'Lizzie is your baby sister. She did not know she could not have the book. You should have coaxed her to give it up; besides, you were careless to leave it on a chair in her way.' I said the book was mine, and I had a right to take it just as I pleased.

"I shall have to stay here until mamma comes. I cannot read the book to-day. I am more sorry though to think I should have let myself get angry, and hurt dear little Lizzie, and speak in such a wrong way to mamma.

"How wicked I have been. Will God forgive me? I will ask him. I wish mamma would come. I want to have her forgive me, and let me kiss her and Lizzie. I will try to be good. I thought this noon that I was. I did not know that I should have to write to-night that I had been so wicked. I will tear this leaf out, and then I shall forget about it, and nobody will know how wicked I have been.

"Mamma has just been here. She asked to see my journal. How ashamed I felt while she was reading. I begged her to forgive me. She did, and I hope that God has also.

"'Clara,' she said, 'you thought if this leaf were destroyed, and I forgave you, you would never hear of this again. Did you forget that God is keeping a 'Book of Remembrance,' in which every act, and even every thought, is written? At the judgment-day this book will be opened, and then all the world will hear how we lived.

The Cold-Water Boy.

Behold a table, with boiled turkey and ham, with vegetables nicely cooked, and gravies rich and juicy. There sits a father at its head and the mother opposite, and guests are seated on either side; there is no lack of good humor and merry jest to give spice to conversation.

There are children, too; a boy of ten and little girl of eight. They listen intelligently and attentively to the remarks of parents and guests, and look up into the faces of one another with interest. Behold! decanters are brought in, glasses are filled, and one and another sip the sparkling wine.

"Excellent!" exclaimed one, smacking his lips. "Fine!" echoed another.

"Shall I drink wine with you, my lad?" asked one of the gentlemen, bowing to the boy.

"Is not your glass filled, William?" asked the father. "John fill William's glass" turning to the servant. Slowly did William turn up his glass to receive the rosy liquor.

"Drink with the gentleman, my dear," whispered the mother, encouragingly. The boy blushed and cast down his eyes, but he obeyed not. Was he frightened? Was he diffident?

"My son, did you not hear Mrs. Black address you?" said the father quickly and sternly. "Drink wine with him, William."

Accustomed to obey his father's slightest wish, the boy's lip quivered, but he obeyed not.

In a moment, raising his eyes and looking his father full in the face, he said, manfully, "Father, I am a soldier in the Cold-Water Army, and I can't drink wine."

"Brave boy!" exclaimed one of the gentlemen, setting down his glass.

"The Cold-Water Army must conquer if every soldier stands his ground as well," said another, regarding William with great respect.

"We will excuse you, my son," said the father, in a softened voice and though they sat long at the table, his glass was not raised to his lips. There it stood untasted and full.

Stand firm, my boys; let no one beat you from your ground. Be up and doing. Intemperance is stealing about, seeking whom it may devour. Break his weapons, destroy his engines, give him no quarter. Let your motto be, "COLD-WATER! COLD-WATER!"—Ladies' Repository

From Cawker City, Kansas.

Brother Holsinger:—Inasmuch as many of the brethren expect to come to Kansas to find homes, and I already having a number of inquiries by letter, unanswered, by your permission I will answer through the COMPANION, and hope that those who have written to me will accept this for the answer.

Mitchell county, as shown by the map, is 36 miles south of the Nebraska line, and about 225 miles west of the Missouri river. The Solomon river forms the principal water course. This stream is about 30 to 50 yards wide, with sandy bottom, giving good crossings wherever the banks will admit. The valley through which it runs, is from three to five miles wide, and is cut through by a number of small tributaries to the Solomon, along which is our best timber. The timber is scare and of poor quality, being mostly cottonwood, elm, ash, box, elder, oak, walnut, and hackberry.

The soil, we think, is the best, capable of standing severe droughts, and yet dry enough to give good roads and but little mud. The prairie, or upland has as good soil, and is much more sightly than the valley land.

The country is as healthy as any in the United States. There is no stagnant water, no ponds or sloughs to produce sickness, always a good breeze and fresh mountain air. The location we think a good one—one in which will be built one of the best towns in Kansas. Cawker City is now the U. S. Land Office, and a live business is the taking of homesteads and filings under acts of Congress.

There is plenty of government land yet to settle, mostly prairie claims, within six to ten miles on either side of the river, but none in the valley. This land is being taken very fast, and will soon all be gone. Claims can be bought in the valley, and on the prairie or upland, for from one hundred to one thousand dollars, according to improvement, location, &c.

We are starting a nursery at this place, and find trees and hedge plants grow as thrifty as we ever had them in Illinois. Our crops are good so far as harvested, and corn promises well. We have a good country for wild fruits, and see no reason why tame fruits will not grow to perfection.

Our nearest railroad is the Kansas Pacific, running 50 miles south. The Central branch road has headed this way, and is now completed one hundred miles west of Atchison, Kansas. There is a railroad from Solomon City, up the valley, and through to Denver City, Colorado. These last two roads both centre at Cawker City, and in all probability will be completed to this place inside of eighteen months.

Now brethren, you must act on your judgments as to coming. We give you the facts as correctly as we can, and believe that any one coming to Kansas cannot find a better than this Solomon Valley country. We will be glad to see you, and ask you to come to our houses and stop with us. We now live on our claim, 4½ miles east of town, but in two months more, the Lord willing, we will be in Cawker City.

Yours in brotherly love.

PETER WOLFE.

Dear Companion:—In a letter received from Miss Jemima Rarick, daughter of Jacob Rarick of Bradford, Miami Co., Ohio, (the latter being a cousin to my father,) bearing the date, May 16th, we receive the following sad intelligence:

"Last Saturday our house was entirely consumed by fire. It caught in the main building of the house, between ten and eleven A. M: supposed to have caught from the kitchen chimney, there having been no fire in the main building at the time. The wind being so strong, it was impossible to extinguish the flames. Together with the house, the milk-house, grain-house a large shed, and all the grain were destroyed. We saved but a small amount of the contents of the house. Did not save any eatables, and but very few clothes. Saved but very little bedding; but the neighbors have been so kind as to supply us, so we now have three beds. There were seven beds, besides the bed-clothes belonging to us girls, that burned, also nine bedsteads. We did not save any of the latter. My bureau and trunk, the latter containing thirty-five dollars, also my pocket-book containing five dollars, were all burned. The loss is estimated at four thousand dollars. This is a great loss to us; but thanks be to God there were no lives lost, and not any hurt. We have placed a floor in the wood-house, in which we now live. I was not at home during the fire; but perhaps it was all for the better."

We were very much surprised on the receipt of this sad intelligence, as we had received a letter from there a few days previous, bearing the welcome news that all were well and prospering. We trust to Providence that these dear friends may not be left to suffer. If they have been bereft of their earthly possessions, the Lord has been merciful in sparing their lives. The dear sister, mother of our informant, has been in delicate health for some years. Dear sister, trust in God, for he will not place a heavier burden upon us than we can bear. Our losses here work for us eternal gain beyond the swelling tides of Jordan. Let us trust in God and be faithful, even unto the end of the world.

Notes of Travel.

J. S. FLORY.

June the 29th. In company with Brother C. Masters, set out on a trip to Greenbrier Co., W. Va. A. M., meeting at brother John Martins; P. M., meeting at Hutchinson's school-house. All night at friend Hutchinson's.

Next day went to Lick Creek meeting-house, Summers Co. Our appointment and that of a Methodist circuit rider were at the same hour, and as I had an appointment at the same place in the afternoon, I gave way, and heard a man preach that we are saved by faith alone, notwithstanding James says, "By works a man is justified, and not by faith only." Preaching in the afternoon to a large and attentive congregation. All night with friend S. Martin.

Next day went to school-house near Meadow Bluff. Meeting in the afternoon. All night with brother I. Richardson. Two meetings next day at the same place, dined at brother Hibb's; all night at brother John Forren's. Much interest was manifested at the meetings.

Next day, July 3rd, meeting at the Blue Sulphur Springs. Notwithstanding it was in the height of harvest, there was a large turn-out. Two added to the church by baptism. I immediately set out to attend an appointment for afternoon at Brown's school-house. Brother Masters had gone on to same point in the morning to attend a meeting at 11 o'clock. He had a crowded house and good attention. Owing to having missed the road, I was behind time, but found a crowded house waiting patiently, and who listened attentively to the word preached. All night with friend Brown.

July 4th. Meeting at Dickison meeting-house. Home with sister Masters. Owing to my severe labors, I was quite fatigued and unwell; so I tarried with our dear sisters and the kind family until next day, when we returned to our home and found all well. Thanks to God for his goodness, and thanks to all the dear brethren, sisters and friends for their kindness.

July 27th. Took the train at the Falls of Kanawha, and went to Charleston, the capital of our state. Took dinner and supper with sister M. and Allen Haws. Meeting at night in the city, home with brother I. Starky, who, next morning, took me in his conveyance to Two-mile school-house. Good turn-out and good attention. Back again to Bro. Starkey's. Meeting in the city at 4 P. M. Home with friend Fitzgerald. At night went to hear a United Brethren preacher hold forth at the court-house. All night with friend Allen Haws.

Next day brother Starkey took me to Rose Valley school-house. Meeting A. M. Home with brother Perry, who took me at night to a school-house, several miles farther down the river. Good congregation and attention. Home with friend C. D. Ferguson, where I was kindly entertained for the night. Next morning brother Starkey took me back to Rose Valley school-house. After service, one was willing to be "buried with Christ in baptism;" so she was immersed beneath the waves of the great Kanawha; and, coming up straightway out of the water, thanked and praised God with exceeding joy. After taking some refreshments brother Perry took me to Coal's Mouth, where I expected to meet one to convey me further on; but my letter had failed to go in time, so I had to foot about 4 miles up Coal river to friend S. H. Meadows, where I was kindly received and cared for.

Next morning set out afoot and went to friend H. Belcher's. By the kindness and perseverance of Mrs. Belcher and others I succeeded in getting a horse to ride to brother Fisher's, who I found at home, and tarried with him and family until next morning, when he let me have a horse to ride to Lincoln county meeting at 4 P. M. All night at brother W. L. Stower's. Next day at 9 A. M. met at Sand Run school-house, with the members of the church, to whom we gave a kind exhortation and admonition to steadfastness. Public preaching at 11 o'clock, one precious young soul added to the fold of baptism. Meeting again at same place at 4 P. M., after which we took the parting hand from dear ones, and had an expression from some that they intended soon to unite with the church. Kindly entertained for the night at the house of friend J. S. Miles.

Next day, in company with Bro. Stowers and sister Mary Christian, returned to Bro. Fisher's, Putnam Co. Meeting in a pleasant grove, near his house, at 4 P. M. Took supper at Mrs. Alford's. Meeting at night in school-house near by. Returned to brother A. P. Fisher's. Next day, (Sunday), at 11 o'clock, meeting at Elizabeth meeting-house: large turn-out. Home with sister and friend Akin. Just after dinner went to the home of a sick friend, who had requested meeting at his house. Found a good congregation. Preached to them and then set out to attend my appointment at the Falls of Coal at early candle light. Found a good congregation, and preached my third sermon for the day. Home with friend Meadow's.

Next morning, on foot, went to Coals Mouth, or as it is now called, St. Albans; and at 10 A M. took the train for Charleston. Took dinner with brother Starky, and tarried until evening. Took supper with sister Haws, and thence to the train, and on to the Falls of Kanawha, where I found my son awaiting me with conveyance. Arrived at home August 9th, found all well. In the section of country I visited there is a great demand for the true doctrine to be preached. At some points after preaching there were not less than 9 or more applications for preaching. In the depths of my soul I was made to exclaim, Lord, what shall I do? Precious souls, begging for the bread of life and none to carry it to them! May the Lord send more laborers into this field is my prayer.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

A Wide World.

BY JENNIE HARRISON.

A wide, wide world! But a chain of gold
Winds about it and through it all;
And the Hand above keeps a sure, strong hold,
Though we miss the links, and our faith grows cold,
And our sad tears bitterly fall.

A wide, wide world!—and so many ways
And we scarcely may choose our own.
And they widen so, as we sadly gaze;
But the Hand above holds the chain of days,
And no footsteps are ever lone.

A wide, wide world!—and no mists arise,
And we lose some dear one's form from sight;
And we seek through the distance with aching eyes;
But the Hand above keeps its hold more wise,
And will bring us at last to light!

A wide, wide world!—and its eager call
Bears away from us voices dear;
And the broken strings from our life-harps fall!
But the Hand above feels the thrill of all,
And will bind them more sweet and clear.

A wide, wide world! But our hearts are brave,
As we think of the chain of gold.
Though we drop the bright links in many a grave,
We are sure of the Father's hand to save,
And to bind with its sure, strong hold!

Christian Moderation.

BY JOHN CALVIN BRIGHT.

"Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand." Phil. 4: 5.

This is the only place that the word moderation is mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. But although it is mentioned but once, the fact that we should publish it "unto all men," clearly demonstrates the important part it forms in a Christian character.

Linquists inform us that the original embraces more than moderation: it includes mildness, patience, gentleness, clemency, unwillingly to litigate or contend, and moderation. As a nutshell entirely conceals the kernel, so the original embraces all the Christian graces. And while we should let all our Christian graces be known to all men, methinks, we should give particular attention to moderation. To illustrate: zeal is a Christian grace; but if we lack moderation our zeal may be not "according to knowledge." Again, we may be humble, peaceful, gentle, and even charitable, and if we do not moderate ourselves our "good may be evil spoken of." As moderation forms a conspicuous trait in a Christian character. let us look at the meaning of the word itself.

Webster defines moderation thus: "The state of keeping a due mean between all extremes." The definition is apt, and, perhaps, is understood by all, though complied with by few. Moderation is a beautiful coloring to all the Christian graces. It occupies a prominent position in the foreground of the picture; and, from its relative position to the other graces, it presents a beautiful, artistic, instructive and beneficial view of the whole spiritual man. It is a priceless gem. The person that completely moderates himself, like Enoch, walks with God. Let your moderation be known unto all men. How?

1. In moderating our graces. This we have considered already, and a suggestion must suffice. That suggestion is this: "Esteem others better than yourself;" "Love the brotherhood;" "Keep thyself pure," and, in matters in which you have the positive law of the Lord, or direct advice of Annual meeting, leave as much room for the private judgments of others as you exercise yourself. I am a believer in self-denial. It is a Christian grace— a divine command. But I do not recognize those as true walking expositors of this grace, who take extreme ground, and in their zeal for their texts unchurch others. Their self-denial, as well as their zeal, is "not according to knowledge;" because not properly moderated.

2. In moderating our passions and appetites. Whether we eat or drink, we should do it to the glory of the Creator, to the honor of our profession, and to the good of our physical man. We should only drink wine for our stomach's sake, or for religious purposes. And we should "Flee every youthful lust," laying the cross on every passion, appetite, organ, member, faculty, and desire of the body.

3. In moderating our conversation. This is a nice point. And when we remember that we must give an account for every "idle word," and also that our religion is vain, if we do not bridle our tongues, we will consider it an important too. If you would successfully moderate your conversation, remember, "That the Lord is in heaven and thou art on the earth; therefore let thy words be few," that the "wise shall shine as stars forever;" and that a "fools mouth is his destruction."

"To all men." As far as thy influence goes let it be for good. It may not reach to the ends of the earth, or to different parts of the country; nay, it may even be circumscribed to the neighborhood, family, or social circle; but let it be for good. Do all to the glory of God; for by all means you might save some by your godly walk and chaste conversation.

"Let your moderation be known to all men." Why? "The Lord is at hand." Paul gave sufficient reason, "The Lord is at hand"—about "taking vengeance on those that know not God and obey not the gospel;" and it is necessary for our salvation that "moderation be known;" because, first, we will then have done our duty and can "Enter into the joys of our Lord;" second, others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. I had intended to notice several other points, but my article already exceeds its intended length.

When Shall These Things Be.
Matthew 24: 29.

There has been much speculation upon this subject. The word of God has been searched through and through for this devised information; but as yet it remains a mystery; for reason best known to our Father in heaven has never been revealed to us. There are some who claim to know the time, falsifying the words of our Savior when he declared, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man." Is it not strange that, in the face of this declaration, so plain, man, a poor worm of humanity, should be so presumptuous as to say he knows the time when these things shall be? There are signs spoken of in the Scriptures that are to precede his coming; and it may be that some of these signs spoken of by our Savior may have transpired; and they may yet transpire, time and again, before his coming, for ought I know. But the signs spoken of by our Lord in Matthew 24: 29, I claim, are yet to be fulfilled. My reason for believing thus, is, the manner in which I find them placed upon record. To be wise in spiritual things, is to become fools in natural, or temporal things. The plainest most simple idea which can be drawn from the word of God, I find it to be the safest. Just precisely so with the portions of Scriptures under our notice. Does the language, the manner in which this declaration is spoken, mean that those signs shall have their fulfillment generations or centuries one before the other? No, I cannot believe it. These signs are for the living and not for the dead. Some tell us that some of those signs, in Matthew 24: 29, have been fulfilled: that the sun has been darkened, the moon refused to shine, and the stars have fallen. This may be so, but where is the sign of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven? This makes it more doubtful to my mind whether the things that have transpired are the things which were predicted by Christ. When he spoke of the signs that are to precede his coming, he says, "Then shall they see," &c. When, I ask, shall they see the sign of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven? "Then." If you will have it on that great day, when those signs shall take place, "Then" and not until then, shall the Lamb of God come. My knowledge of the meaning of the word is very limited; but does the word "Then" mean, at the time when those signs will have transpired, or immediately afterwards? If there is any meaning at all in the word "Then," those signs shall be immediately after the tribulation of those days. But here is the key that unlocked the mysteries to the minds of many. This has reference to the tribulation of the Children of Israel, then we believe some here guessed pretty well. But this I cannot believe. It rather strikes me he meant the tribulation of his church. I ask the reader to refer to the sixth chapter of Rev., and examine the opening of the fifth seal; and then compare with the opening of the sixth seal. Now, according to this, there will be a bloody persecution, when the followers of King Emanual will have to lay down their lives for his sake. In like manner as those who formerly suffered for his sake. Then, when the sixth seal is opened, their tribulation shall cease, the sun, moon, and stars shall cease to shine; and when these things shall come to pass, "this know, that he is nigh, even at the door." When the sun shall be as it were blown out, and the moon shall refuse to shine, and the stars shall fall from heaven, then the wise shall understand. But oh, ungodly man and woman, terror will seize upon that poor soul of thine! for amid that awful darkness and stillness, will the King of Kings burst forth to the gaze of a terror stricken world. No need of the sun there that you might behold him; "for as the lightening cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall the Son of man be in his day." "Every eye shall see him." Oh, with what majesty and glory, and splendor will we liken this day that is to come? A new morning shall dawn; a new day shall be brought forth; and oh! shall we be the recipients of the atoning blood of Christ? Will we have on a wedding garment, that we may enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb? or shall we cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on us, and hide us from the wrath of the Lamb? for the great day of his wrath has come, and who shall be able to stand? It will be a matter of choice with us.

Why is It.

That so many of the so-called followers of Christ, surround their earthly tables, day after day, and year after year, and partake of the bountious fruits of this earth, with which God has blessed us, that our mortal bodies might partake of and be strengthened and preserved, and never once return thanks unto the Lord for that he has blessed us with a reasonable portion of health and strength, that we can surround our earthly tables, nor ask him to strengthen our souls desire for heaven and immortal glory, to forgive all our past sins, and transgressions of his law, and also to guide us in the future? Is it that we are ashamed to own our Lord and to give thanks to him? I hope not: for in Mark the 8: 38, the Savior himself says, "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed &c." Now, dear reader, let us be careful how we live while here in this sinful world; for we must all give an account of our stewardship here below. What reason have we to give, at that great and notable day of the Lord, for the non-fulfillment of what we are commanded to do in the Holy Writ? I say none, no not the least. For are we not blessed so that we can read our Bibles, of which, I dare say, every family has one or more in this our enlightened age of the world, in which we can fully see what is the duty of the followers of Christ? We are not only to attend our meetings, and communion meetings, which is but part of what we are commanded to do. We are also commanded to watch and pray, and thank the Lord for all the blessings. We have no promise that we shall receive any spiritual blessings from him, unless we ask in faith. Now my friendly readers, it becomes us, as followers of Christ, to be on our guard, and to watch and pray that we may not fall into temptations; for if we break the least command we are guilty of the whole. Therefore let us live more zealous in the laws of God. May God be with us all, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Our standard of Right.

There is not a calling of any kind, however honorable in name, that does not admit of unfair dealing and ungodly action, if the man who follows it has the inclination to practice them. There is none so humble or low that it cannot be made honorable and estimable by the integrity and perfect uprightness of those who engage in it. There is no business, either high or low, that can demand anything wrong for its legitimate pursuits; or, if that comes within range of its necessities, it is no business for a Christian to follow. Our standard of the Bible. Custom, or example of others, can never make that right which is essentially wrong, and yet custom and the example of others are two of the most insidious, irresistible and bewildering foes that ever meet us in the world.—*Olive A. Thy Husband.

"Mind'st thou the place, the spot of land,
Where Jesus did thee meet,
And how he got thy heart and hand?
Thy Husband then was sweet.

"Ah, then the garden, chamber, bank,
A vale of vision seemed;
Thy joy was full, thy heart was frank,
Thy Husband much esteemed.

"Let thy experience sweet declare,
If able to remind,
A Bochim here, a Bethel there,
Thy Husband made thee find.

"Was such a corner, such a place—
A Paradise to thee?
A Peniel, when, face to face,
Thy Husband thou did'st see?

"Then did he clear thy cloudy case,
Thy doubts and fears destroy,
And in thy Spirit sealed, he was,
Thy Husband with great joy.

"Whate'er—thou found'st him at thy best,
He's at thy worst the same,
And in his love will ever rest,
Thy Husband holds his claim.

"Let Faith these visits keep in store,
Tho' sense the pleasure miss,
The God of Bethel, as before,
Thy Husband always is.

"In measuring his approaches kind,
And timing his descents
In free and sov'reign ways thou'lt find
Thy Husband thee prevents.

"Preser'be not to him in thy heart
He's infinitely wise;
Yet, when he throws his living dart,
Thy Husband does surprise.

"Perhaps a sudden gale the blest
When walking in the road
Or in a journey, ere thou wist
Thy Husband look'd thee broad.

"Say not, he's gone forever, tho'
His visit he adjourn:
For yet a little while, and, lo,
Thy Husband will return."

Dark Clouds Disperse.

Long did the clouds and darkness roll
Around my troubled breast;
No starlight shone upon my soul,
My footsteps found no rest.
To human help I looked around,
But vainly sought relief;
No balm of Gilead I found,
No healing for my grief.

Then to the Savior, "Help!" I cried:
He list'ning, heard my prayer.
I saw his wounded hands and side,
And felt that hope was there.
He guides me in the better way;
He makes my footsteps strong;
The gloomy night is changed to day,
And sadness changed to song.

Then oh, how long shall I delight
In mem'ries of that day,
In which the shades of mental night
So quickly passed away?
How long around my darkened view,
Those ling'ring shadows twined;
Until the gospel, breaking through,
Did chase them from my mind.

There then was bright in ev'rything,
And all then seemed in bliss;
Trees gently waved, and birds did sing,
Full of their happiness.
Rich beauty in the woods shone forth,
The same did flowers display;
And then my glorious Maker's worth
Beamed forth with matchless ray.

Then oh, how long shall I delight
In mem'ry of that day,
In which the shades of mental night
So quickly passed away?
Oh, then my everlasting light,
On whom my hopes rely;
With thee the darkest path is bright,
And fears and sorrows die.

Lifting up of the Son of Man.

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." John 3: 14.

When we peruse Numbers, 21st chapter, we find that the people became so sinful that they spoke against God and against Moses, "Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, neither is there any water; and our soul loatheth this light bread. And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died. Therefore the people came to Moses and said, we have sinned; for we have spoken against the Lord, and against thee; pray unto the Lord that he take away the serpent from us."

Wonderful, indeed, it must have been at that time, when they were bitten of those fiery serpents! And there they had to die; because there was no physician that could cure that wound. There they were left. But they told Moses to pray unto the Lord. "And Moses prayed for the people. And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole; and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole; and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived."

Thus you can see, that there is only one to whom is given all power in heaven and on earth. It must have been awful at that time, when here and there one was bitten of a fiery serpent, crying in pain for help, and asking Moses to pray to God for help, because there was no physician could heal them, under the wide canopy of heaven, until God told Moses what to do. There we can at once see that no one could accomplish that healing except God himself. Hence all those that were stung by the fiery serpent, were restored by looking up to the brazen serpent. "As Moses lifted up the serpent, * * * so must the Son of man be lifted up." He shows reason why he descended from heaven, that he might be lifted up, crucified, for the salvation of mankind, and be, by the appointment of God, as a certain remedy for sinful souls, as the brazen serpent elevated on a pole, Numbers 21: 9, was for the bodies of the Israelites which had been bitten by the fiery serpent in the wilderness.

It does not appear to me, that the brazen serpent was ever intended to be considered as a type of Christ. It is possible to draw likenesses and resemblances out of anything; but, in such matters as these, we should take heed that we go no farther than we can Say, Thus it is written. Among the Jews the brazen serpent was considered a type of the resurrection: through it the dying lived; and so, by the voice of God, they that were dead shall be raised to life. As the serpent was raised up, so shall Christ be lifted up; referring to the crucifixion.

We shall now proceed to show why Christ was lifted up. In the first place we find that God made man, and created them good—made them in the likeness of his own glorious image, and placed them in the garden of Eden, in order to keep and to dress it. And there was a law given to them, that they might eat of all the trees that were in the garden, except of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, they were not to eat. But they ate of the forbidden fruit, they violated the laws of their Maker, consequently they had to leave that earthly Paradise, and a flaming sword was put to the entrance to prevent them from again entering and partaking of the tree of life and living forever. There they were left in their lost condition. They and their children all bore the same image, which is earthy. There were no means whereby man could be made perfect. The law that was given by Moses could not make the comers thereunto perfect; for it was impossible that the blood of bulls and of goats could take away sin. In such offerings and sacrifices, I have no pleasure, saith the Lord. The law was only a shadow of good things to come; therefore the whole human family was under the curse of a broken law. No sacrifice could pay the debt, until God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son from the shining courts of heaven, to die the ignominious death on the cross, on Calvary's heights, to redeem fallen humanity from the curse resting upon the human family through the transgression of Adam, placing man, as a free, moral agent, in relation to God. For this purpose was the Son of man lifted up as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness; because no other sacrifice could pay the debt. When the whole intelligent creation had been brought forth to the altar of Divine Justice, and when every nerve and every heart had received the infliction of divine fury, until one deep and universal groan had rolled its unutterable woe to the throne of grace, the whole would have been a worthless sacrifice. O my dear friend, think of the love of Jesus! Our sins were in that load that crushed the heart of meek and lowly Lamb of God. He laid aside his stary crown, and forsook the glories of heaven to die, the just for the unjust, to open unto us a new and living way. So sacrifice was made for sin. Now salvation is free to all upon conditions of obedience to his holy will. Sin must be an indescribable evil, when it required no less a sacrifice to make atonement for it than God manifested in the flesh. But Jesus paid it all; hence all are bidden to come and partake of that glorious feast, which has been purchased with such a great price. Such a love as that which induced God to give his only begotten Son to die for the world, could not be described. Jesus Christ does not attempt it. He has put an eternity of meaning in the particle "so," and left a subject for everlasting contemplation, wonder, and praise, to angels and to men.

The same evangelist uses a similar mode of expression, (1 Epistle 3: 1,) "Behold, what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us." He gave his Son to die for us sinners. If you desire salvation, I would advise you to go to the Lord Jesus Christ, and look, with an eye of faith, to the cross, and you shall be healed. As they who were stung by the fiery serpent were restored by looking up to the brazen serpent, so those who are infected with, and dying through sin, are healed and saved by looking up to, and believing in Christ crucified. Therefore, look right to the cross; survey that sufferer; and as you gaze upon the scene of agony, tell me do not those death groans speak to your heart? Do they not tell you of a doom, and the dreadful end to which you must come, if you do not turn from your evil way and seek peace in the bloody wounds of a crucified Redeemer? Behold him on the rugged tree! See the blood and water flowing out of the wounded side of the dying Jesus! Here is the well of salvation. He is ever ready to apply the balm of Gilead to your sin-sick souls. His healing balm is as illimitable to-day as it was eighteen hundred years ago.

"Sinner turn, why will you die?
God, your Maker, asks you Why?"

Yours fraternally.

Thoughts.

We ascend to God by descending. We come down from our lofty flights; our exalted mind must be humbled; we must stoop and kiss the cross, that we may ascend to God; and thus, by coming down, we go up: "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

We rise by falling. He that falleth upon the "Rock," (Christ) shall be broken—shall be fitted and prepared for the indwelling of the Son of God; and thus, by falling at the feet of sovereign mercy, we may rise to the upper regions of light and glory.

We live by dying. We die to the world, to sin, and to self and are thus made alive to God, to Christ, and to heavenly glory.

We win by losing. We forsake all, give up all, and count all loss, that we might win Christ—lose vain and sinful pleasures, that we might win joy unspeakable—lose worldly honor and fame, that we might win a new name, inscribed in a "white stone," and win glory, honor, and immortality, and a mansion in the New Jerusalem.

Truly salvation is a matter marvelous in our eyes, when we consider that we ascend by descending: rise, by falling; live by dying; and win, by losing. Glory to God for such blessings through Jesus Christ our Lord.

J. S. FLORY.

Satisfaction.

Leaving religion out of the case, men are divided in their opinions, whether our pleasures over-balance our pains; and whether it be, or be not eligible to live in this world. And were all such controversies settled, which perhaps, in speculation, would be found involved in great difficulties; and were it determined, upon the evidence of reason, as nature has determined it to our hands, that life is to be preserved; yet still the rules which God has been pleased to afford us, for escaping the miseries of it, and obtaining its satisfactions,—the rules for instance, of preserving health, and recovering it when lost,—are not only fallible and precarious, but very far from being exact. Nor are we informed by nature in future contingencies and accidents, so as to render it at all certain what is the best method of managing our affairs. What will be the success of our temporal pursuits in the common sense of the word success, is highly doubtful. And what will be the success of them, in the proper sense of the word, i. e., what happiness or enjoyment we shall obtain by them, is doubtful in a much higher degree. Indeed, the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence with which we are obliged to take up in the daily course of life, is scarce to be expressed. Yet men do not throw away life, or disregard the interests of it, upon account of this doubtfulness. The evidence of religion, then, being admitted real, these who object against it as not satisfactory, i. e., as not being what they wish it, plainly forget the very condition of our being; for satisfaction, in this sense, does not belong to such a creature as man.—Bishop Butler.

The Barren Fig Tree.

"A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard: and he came and sought fruit thereon and found none. Then said he unto the dresser of the vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and found none: cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it; and if it bear fruit, well; and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down." Luke 13: 6—9.

"He spake also this parable." The Lord Jesus Christ, when addressing himself unto the children of men, very frequently spake unto them by parables, and this he would do to be the better understood. In his parables, he would refer them to such things as would daily come under their observation. Thus, upon the occasion under consideration, he made use of the words alluded to above, "A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard." A fig tree is naturally a fruitful, productive tree; but this one was taken out of its native soil, and was planted into the vineyard. It was under the special care of the dresser of the vineyard. It was planted among the most tender vines, where the soil was made rich and fat by the lord of the vineyard. It was enclosed with a hedge, where all the proper care and attention necessary for its prosperity were given it. Yet, notwithstanding all the labor and attention given it by the dresser of the vineyard, it was barren, unfruitful. The lord of the vineyard comes along, and here, in the best of the soil, finds a tree without fruit. Again he comes, and no fruit. He supposes that by another year, under more favorable circumstances, it may still bring forth fruit. He comes along again, but still no fruit; and that under the most favorable circumstances. "I still find this tree barren!" He begins to view it more circumspectly. He goes all around it; examines it from root to branch; but he can find no cause for its non-productiveness. All other trees around it have fruit. He then seeks the dresser of the vineyard. He hails him thus, "Behold, these three years have I found a certain fig tree in my vineyard, without fruit. It is barren. Bring hither the axe and cut it down. I shall suffer it no longer. It is a cumberer of the ground. Let some other tree grow in its place. Away with it to the rubbish heap; burn it." But here the dresser of the vineyard intercedes, "'Lord, let it alone this year also,' let me try every means. Let it stand another year—only another year—'till I dig about, and dung it.' It may be earth-bound; let me remove some of the earth around it. Let me apply the most productive fertilizers. I will give it more special attention; it wants some pruning; it has too much top, &c.; "And if it bear, well, and if not, then after that, thou shall cut it down.'"

Dear reader, let me call your special attention to the text under consideration. "A certain man." This certain man we will understand to be the Father in heaven; the vineyard, the church'; the fig tree, a member of the church, and the dresser of the vineyard, the Lord Jesus Christ, our adorable Redeemer, the mediator between God and man. Dear brethren and sisters, the Lord seeks for fruit; he takes a view of his vineyard, to see whether all the trees of the vineyard, (members of the church) are producing their fruit in their season; to see whether we are living members of the body of Christ, whether we are prayerfully and faithfully engaged in the Master's service. But, alas! he finds one in the vineyard, in the Church, right among the children of God, that is barren; yea, unfruitful, unproductive: no fruit, at least none to his liking—none fit for the Master's use. He comes again: yet still all the same, no fruit is found. Brethren, he seeks for fruit. Nothing short of fruit will answer. He seeks for fruit in your daily walk and conduct, in your dealings with your fellow-men, in your closet, in your families, in all your doings, whether at home or abroad, whether you are a private member or an officer in the church, it is fruit he is seeking. The Lord is seeking fruit. You cannot evade it, neither can you deceive him. Fruit he will have; at least he will demand it of you, and hold you accountable for it. You are in the Lord's vineyard, (the church). You have had special training, and yet no fruit. You are no better than one outside of the vineyard, although you have made an open profession, before God and man, that you would be faithful until death. And what are you? Nothing but a tinkling cymbal and a sounding brass, a faithless professor, having the name of being a Christian, but instead of that, you are a mere hypocrite, 'Having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof. "Such professors are a hinderance to the cause of Christ, a stumbling-block and a rock of offence." "From such turn away." The lord of the vineyard now calls for the dresser of the vineyard. "Behold, I have found such a one in the church, among my people, bringing forthno fruit. I am done with him, he is the same wicked one that he always was. I have tried him once and again; there is no change in him for the better, but for the worse. It is no use to bear with him any longer. He is a hinderance to the cause. Remove him out of the church. Bring hither the axe,(justice,) cut him down, fell him to the ground." But here the dresser of the vineyard, the meditator, comes and intercedes in his behalf. He witholds the axe, pleads with justice: "'Let it alone this year also;" spare him another year; let me make another effort, till I dig about it and dung it. He may be earth-bound; let me remove some of the earth,(of this world's goods) from him; let me blight his expectations in this or that way; let me relieve him of some of his wealth or honor, or whatever it may be that holds him; let me apply some rich manure; let me apply the pruning-knife and lop off some of his limbs; let me send death into his family and take away some near and dear ones, 'till I dig about him.' Let me apply every possible means of grace; by so doing I may peradventure make an impression upon him that may bring about a reformation. Let me place him under the most favorable circumstances, (the rod of affliction,) in order to arouse him to a sense of his eternal destiny. O Father, withold the axe a little longer, only another year, another season of grace, only one more effort. He may have some favorite idol about him, let me yet remove that idol from him, whether it be wealth, or honor, or health, or friends, father or mother, or wife or children, &c. 'If any man come to me and hate, (forsake,) not father, mother, wife, children, brothers, sisters,' &c. Luke 14: 26; and if it bear fruit, well; and if not, then, after that thou shalt cut it down. If all my entreaties fail; if all my labor and pains avail nothing; if all is in vain, then I shall withold justice no longer; cut him down, away with him, 'my spirit shall not always strive with men.'"

My dear brethren, we that profess to be the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the meek and lowly Lamb of God, let us now, before we dismiss the subject, each of us examine ourselves; let us see how the matter stands between us and our God; let us come right home unto our own selves. Let each of us ask and answer the following questions: Have I come out from among the world? Have I denied myself of all ungodliness? of the lust of the flesh, of the lust of the eye, and of the pride of life? In short, have we denied ourselves of all the sinful pleasures of the world, no matter of what shape or form soever they may be? Everything sinful must be avoided. And then let us do as the poor blind man did; after the Savior had restored him his sight, he "followed Jesus in the way." Let us then take heed unto these things. Let us all be fruit-bearing, living members of the body of Christ. Unless we are such, we are barren and unfruitful, and must be cut down, and have our portion with the unbelievers.

Before dismissing this already too lengthy essay, I would merely drop a hint or two to those who are yet outside of the vineyard. Do not presume my dear, outside friends, that you will be exempt at the great and coming day of judgment, because you are no members of the church. This will avail you nothing. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" You have been invited, yea entreated again and again, to come to Christ and be saved upon the easy terms of the gospel. But you persistently refused to come. You loved sin more than you loved God. You have been trying to frame excuses. You have, like Agrippa, been almost persuaded to come unto Christ, yet you are still standing outside, revelling in sin and folly. If you die in your sins, where God is you can never come. I bid you, in Christ's stead, to delay no longer. Come to-day, to-morrow may find you in eternity—to-morrow may never come to you. What then are you waiting for? Is it for a more convenient season? That season never came for Felix, and it may never come for you. Then, O dear sinner, hear the voice of the poet,

"Come ye sinners poor and needy,
Weak and wounded, sick and sore;
Jesus ready stands to save you,
Full of pity love and power."
He is able, he is able,
He is willing, doubt no more.

Farewell.

Progress.

The educated men, above all men, should see and constantly remember that progress in the intellectual world does not imply the discovery of truth absolutely new; of the truth of which the human mind never had even an intimation before, and which came into it by a mortal leap, abrupt and startling, without antecedents and without promotion. This would be rather of the nature of a Divine revelation than of a human discovery. A revelation from God is different in kind from a discovery of the human reason. It comes down from another sphere, from another mind, than that of man; and although it is conformed to the wants of the human race, can by no means be regarded as a natural development of it; as a merely historical process, like the origination of a new form of government, or a new school of philosophy. A discovery of the human mind, on the contrary, is to be regarded as the pure, spontaneous product of the human mind; as one fold in its unfolding. It follows, consequently, that progress in human knowledge, progress in the development of human reason, does not imply the origination of truth absolutely and in all respects unknown before. The human mind has presentiments, dim intimations, which thicken all along the track of human history like the hazy belt of the galaxy among the clear, sparkling, mapped stars. These presentiments are a species and a grade of knowledge.—Dr. W. G. T. Shedd.

"They Say" is a Nuisance.

He is forever making mischief. Forever poking his nose into somebody's business. Forever villifying somebody's character. Forever doing something [illegible] and the fire flashes.

"They Say" is a snake in the grass professing the warmest friendship to your face, but vilely traduces you behind your back—not in the first person usually, but it remembered, for he is too crafty for that, but he retails, with Asiatic blood-like sorrow, what other people say of you—in short, what "They Say?"

"They Say" is a humbug. Tear off the hypocritical mask he wears, and you see very often, badness and knavery of the blackest kind. Sometimes we admit, "They Say" is weak minded and slanders people more through ignorance and thoughtlessness, than a wish to destroy their good name, but he is none the less a nuisance for that and God help his victim in either case.

If there be, as there have been in other times and in other countries, those who are hovering around the foot steps of the great, either for their own selfish end or from mere weakness and complaisance, or from mere vanity of vanities, strive to serve them by smoothing the path to sin, by making a mock at goodness, by hiding the unwelcome truth or repeating the welcome falsehood; if there be any who, under the guise of friends, play the part of tempter and evil counsellor, who lie in wait for every occasion to flatter, to indulge and to corrupt; if there be any such anywhere, these, far more than wild fanatics or the feeble parasites of the multitude,—these are the real traitors, the real enemies of sovereign, prince, and people all alike.—Thanksgiving Discourse of Dean Stanley.

Kingsley says: "If you wish to be miserable, you must think about yourself; about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you, what people think of you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose."

We want more of the Bible in our church life; its knowledge, spirit, and power! Its well-springs of salvation impart a robustness to us spiritually we cannot do without. The church is not lying in hospital for souls whose invalided corps must be treated to the tidbits of delicated fancy, and sentiment, and rhetorical clap-trap.

For the COMPANION.

Is Feet-Washing a Christian Ordinance?—Answered.

In No. 32, of the present volume of the COMPANION, is a communication, in which the writer tries to prove the negative of the above question, or, in other words, that Jesus did not intend his followers should obey him when he said, "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet."

An ordinance is "a rule established by authority;" and if the Brethren believe the authority of Christ high enough to institute, and his words above quoted, emphatic enough to constitute a rule, law or command, who has a right to call their obedience in question? It matters not whether entertainers wash the feet of their guests, or the rite is practiced at love-feasts, if it is done in obedience to our Lord and Master, in accordance with his example, and in the spirit which it inculcates, it is a Christian ordinance.

There is not an instance on record in the Old Testament, in which any one, even a servant, washed the feet of another, and our friend in making his quotations to prove that the orientals had water brought for the cleansing of their guest's feet, forgot to state the significant fact, that in every case he cited, each one washed his own feet. The example of Jesus then was entirely new; which is further proved by the very emphatic demeanor of Peter.

Man by nature is proud, and ambitious of greatness and power. To curb this propensity in his people, Christ gave them a rite which teaches condescension, humility and spiritual equality. At the very table from which he arose to wash the feet of his disciples, and among "the twelve," there was a manifestation of that "lofty spirit," which urges its possessor to be "the greatest," and which, no doubt, caused Satan to "fall" from his first estate. "And there was strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." Luke 22: 24. Take in connection with this passage the words of Jesus immediately following it, and we see the significance and force of the ordinance in question. "He that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger, and he that is chief, as he that doth serve." Luke 22: 26. To further illustrate the intention of our Lord in giving his church this rite, we will quote his words to the disciples at the time of its institution. "Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well; for so I am. If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily I say unto you, the servant is not greater than his lord, neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him. If ye know these things; happay are ye if ye do them." John 13: 13—17.

If man no longer possessed the proud, haughty, and ambitious spirit which was in the hearts of "the twelve," then indeed might feet-washing become obsolete; but it is just as requisite now to keep that all pervading tendency to aristocracy down, as it was in the times of the primitive church, when widows were required to practice this ordinance, or be cut off from the charities bestowed upon their class. By the way, this casual mention by the apostle of the duty of washing the saint's feet being enjoined upon widows, proves all that our friend has been trying to disprove—that feet-washing was and consequently is a Christian ordinance. Of course if the Brethren become proud, and create a caste in the shape of a diplomated, hireling ministry, having ambitious hearts and "itching palms," specious reasoning, such as our friend uses, will have great weight, and no doubt cause the abandonment of the humbling rite in question. God has however not, since the foundation of his Church, left himself without a witness in this matter, and, hence, we infer that from the ruins of the Brotherhood would spring up an humble people, having a free ministry, who would teach and practice all things whatsoever Jesus commanded.

Rest for the People.

"There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God." Hebrews 4: 9.

Brethren and sisters, is not this a great consolation for us, to know that, if we hold out faithful, acquit ourselves while in this life, we can, when time shall be no more with us here, enter into that rest prepared for all the faithful children of God. "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." There was a rest promised to the children of Israel, by obediance to God's word. The apostle tells us that, on account of unbelief, they could not enter. "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief." As there is such a glorious, heavenly rest, and many through unbelief have lost it, let us give all dilligence, by faith and obedience, to secure it. Oh, how sweet will be that rest to the weary soul when done toiling and laboring in the vineyard of the Lord! But while the children of God are traveling on that narrow path of self-denial, they meet with a great many difficulties. Sometimes a dark cloud overshadows our path, that we almost think this little ship of ours will sink; but the Savior tells us in the 14th chapter of John, "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions."

In passing through sorrow and affliction, we must not lose sight of our blessed Master, who has gone before us, and is now at the right hand of the Father interceeding for his children. And while we are then advancing towards our journey's end, we can with an eye of faith, as from Pisgah's top, look a little beyond the stream of death, to that glorious inheritance of the children of God, as Moses was permitted, before he died, to view that Holy Land. Brethren and sisters, let us still press forward toward the prize, until we arrive at the gate of the Celestial City, where we can join with those gone before.

It is not because the word went out eighteen hundred years ago, "Forsake of the assembling of yourselves together," that I desire to be united with others in Christian life. It is because my heart calls out for other hearts that are congenial to it. It is because every one who has learned to love Christ truly loves his brother, and longs for fellowship with his brother.—Beecher.

Mary.

"Speak low to me, my Savior,
With tender words and sweet;
Speak to the crushed and bleeding heart
Of Mary at thy feet.
Thou hast lingered long, too long away,"
The weeping mourner cried;
"O Son of God! hadst thou been here,
My brother had not died."

"Canst thou believe?" the Savior said,
In thrilling tones and low;
The mourner lifts her tearful head,
Her eyes with rapture glow.
"Lord, I believe! All power is thine:
Let every doubt be gone,
'Tis mercy breaks the door of death
When faith rolls back the stone."

Making Friends.

He that would have friends must show himself friendly. Scarce one of us but has a weak point that may be ridiculed, a fault that may be censured, an infirmity that may betray us into vice or unworthiness. Not one of us but needs a friend to supplement our defects, to reflect the lustre of our virtues, to help us in being true to what is noblest in us and of absolute worth in itself. There are unhappy persons who exist only upon the frailties and vices and mistakes of their fellow creatures. To them conversation is insipid unless spiced with scandal; jokes are meaningless if some one's feelings are not hurt; a moral is valueless unless pointed by the delinquency of some hapless mortal.

There are those also whose mission on earth is peace. Evermore they bear with them the mantle of charity, and with its ample folds cover the unfortunate, the weak, the erring. They know full well that "every human heart is human," that every soul needs sympathy, forbearance, affection, that all men are equally precious to God, since He has made of one blood all flesh. If words of commendation fail, they keep silence; if censure must be pronounced, mercy is mingled with justice; to the returning prodigal they give welcome, to the repentant criminal words of cheer and hope.

Only shallow observers of human nature ridicule its weaknesses, and like ghouls feast on its vices. He who looks deepest into the throbbing floods of humanity that surge around us is most profoundly pitiful; he sees under all the disguises of fortune in every man, in every woman a possible angel, and his approaches are made on the angel side.

The great fault with most of us is, that we act on the defensive. Instead of making advances ourselves, we wait for others to make advances to us. Said one of the wisest of our American philosophers to a friend who was rather fond of holding up to laughter the foibles of his acquaintances, "William, if you make a friend every day, in three years you will have a thousand friends. If you make an enemy every day, in three years you will have a thousand enemies. A man with a thousand enemies will be likely to get tripped in his way through life by some one of them, and I would rather have a thousand friends than a thousand enemies." Is not this instruction worth taking to heart? How happy the reflection, when one draws the drapery of his couch about him each night, "To-day I have won a friend, or I have bound in closer ties one already mine." Full of divinest philosophy as of heavenly charity is that utterance of the Savior, "Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God." The field of their operation is as broad as the world; there is work for them to do in every family, in every social circle, in every church, in every neighborhood. Let those who are inclined to sing

"Ah! what is friendship but a name,
A charm that lulls to sleep?"

let them apply themselves to the delightful task of winning friends by encouraging the distrustful, by cheering the sad, by raising the downfallen, by sympathy with the aspiring, and thus bind to their hearts the hearts of those about them. They will find that in loving the Supreme Good they are indissolubly joined with all the noble and the true, and friendships thus based must exist parallel with the existence of the soul and of its Maker.

Improvement of Time and Talents.

Could every person at the age of thirty years have his time to live over again, many of us would, perhaps, pursue a different course. When we look back and reflect on the time we have lost, the opportunities we have neglected for improving our minds, the talents we have, in some instances, worse than wasted, we can see how much more useful and intelligent we might have been. Could young persons be led to believe how much they might gain in a few years by dilligence in their studies, perseverance in forming good habits and principles, and correct taste, how much more happiness they might enjoy. With a great many it seems their chief aim and desire is to take pleasure and enjoy themselves. They never reflect that true happiness consists in being useful, or that more heartfelt and sincere pleasure can be received in gaining knowledge, which will be of use to them in after life. If our minds were trained to think deeply, and observe closely the actions of men and the works of nature and art, and the wisdom of God, we would find enough to instruct and amuse us; and if, instead of idling our time and wasting our talents, we would try to improve them by pursuing whatever course we seemed best fitted for, in old age we would never have to look back with regret upon a misspent youth. Let us take, for instance, a man who has no particular avocation to follow, and whose education has been neglected, whose mind seems to be dull and stupid: he is not capable, and does not understand the deep and heartfelt pleasure of the man who is constantly trying to improve his mind and talents. There are very many who are plodding their way through life, who seem to have no higher aim than to get their daily bread, and care not whether it comes through industry or not, provided they get it. Such men are of no use to themselves nor anybody else. See the youth who has a mind and heart ready to receive instruction and wisdom, and who tries to improve his talents by industry and perseverance. Such a one will be useful to himself and others, and will be likely to gain a place of honor and trust.

Christian Family Companion

DALE CITY, PA., Sept. 01, 1872.

Editor's Diary.

SATURDAY, 31st. Wife and I went on a visit to Addison, more commonly called Niger Mountain, one of our appointments where we had not yet served. Lodged at brother John Peck's, one of the oldest citizens of the neighborhood. Several of the children are members of the church, and all seem to dwell together in love and harmony, making their home equally pleasant to themselves and their guests.

SUNDAY, SEPT., 1st. Preached at the school-house, at half past ten o'clock. The brethren have at interest and a pretty large interest in the house, and so it is a little larger than ordinary. Had a respectable congregation and good attention. Made the acquaintance of some of the brethren whom we had not met before.

Returned home in the afternoon, after a pleasant ride, notwithstanding the roughness of the mountain. We are indebted to brother Joseph Lentz, for the use of his horse and buggy, and for which we return thanks.

In the evening brother Beer preached to us from the words "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of life." He proposed that we must come to Christ, and thought that upon that proposition we could all agree.

2nd: That to be able to come to Christ we must know where to find him. He had promised to be with his people, his church, even to the end of the world. But there are some six hundred different sects of people in the world, each claiming to be the church of God, and so the question arises "to whom shall we go."

His second proposition was, it makes no difference to which of them you attach yourself, only so you obey the word of God. This he thought very liberal, but he would be even more liberal, and allow that it made no difference whether you belonged to any of them, only so you would do the will of God, for that was what the scriptures demanded; that would make a true Christian. For our Savior teaches: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Saying Lord, Lord, was not disfavored, but the not doing the will of him whom we call Lord.

A young man, taking the world for himself, wishes to become a good scholar, a useful citizen. He selects the practice of medicine for his vocation. There are many institutions in the country where Pharmacy, Physiology, Anatomy, and all the branches are taught, a knowledge of which is necessary to a successful physician. And it makes no difference to which of them he goes, only so he obtains a thorough knowledge of the branches of study required by his profession. But we all know that it does make a great deal of difference to what institution he attaches himself, in order that he may obtain a thorough knowledge of those essential branches of science, for all institutions do not teach them thoroughly. And so his third proposition would be: It does matter to whom we go, to which of these bodies we attach ourselves, for some of them will not afford you the opportunity of obeying God, and some even would not permit you to do so. For instance: Jesus commands his people to be baptized, and to wash one another's feet: but some of these societies, to whom you might attach yourself, would not afford you the opportunity of obeying these commands.

Therefore, in answer to the question: "To whom shall we go?" he would answer, go to the people of God, where you will have, not only liberty to obey God, in all his commandments—the keeping of which is the whole duty of man—but you will have the sympathy and encouragements of God's faithful children.

We regret we have not the discourse in full. If we only had a reporter.

MONDAY, 2nd. Received a public document entitled: Report of a visit to the Sioux and Ponka Indians on the Missouri river, made by W. M. Welsh. It is given in the form of a letter to the secretary of the Interior, who has our thanks for the copy before us.

An effort is being made by the Indian Agencies, to civilize the Indian tribes of the Western Territories. It appears that the Agencies having the jurisdiction of the Sioux and Ponka tribes, have been placed under the control of the Board of Missions of of the Protestant Episcopal church. Much reported by Mr. Welsh looks like Christianizing the savage Indians, at which we greatly rejoice. They have too long been neglected by the government. Had the proper measures been taken years ago they might have been civilized, and thousands of precious lives saved, and whole nations of human beings elevated from barbarism. We quote the folowing from the letter:

"As we entered it from the north, the Chief White Swan was at the door of a pretty Chapel, which he had aided in building, and in which he and his people worship. It seemed almost miraculous that a chief, once noted for bravery on the war-path, now clothed with the garments of civilization, and "in his right mind," should welcome us, with evident satisfaction to the House of God, and to the school in which the children of his band are instructed. At a consequent interview, asked for by Christian Yanktons, White Swan, in an eloguent speech, showed his simple faith and the strength of his trust. He said all the white men who came before those sent by the Great Spirit made vain and unreliable promises, whilst those now sent took word from God's Book, which were true and ever-enduring. He gave this illustration: Although great forest are swept away by the tornado, yet when the trunk of a tree without its branches is buried deep in the earth, even the largest steamboat can by its help outride the most violent storm; so we Indians have that to which we can with certainty cling. He ask us to look at the noble band of Christian young men about him, as they had withstood great trials and temptations, their presence spoke louder than any words of his. Soon after we reached the Mission House and principal Chapel, the Indians began to assemble for their weekly practice in sacred music. Voices of young men, that might have otherwise have been shrieking the savage war-whoop, were now sweetly singing "Nearer, my God, to Thee," in the liquid language of the Dakotas. The lad who played the organ, with full harmony, is an Indian, the son of a chief."

We observe, however, that sectarian innovations are also introduced, for at another place we read:

"These Indians were present and manifested much interest at our Sunday services, at which a child of a Christian Santee was baptized."

It is a great pity indeed that those poor Indians must be duped into the senseless ceremonies of popery, immediately upon their liberation from the customs of heathenism. What a striking similarity between the pow wows of the Indian medicine man, and the unmeaning ceremony of an Episcopal priest, sprinkling an unconcious infant. Both are unscriptural, unreasonable.

What a pity that the pure Gospel, with its simple doctrines and wholesome institutions, unadulterated by sectarianism and priesteraft cannot be given to the lib erated sons and daughters of heathenism! And what a pity that those who have and practice the true doctrine of Christianity, are not mere zealous in disesminating it to the inhabitants of the earth! Oh! the fearful responsibility that is resting upon them. See that ye be not found slothful.

Tuesday, 3rd. Brethren Grabill Myers and Henry Harshbarger arrived at our place last evening, and were all night with us. The Companion family was very glad to have a visit from Grandpap Myers. It reminded us of old times to hear the sound of his crutch and cane. And we are happy to announce to our readers that he is in good health in body and mind. There has been no perceptible decline during one year's separation (nearly). Brother Harshbarger is from the Snake Spring Valley congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., and reports favorably of the Brethren there. The brethren are expected to preach at our Dale City meeting-house this evening, of which we will have something to say in our next.

Corrections.

In No. 34, in the notice of the Cole Creek love-feast, read T. P. and W. R. R., also William Garnes.

On page 453, in the 11th line of the article headed "The Christian Race," instead of contagious" read contentious.

Only 40cts for the campaign. All about how to behave during election.

Folio or Quarto.

I am not very particular but have a small preference to leave it as it is.

I don't think the form can be improved; and can't see where there is any trouble in cutting the leaves, and sticking a pin in to fasten them I enjoy it. I always have a pleasant feast in anticipation while doing so. There is no more trouble in cutting the leaves than there would be in unfolding and folding the paper while reading it; and the edges of a folded paper will become soiled. As to giving more reading, I think there is plenty. Don't think I could digest any more.

I am favorable to changing form of C. F. C.

I would favor your proposed change in the form of the Companion, as I would consider it more enovenient.

Answer to Correspondents.

Mary Stager: Through oversight the book was not sent. We are sorry for it. We have now done as you directed.

J. R. Niewanger: We are out of No. 25.

A. C. Numer: The money was received, but we neglected to acknowledge it.

David Martin: We are square.

J. G. Wisey: We have squared the book by retaining the percentage. Is that right?

Enoch Eby: Your letter received 23 inst. contained 25 cents. What was it intended for?

Samuel Murray: The balance is $5.10. Dr. Fahrney is here. Send money to him by post-office order, payable at Somerset, Pa.

David Bowman:—You will observe that brother Silas Thomas has explained the matter you refer to. Perhaps it would be well for you and the Brethren generally, to call the attention of the local press to the article of brother Thomas.

We believe, too, there is danger of a departure in that direction, but it still appears to us it is yet a great ways off, as many of our ministers are kept in very straitened circumstances, and would actually need more support than they are getting. What is your view of the matter?

Martin Beeghly:—We are indebted to you seventeen cents. We do not publish the article alluded to from the Visitor because we do not wish to circulate such a stigma upon the church. It is bad enough as it is.

Ella Williams:—If you have any pleasure in such excursions, try them as far as Dale City, and do not stay at home all your life and wish to partake with the joys of others. Think we have a promise from you.

A Subscriber: Please say over your proper name what you wish to say. Otherwise it can not have the same amount of influence, neither with us nor with our readers.

Die Wilderniß.

Bruder Heinrich; Deine Antwort, in No. 18, zu meinen Zielen, in Hinsicht der Wilderniß, mögen vielleicht ein fremder Gedanken erwecken in etlichen deine Lesern. Daher will ich eine kurtze Erklerung machen. Ich kann mich nicht gerade erinnern warum ich solche Worte in meinen Brief geschrieben. Es will mir aber einleichten als wenn ich dich auch im Zweck gehabt; denn es sagt: "Da müssen wir noch durch." Es wundert mich daher ob den du dich so weit verirt hast das du nicht mehr gewahr bist das wir noch in der Wilderniß sind, und auch bleiben werden bis das unser irdisches Haus dieser Hütte zerbrochen wird. Denn wir sind in der Wüste unter Jesu, wie dei Kinder Israel waren unter Moses. Im Liede des anfangt, "Komm't, Brüder, komm't wir eilen fort," findest du folgende Worten:

"Hier ist ein' grosse Wilderniß,
Da müssen wir noch durch;

und weider,

Da schmeckt des Himmel's Manna süs,
Ach werd't nur nicht mürrisch!"

Wir sind umgeben mit viele Gefährlichkeiten in dieser Wüsten, und es nimmt ein hübsches Wachen und Beten das wir nicht ein oder die ander Zeit mürrisch werden. "Lasset uns ablegen die Sünde, so uns immer anklebt und Träge macht, and lasset uns laufen durch Geduld in dem Kampf, der uns verordnet ist, und aufsehen auf Jesum, den Anfänger und Vollender des Glaubens; welcher, da er wohl hötte mögen Freude haben, erduldete er das Kreuz, und achtet der Schande nicht, und ist gesesen zur Rechten auf dem Stuhl Gottes.

Von deinem Bruder in der Wüste, aber reisend nach dem Himmeliche Canaan.—Verstehst du mich?

Dear Brethren Editors:—We have constructed a new building in this place, for the purpose of worshipping God. Meeting once in four weeks, which we think is not the most that might be done, nevertheless it appears some think this to be often enough; for we, who have wagons, horses, and buggies, can go to meeting still. But, brethren, there are some who are not blessed with all these. With such we feel to sympathize, because we do not like to stay away from meeting. Hope all will be done that lies in our power to promote the good cause, seeing that many of our friends are standing aloof from us, and knowing, as we do, that some have been almost persuaded to join with us, but for some reasons stay back. Should our brother editor think this worthy the space, and if any such should read this, I would say to you, it is but a short time since I stood just where you now stand. Oh, I found so many hindrances! You could not find any more. But let me say to you, they are only excuses of an evil persuasion. Since our brother editor has announced an eastward journey, we anticipate a season of refreshment. We have always read, with delight, the columns of your paper filled with editorial news; but much more joy will it be to have you with us. May the Lord give you health and opportunity to come. We think we need your aid in this place. We are still having additions to the church, mostly of the young. But, dear brethren, we have our trials without and within; hence we crave an interest in your prayers, that the good Lord will grant us grace and strength to overcome. We, that have lately enlisted in the cause of Jesus, may have but a short time to live for him. Let us not be slothful, but be up and doing, "Live while we live." Your unworthy sister in Christ.

Nannie A. Replogle.

Champaign County Church.

Dear Brother:—With much pleasure we inform you that the good cause is still moving among us. The brethren here are wide awake in their Master's cause. We have meeting every Sunday; and, in truth, we have not half enough Sundays to comply with all the calls for preaching. I would that we had more laborers to exercise in the extension of Zion's borders. When we look over our country and are made conscious of the many beings in this our civilized land, who know not the doctrine of Christ in its divine purity, we are made to wish that we were so circumstanced that all our time could be dedicated to the good cause. We devote our time to our physical wants, and what remains is given to the increasing of Zion's borders. This hardly looks fair: we must do better.

Since our communion, six have been added to the church by baptism, and prospects of more are at hand.

We have been moving along quite gently, with naught to mar our happy feelings, with the exception of a single instance. A sad instance has visited many minds; one of the Master's young lambs has left the fold. When the good Shepherd called, she returned not, but remaineth without the walls, where she is exposed to the enemy "who is going about, as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." We hope she may return before it is too late.

H. R. Holsinger—Dear Brother:—There is a proposition in Companion, No. 27, which, I think, is very good. Brother Thomas certainly is right in saying there could be thousands of dollars gathered by next Annual Meeting; that is, if the members have the cause of Christ at heart, and are anxious to help spread the pure gospel truth where it had never been preached before, especially in the state of Maine. I feel concerned about the many precious souls that are out in that cold region. I am perfectly willing to give one dollar, and will stand good for one from each of my children, when it is made known where to send the money. Come, brethren and sisters, come, lend a helping hand. Don't stand back, but come and help to feed the hungry souls that are starving for the bread of life. It will be as bread cast upon the waters, which is sure to return to you after many days. In this way you can make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness.

Margaret Deardorff.

From the South.

Brother Holsinger:—By No. 32 of the Companion, which reached me this morning, I see that you have returned to your family and place of business, much refreshed, I hope by the extended visit for health and enjoyment, and what is doubtless of more value, in-vigorated spiritually, by ministerial labor and intercourse with good, kind-hearted, Christian people. I wish the good Lord would move the hearts of some dear Brethren to direct their footsteps southward.

I may be somewhat selfish in the desire; but in presenting Georgia for the consideration of brethren seeking homes, I have no hesitancy in representing this as a good and pleasant country to live in, and one in which temporal prosperity may reasonably be expected to follow industry and frugality, such as is characteristic among our Brethren. But the one object and desire uppermost with me in inviting brethren here, is, that a church of the Brethren's faith may be established, and the life and example of the Brethren may exert a healthful influence over the community. Christianity seems to be at a very low ebb here, and we have but little spiritual enjoyment.

We are made to feel our lonely condition very sensibly when reading of the travels of brethren, and their soul reviving feasts. We ask an interest in the prayers of all who feel desirous of the prosperity of the good cause of our heavenly Master. May we be kept faithful to the end, and meet when life's toils are ended.

That New Departure.

Dear Brother Holsinger:—Some time ago, when over 200 miles from this City, my attention was directed by a brother to an article in the "National Baptist," headed, "A New Departure," the purport of which is, that the "Dunkard church at Germantown" had, at length, after an existence of over one hundred and twenty-five years, in all which time she had not paid her preachers, secured the service of a pastor at a salary of $1200 a year. For the information of the Brotherhood, the following statement was obtained from brother Jacob Spanogle, who was present at he counsel, when the action, to be mentioned further on, was taken by the church:

The little flock at Germantown, since the death of brother John Price, had been destitute of a minister; and was in a languishing condition. In the year 1871 brother Davis Younce attended the Annual Meeting held in Berks county, Pa., and during the time he was in the East, he preached a few sermons at Germantown, and thus the members at that place became acquainted with him, and last winter, after so long a delay, the church resolved to invite him to settle among them. He answered that he was not in circumstances to be able to abandon his temporal business in the west, without the brethren here in the east would procure him a situation as clerk. (He did not ask any remuneration for his ministerial services.) The brethren at Germantown gave him to understand that they would see to his temporal interests, and he came on, and held a series of meetings, the result of which has heretofore been reported through the Companion. The church held a counsel and resolved to raise a sum sufficient to rent brother Younce a dwelling and support him one year, so that he might, for that period, devote his time and energies to the interests of the cause of Christ. The sum of 1200 dollars was the result. Brother Younce returned to the State of Indiana, brought his wife and child on, and is now the minister at Germantown; not with a yearly salary, but supported one year. Will the National Baptist please correct its statement, which was no doubt inadvertently made? Silas Thomas.

Philadelphia, August 21st.

Brother Henry:—Not long since the question was asked through the Companion, "Was John's baptism Christian baptism?" And was simply answered by saying that it was Christian enough for Christ, and should be for us. But it appears that does not satisfy. Not long ago I was at a meeting, where a brother preached on the subject of baptism; and during his discourse, quoted the brother's language, that it was Christian anough for Christ, and should be for us; and after the discourse a pedobaptist minister got up, and undertook to deny that it was Christian baptism, from the fact that Christ never commanded it until he commissioned his apostles to go "and teach all nations, baptizing them." &c. Hence if it was Christian baptism, I very much desire an answer by some brother, with some good, philosophical reasoning upon it.

Abraham S. Leer.

Morrisonville, Ills.

Brother Holsinger:—I feel likesaying a few words through the Companion, to our ministers that are traveling through the different parts of the brotherhood, to remember our love-feast on the 12th and 13th of October. Now brethren, try and make this one of your passing ways; for we believe by the aid of strange brethren much good might be done, and many souls might be brought from under the bondage of Satan into the folds of Christ, and be saved. Hoping that you will remember us in your travels, I close. May God bless and save us all, is my prayer.

Over the River.

Brother Holsinger:— I greatly desire to have the music to the following lines, in patent notes; if any of the readers of our valuable paper can furnish it, I will receive it as a favor and be much obliged

"Over the river, the crystal stream flows;
Over the river the tree of life grows;
Over the river each lone pilgrim goes,
Through the dim portals of death.

Close by our threshold the arch-angel stands,
Beck'ning us on with his pale, trembling hands;
Chilling our hearts with the cold, icy hands,
Stealing each quivering breath.

"Over the river, Over the river,
Over the river the streets are of gold."

J. A. Sell.

Newry, Pa.

Brother Editor:—No meeting today. Just returned from visiting one of our sick neighbors. Disease, bloody flux. He has quite a pale appearance, but is recovering fast. I expect to go to see two more families this afternoon. Visiting the sick is a scripture injunction. There is considerable sickness in this country at present, such as fever and ague; none serious at present. Fever and ague is frequently the result in new countries. We have now arrangements for meetings three Sundays in a month. This fourth Sunday is idle yet. The brethren meet with considerable opposition in these western countries, in regard to holding meetings. There are no meeting-houses in this country, only in the towns, consequently school-houses are the only resort. The Brethren are kept out of them, by other denominations, who have something going on, either Sunday-school or something else, to keep the Brethren out, consequently the Brethren have to be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves," and not be weary "in well doing," but persevere.

Well our communion season is over. Was well attended, and had the best order that ever I witnessed at a meeting of the kind. It is generally believed that these western countries are made up of bad characters and outlaws of every kind, and from all quarters. I must confess to the credit of our country and neighborhood, that at the time of the exercise in the evening, not a whisper was heard, except a few children crying. This was the first meeting ever held in this neighborhood. Every ear was eager to hear, and every eye was anxious to see. The barn was nearly filled. Had it not been for the appearance of rain, the barn would have been filled to overflowing. It rained nearly all the time of the evening exercises; very muddy and unpleasant to return home. Our ministeral force was brethren John Bowers and Peter Brubaker, from Washington Creek church, Douglas county, and brethren Jacob Negly, —Keim, John Eshleman, from Eight church, Douglas county, and brother Ephriam Shuck from Johnson county, Mo. These brethren labored faithfully. Hope their labor may be as bread cast upon the waters, that it may be seen many days hence. About 60 members communed. All seemed to enjoy the feast; but we think none more than ourselves. It was a feast of fat things to us.

Brethren remember us in this western country. Hope your missionary box will soon be full, shaken together, running over. Brethren let us all put our shoulders to the gospel chariot, and, the Lord being our helper, we will have the pure word of God ringing in these western countries. When our brethren meet in conference, I hope the Lord may put it in their hearts to send some brethren into Kansas, and hunt up the lost sheep; and as they go, preach, and not cease until the earth shall be filled with the word of the Lord, and to him be all the glory, world without end. This leaves us all well, as a family, for which we try to thank the Lord.

Farewell.

GEORGE MYERS.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

MARGARET WAMPLER, wife of Henry Wampler, was born April 30th, 1842, and died June 27th, 1872, aged 30 years, 1 month and 27 days. Funeral services by the undersigned, assisted by brother Robert Whitacre, to a respectable congregation of sympathizing relatives and friends. She died without having all her wish—was grounded in regard to her spiritual welfare; yet we hope that her soul is at rest with the Lord. Text used on the occasion, Heb. 9: 27.

J. P. Helsel.

Oakland, Pa.

In the Dry Creek congregation, Linn county, Iowa, August 19th, brother DANIEL MYERS, aged 62 years, 10 months and 2 days. He was baptized about three weeks before he died. About one week after his baptism he commemorated the Lord's death; and a few days before his death, he called for the Elders of the church and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. May others take warning, and not put off the one thing needful to the eleventh hour. Funeral services by D. Holsinger and Stamy, from Col. 3: 1–4

T. G. Snyder.

May 25th, brother JOHN KIEFER deacon of Big Swatava congregation, Dauphin county, aged 40 years, 11 months, and 9 days. Funeral was held by brethren J. Etter, William Hartzler, and Jacob Rider. The text was,

"Ob der Gerechte gleich zu zeitlich stirbt, ist er doch in der Ruhe.," Buch der Weisheit, 4: 1.

In the Root River congregation, Fillmore county, Minnesota, July 14th, very suddenly of congestion of the lungs, brother JAMES HIPES, aged 69 years, 4 months, and 10 days. The subject of this notice died in fifteen minutes after being taken sick; which is a warning both to old and young. He left a widow, two children, 14 grandchildren, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. The occasion was improved by the writer, to a large concourse of people, from Hebrews 4: 9, 11.

Joseph Ogg.

In the Crooked Creek congregation, at Hazel Dell, Ills., on the 14th of April last, our friend SAMUEL ARNOLD, aged about 35 years. Funeral services by brethren Absolom Hyer and Samuel Forney.

James McBride.

In the Yellow Creek branch, GEORGE ALTEN SMITH, infant son of Calvin, and ——Smith, aged 5 months, less 1 day. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren.

S. A. Moore.

In Middle Creek congregation, Somerset county, Pa., August the 8th, sister CATHARINE SNYDER, daughter of Elder Adam F. and sister Catharine; aged 35 years 4 months and 6 days. Funeral services by the writer from Rev. 13: 12 13.

Tobias Myers.

In the Green Spring church, Seneca county, Ohio, in the eveing, August the 18th, IDA LOOS, infant daughter of friend Henry and sister Rebeca; aged 7 months, and 11 days. In the morning of the 19th ARTILAE LOOS, of the same family, aged 1 year, 10 months, 17 days. The two little sisters died only about six hours apart. On the 20th their remains were followed to their resting place, where both, in one coffin, were laid in mother earth. These were all the children that loving family had. So Christ, the great Shepherd called those lambs home to his ever blessed kingdom. We will say with Job, "The Lord has given, the Lord has taken; blessed be the name of the Lord." Funeral services by brother Noah Hendrick and the writer, from Matthew 18: 2, 3, to a large congregation.

Samuel M. Loos.

In the Blacktown congregation, Benton county, Iowa, August 17th DANIEL CULP aged 68 years. Disease consumption. He was suffering about one year, and confined to his bed 5 months. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his departure, but we trust their loss is his infinite gain. Yet they have the consolation of meeting a Christian husband and kind father where parting is known no more.

Also August 26th DANIEL E. only son of brother Benjamin F. and sister Elizabeth Cripe. Aged 5 weeks and 1 day. Disease sore throat. He was laid in the grave on the 27th to rise in the morning of the great resurrection.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. S. R., Burlington, Iowa.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

One Step More.

What though before me it is dark,
Too dark for me to see?
I ask but light for one step more,
'Tis quite enough for me.

Each little humble step I take,
The gloom clears from the next;
So, though 'tis very dark beyond,
I never am perplexed.

And if sometimes the mist hangs close,
So close I fear to stray,
Patient I wait a little while,
And soon it clears away.

I would not see my farther path,
For mercy veils it so,
My present steps might harder be
Did I the future know.

It may be that my path is rough,
Thorny, and hard, and steep;
And, knowing this, my strength might fail,
Through fear and terror deep.

It may be that it winds along
A smooth and flowery way;
But seeing that, I might despise
The journey of to-day.

Perhaps my path is very short,
My journey nearly done,
And I might tremble at the thought
Of ending it so soon.

Or, if I saw a weary length
Of road that I must wend,
Fainting, I'd think: "My feeble powers
Will fail me ere the end."

And so I do not wish to see
My journey or its length,
Assured that, through my Father's love,
Each step will bring its strength.

Thus, step by step, I onward go,
Not looking far before;
Trusting that I shall always have Light for "just one step more."

For the COMPANION.

Close Communion.

The above subject has been discussed to some extent, in some of our periodicals. The term, close communion, is used by Christian professors of our age, when they want to convey the idea that these Churches in reference to which it is used do not commune with others, or do not allow others to commune with them. We, as a Church, are called close communionists. Of late I have often been called upon to answer this charge. I, for one, feel sorry that we must be close communionists. Were it not that the Bible sustains us so firmly, and were I only to consult flesh and blood, brethren, I tell you frankly, I would not agree with you on these points; but as it is, I go with you in all which the Lord wants his disciples to be.

In order to know something about the [illegible] institution of the same. We find that when the Lord knew that the hour was at hand in which he should be delivered into the hands of sinful men, when the Lord and the chosen twelve were sitting around the supper table, he took bread, blessed it and gave to his disciples, he came with the cup with this admonition, "Do this in remembrance of me." Now, then, the question arises who did partake of the bread and wine? We answer, none but the disciples of Jesus, that had their feet washed and and had with him partaken of the supper. Does any one suppose that even Peter, if he had been disobedient to have his feet washed, would have been a fit subject to receive this bread and cup? There might be some so conceited as to say, of course, feet-washing would not have made him fit, had he not been so before. Read what the Lord says, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me." Well, then, do you suppose that a person who has no part with Jesus is a fit subject to partake of this bread and wine; We hope you will agree with me and say he is not. So we agree at once, he who is not willing to obey the Lord in feet-washing though humble it may look in our eyes, according to the law and testimony, has no part with Jesus, and consequently is not a fit subject to partake of the communion.

But is this all you have to say on the subject? By no means. Brethren, friends, and all, as I said from the start, if I would consult flesh and blood, I would not be a close communionist, as I have numbers of near and dear friends standing in other churches, who, I solemnly believe, strive to live a good life; and would it not be but for the sectarian seed sown into the tender hearts in their youth, which now has rooted deep and solid so as to make them strong trees in their respective 'creeds, I feel convinced they would join in with us.—But as it, we know they do not follow Satan in all he says, and let me tell you, brethren, such have an interest light and wisdom, so that they may give more heed to God and his word.

Should I follow my own feelings I should certainly allow them to commune with us; but I have in vain endeavored to find a passage of Scripture which would sanction such a course, I have been told by my best friends, "Brother Michael, we certainly believe that you are right, we could commune with you, we can call you brother just as well as if you belonged to our Church, we feel certain that we shall meet you in that blessed abode where all these differences will be known no more. I tell you, brethren, when our nearest and dearest friends make use of such language it sets us to thinking; and the question arises why can I not call such, brethren? Why can not I commune with such? If it were not for the word of God we certainly might and would, get astray.

These people believe that Jesus was the Christ, and therefore they claim they are as good as we. Well, perhaps they are better in some points. We read of a Nicodemus, who acknowledged Jesus to be a teacher come from God. Still we have no record that he ever was brought to obey the truth; and we have no account that he ever communed with the disciples. In short, we have no evidence that ever any one communed with the early Christians, who was not willing to obey the Lord in all he had commanded; and, we hold, he who believes himself a fit participant at the Lord's table should certainly be willing to obey God in all things.

I will make one comparison, and then close. Some fourteen years ago, I resolved to try the new World, as it was called where I was raised. That resolve, as I must believe now, was a good one; but it had to be brought into action. So I became a passenger of a ship, and after a weary voyage of some six weeks was landed with others at the city of Baltimore. As soon as I was on American soil, the governmnt of the United States would protect me. But did that resolution to cross the Ocean and setting foot on American soil entitle me fo all the privileges of a citizen of the United States? You will answer, no, by no means. I had to become obedient to every and all requirements the law of the country demanded; and government will not only protect me when I show obedience to its laws, but am entitled to the full privileges of an American citizen.

Now for the application. It is not enough in order to become a citizen of God's kingdom to repent, to renounce Satan, to be baptized, but also to show obedience to all that God requires of us; and if we come this far, none will have a right to refuse us a seat at the table of the Lord.—And let me assure all that the Brethren are only too happy to commune with all such. Is it not so Brethren? I feel safe to answer for the whole brotherhood. Come one, come all, we will not refuse one,no not one. We will welcome all.

But the objection here comes in; "You want us to obey the gospel just as you understand it." This is not altogether a correct supposition. All we want is this, not to listen to any one who tries to reason certain passages of God's word out of the Bible, and at the same time tries to bind you to traditions of man. We assure you they may talk as much and as loud as they can, and after they have done, the gospel is there as good as ever. Take the Scriptures, pray God to give you wisdom to understand and read the same, with this resolve, I will obey God in all he commands, and if you obey God in all the Scriptures say and the bretheren do not then allow you a seat at the Lord's table, then, certainly you should call them a "bigoted people." But I feel confident if you do as God says in his word we will agree in this point, and walk hand in hand as bretheren and sisters of one family.

Is Feet-Washing a Christian Ordinance?

Such is the caption of an article in the COMPANION of August 19th, written by "A READER OF YOUR PAPER." The article is divided into fifteen paragraphs. There are too many for me to review, as the time is so busy here at the winding-up of harvest; for I am old, and dragged from hard work, and would rather sleep than write. If the friend had put his article with seven heads to it, and the suitable finish of ten horns, it would be more in my line to attend to it. As it is, I battle, and take them with a chain-ball in flank, and cut them all down with a good shot or two.

Abraham, he says, practiced feet-washing; and Lot and Bethuel, and Joseph, and others. They only let their visitors have water, that they themselves may wash their own feet.

I think that those ancient worthies gave cakes, and kids, and lambs also, as was done before and since their day. Moreover Jews and Gentiles bathed and swam before and since the baptism of Jesus. Leander in ancient times, and the poet Byron in modern times, swam across the Helespont, or Dardanelles, and no doubt, the waves rolled over them, in a swim of one mile in the sea. Need I give any proofs that men drank wine in olden times. Noah planted a vineyard and got drunk, and Bachus, the god of wine, has been worshipped by drinking freely to his godship, at all his festivals. In Palestine they must have eaten bread before the Lord's, or Eucharistic, supper; for when they run short of bread-stuff, they found that it would not do, and therefore old man Jacob sent his sons and teams all the way to Egypt for a grist. I could multiply proofs of the use of the bath. The battle of the Greeks and Persians, long before the era of Christians, was fought at Thermophyle, or warm baths, and we know that David saw Bethsheba bathing.

Now why not ask us to go up to those times for the institution of the sacramental bread and wine, and for the flesh of the last supper, or communions? Because you accept the sacramental bread and wine as a Christian rite and deny the other. But why do you do so, as stomachs were filled, as well as feet washed, in the patriarchial ages! Consistency thou art a jewel! One was an old, commonplace act as well as the other.

Friend, you have no show for an argument, and I pity such powers of learning as you put forth, heaving like the mountain in labor, and only bringing forth a mouse.

Is the institution of bread and wine a settled fact? You say, "Yes." Was there a supper eaten also at the time? "Why yes!" Was not that called a supper, both in the Scriptures and up to this day; doth it not retain the name of Lord's supper? "Why yes!" And doth not a supper mean a full meal? "Why yes," the learned testify that the Greek word means a meal. I have before me now the vulgate version of the Gospel of St. John, which was made in the fourth century by the learned St. Jerome before the church yet became excessively corrupt. The words in the beginning of the 2nd verse, John 13, read thus, "et cæna fæta," in English, litterly, and supper made, or ended, or done, or finished. Now I took the trouble of looking in Anthon's Latin Dictionery for the meaning of the word cæna, and it means a full meal; for everything less than a full meal there is a suitable or qualifying word. I am not entirely digressing, for your article speaks of the supper as well as feet-washing.

Dost thou believe in the communion? "Yes." And why not in feet-washing? "Because there is no direct command." Why, my friend, the command is as positive or even more so, if possible, than that of the communion. You ought to wash each other's feet, if I, so much your superior, wash yours. You ought; that is, in the strict meaning of the word when the King James version was made, you owe it. Those two words are welded into one, ought. The German sollen is exactly of the same signification. Now let us look at it. Suppose you command your children to do something for another, they ought to do it; but if you said, instead of the common mode of giving a command, you owe it to him or her to do so, and all the connecting words, motions, and actions, showed that this was your intense desire, would it be less a command? I look upon all this getting out of this command or wish of the Saviour as mere petty-fogging. I look upon all the arguments in the article I alluded to as no arguments at all, they are not appropriate and prove too much. It is conceded by all learned men that an argument which proves too much proves nothing at all. Only look at yourself. Your argument is, that as feet-washing was practiced before the act in John 13, and is in the orient and other places yet; it is superstition to make a religious rite, or, as you call it, "dogma" of that special act. Then as immersion, or bathing, or swimming was practiced before the baptism either of John or of Christ, there is nothing particular in that special act except to the superstitious. And as people of the orient in oftentimes ate cakes or loaves, and also drank wine, as we may infer from an old hymn that this country was good for such things—

"A land of corn and wine and oil, Favored with God's peculiar smile," it is superstition to make anything of such eating in the sight of Christ's betrayal.

The truth of the matter is, that the religion of the blessed Jesus did not, does not, and shall not take well with men whose eyes are blinded by the god of this world. So-called Christians do not understand the first principles of the religion of Jesus. The common belief is that he came as a Saviour of the soul, to bring you to heaven, to die for your sins, etc. Of course there is truth here; but there is another truth of primary importance, namely, that he revealed the will of the Father in heaven to those who would receive the knowledge—that he saves his people from their own sins as a doctor does a patient, by following strictly his prescriptions—that they must deny themselves, and crucify the desires of the flesh, and follow him and his example—that they must not exercise lordship but be each other's servants, be each other's brethren in spirit and sincerity. And this practice is of a kind with feet-washing, and eating a common supper—to commune with one another—that is, to hold fellowship and intercourse with each other as equals—as brethren, not as higher and lower classes. Not as I saw praticed in the Episcopal church in Ireland, where the aristocracy went first and ate and drank; and though there was room for all present, yet the common people held back until their betters, bah! were served. I was among the common folks, and this happened to me. I could see right well that those great ones would rather hear a weak argument, like yours, against Christian's eating a full meal in fellowship—against washing each other's feet—lest they should be defiled by touching us poor lepers, than a strong argument in favor of a doctrine that levels us, as God does in our nakedness and helplessness at our birth, in our common death and decay after death.

Now it is not true that feet-washing was not practiced in the Christian church to a greater or less extent. The Pope [illegible] Rome washes the feet of twelve beggars. This is a diminution, to be sure, of what used to be; but it bears testimony to the history, or traditional practice. Of course we wonder not that it got into small dimensions, as the full meal of the supper is reduced to a small wafer and no wine, except to the officiating priests. I have not time just now to write more; so farewell for the present. Read on in the good old Book, and the Father will reveal his truth unto thee. Bear with my Irish roughness, for the sake of the real kindness I feel for you, and the respect I have for you and all who search the scriptures to come at a knowledge of the truth.

JOHN MURPHY.

Vinton, Iowa.

Forty Years ago To-day.

The following pretty poem is copied from the Christian Weekly, accompanying an illustration, which tells a story of contentment under the most humble circumstances. It is a picture of lowly life, in which human love and gratitude to the Almighty for the smallest blessing are beautifully blended. A poor old couple are seated alone, and are about to commence their frugal meal, when the old man says:

"Ay; but wait, good wife, a minute;
I have first a word to say;
Do you know what day to-day is?
Mother 'tis our wedding day!

"Just as now, we sat at supper
When the guests had gone away,
You sat that side, I sat this side,
Forty years ago to-day!

"Then what plans we laid together;
What brave things I meant to do!
Could we dream to-day would find us
At this table—me and you?

"Better so no doubt—and yet I
Sometimes think—I cannot tell—
Had our boys—ah, yes! I know, dear;
Yes, He doth all things well.

"Well, we've had our joys and sorrows;
Shared our smiles as well as tears;
And—the best of all—I've had your Faithful love for forty years!

"Poor we've been, but not forsaken;
Grief we've known, but never shame.
Father, for thy endless mercies
Still we bless thy holy name!"

A LIGHT.

A light, our darkened steps to guide;
A refuge, where from storm to hide:
A hope, to cheer us midst our gloom;
A portion for the world to come.

A strength, to stay the fainting soul;
A balm, to make the sin-sick whole;
A song, to cheer in death's dark vale:
Victor, when earth and nature fail.

All this, and more, will Jesus be
To every soul that bends the knee,
That bears the cross, that runs the road,
In truth and love, that leads to God.

Then bear that cross in mornings dawn.
'Twill cheer thy soul when mornings gone.
Bear thou that cross in meekness here,
Pledge for a crown in glory they.

The parent who gives a child life, is sacredly bound to give it the means of sustaining life. What punishment should be meted out to that father who should take his little child and launch it in a frail boat upon a stormy sea, without help, without provisions, without protection, and leave it to the mercy of the pitiless elements? But what better does that father do, who, dying, leaves his child without money and without friends, to fight the battle of life alone?

For the COMPANION.

Close Communion.

IN COMPANION No. 6, we notice an article headed "Close Communion." The writer wishes to have a free discussion of this subject, in meekness, and as little of human reason, and as much Scriptural proof as possible, this will we do if God permit.

1st. Should we admit to the Lord's table church members only, or those wishing to become church members also? In my view of the Scriptures, church members only. My reasons are the following: "Christ is the head of the body, the church," Collossians 1 : 18. As many of us as have been baptized into Christ Jesus have put on Christ. By this we understand that as many as have not been baptized into Christ Jesus have not put on Christ; and not having put on Christ he is not a member of his body. The church, hence, does not properly belong to the family.—Those wishing to become members must first comply with the teaching of the apostles. Acts 2 : 38 ; 8 : 12 ; chaps. 16, 31, 33. "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22 : 16. We must be baptized into the body before we are in fellowship with the Father and the Son. We cannot claim the privileges which only belongs to the children of God, so long as we have not put on Christ.

2nd. Were all the apostles baptized when the supper was instituted? We think we have sufficient reason to believe they were. Christ called his disciples to follow him ; after that he sent them out to preach. Christ did not enter into his ministry until after his baptism, and he is the leader and commander of the people. Isaiah 55 : 4. He did not command his followers to do that which he himself did not do. "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matthew 19 : 28. Again, they were baptizing others. John 3 : 22 ; 1 : 2. We cannot believe they would lead others a way which they never went themselves. This all was done before the supper was instituted. We think it would be unreasonable to believe that the disciples preached and baptized without being baptized themselves.

3d. The intent of the communion. The supper was instituted for one design, and the communion for another. "And he said unto them, with desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer. For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, take this and divide it among yourselves. For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come. Luke 22 : 15, 1—18. Here Christ spoke about the supper which he was about to institute. The cup, spoken of in verse 17, belongs to the supper. Paul has referred to the same supper; 1 Corinthians, 1 : 11-21. This supper is a type of the great supper that Christ will provide for his followers, when all shall be gathered home, and shall be seated with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Then, and not until then, will this be fulfilled. And as no one can have the privilege of partaking of that supper, in the end or evening of this world, "only those who have from the heart obeyed that form of doctrine." Romans 6 : 17. Even so it is that no one can legally partake of the supper instituted by Christ, the great head of the Church, only those who have benefited their souls by obeying the truth and have legally put on Christ in obediance. As this supper is a type of the marriage supper of the Lamb, and will be perpetuated by his followers until the kingdom of God shall come. "And he took bread and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying : This is my body which is given for you : this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup, after supper, saying: This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you. Luke 22 : 19, 20. "This do ye, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. 1 Cor., 11 : 25. The design of the communion is to point us to the sufferings of Christ on the cross. This is to bring about a solemn thought, when the members of the body of Christ are seated around the table, and remember that their Redeemer was groaning, bleeding and dying on the cross for them, this is most solemn. This bread and this cup is the communion of the body and blood of the Lord; while the supper is a type of the great supper.—This points to the future, while the other is in the past. Whom should we admit to the Lord's table? No one, but the Lord's children. This I have written out of love hoping some brother will give us more light on the subject.

Women Preaching.

I saw an article in volume 8, No. 30 with the above heading. I will here state that I am one of the number who think that woman has no Scripture authority to teach a man ; but I frankly confess that she can teach other women, for thus saith the apostle Paul to Titus 2 : 3—5. This one passage would be enough to convince me if no other could be referred to. But this agrees with Joel, Peter and Paul.

The apostles were sent into all nations, to preach the gospel to every creature ; but woman had another misson, "Go tell the disciples that I am risen." And on the day of pentecost Peter, referring to the prophet Joel, in speaking of our sons and daughters, and of the Lord's servants and handmaids it seems the gift was for all; but the gift for the operation of the spirit was diverse.

Now I do not wish it to be understood that I stand opposed to women preaching or praying, but on the contrary, I have often wished that the ordained widows, the wives of elders, bishops or deacons would more frequently make it a part of their duty to admonish the younger sisters when they go astray from their path of duty, and to pray oftener in public when liberty is given them. I will here refer you to 1st Peter 3 : 2—6. "Try first to win them without the word ; while they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear." The german translation of conversation does not mean talk ; but daily walk ; deportment demeanor. What I have said is out of love. If I am wrong it is your duty and privilege to freely criticize everything that is put into the forum or press ; if you do it in love ; and with a "thus saith the Lord."

Shed not a Tear.

Shed not a tear, o'er your friends early bier,
When I am gone, when I am gone;
Smile if the slow tolling bell you should hear,
When I am gone, when I am gone.
Weep not for me when you stand round my grave;
Think who has died your beloved to save;
Think of the crown all the ransomed shall have,
When I am gone, I am gone.

Shed not a tear when you stand round my grave,
When I am gone, when I am gone;
Sing a sweet song unto him who doth save,
When I am gone, when I am gone.
Sing to the Lord who on earth once was slain;
Sing to the Lord who in heaven doth reign;
Sing till the world shall be filled with his name,
When I am gone, I am gone.

Plant ye a tree that may wave over me,
When I am gone, when I am gone.
Sing a sweet song if my grave you should see,
When I am gone, when I am gone.
Come at the close of a bright summer day;
Come when the sun sheds its last ling'ring ray,
Come and rejoice, that I thus passed away,
When I am gone, I am gone.

Flee from that Sin.

Flee from that sin! You are now in the greatest danger. The snare is about your feet. Whatever the temptation may be, whether the drunkard's glass, the theatre, the race-course, the Sabbath-breaker's stroll, or any other sin, you must not parley nor yield for a moment, for the sake of your priceless soul. Your eternal state may be decided by such a moment as this. Heaven or hell is the issue.

As the soldier grasps his weapon when attacked, so take the "sword of the Spirit," which is the word of God.

"Thou, God, seest me!" "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God!" "Know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die?"

But you say, "Oh, the past!" Yet do you not know, whatever that past may be, that their is mercy, if you turn in faith and with a contrite heart to the Savior? "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin;" this is your hope for the past. "My grace is sufficient for thee;" this is your encouragement for the future.

Benevolence and its Action.

Benevolence seldom acts alone. Acquisitiveness itself has no stronger incentive to action than which comes from benevolence. As "it is more blessed to give than to receive," the man has pleasure in acquisition of property, and greater pleasure in bestowing it upon family, friends, and the poor. When, therefore, Benevolence yearns to do good, but lacks the means, it awakens Acquisitiveness and the intellect to plan for acquisition, and the organs of industrial energy to furnish means of generous distribution. Wealthy philanthropists, who endow institutes, colleges, dispensaries, or hospitals, do not enjoy half so much pleasure in the acquisition of wealth as they do in bestowing it in obedience to Benevolence, because Acquisitiveness itself still maintains in the institution a kind of property, and is gratified to see profit accrue to a good cause, while Benevolence, the reason, and even the sense of praise, [illegible] good that is being done and is to be done, as well as the just honor which is accorded to beneficence. Was ever a prince in his gorgeous palace so happy as Peter Cooper is when he sees the good that is being done by the endowment of the Cooper Institute! We envy the rich opportunity they have in making the ages bless them for "devising liberal things." How powerfully does Benevolence excite Combativeness to defend the weak and oppressed—and in the surgeon, the organ of Destructiveness to perform the severe operation for the patient's good. Man will risk more and fight more and harder to protect a child or a wife than he will in his own behalf, because a sacrifice for the sake of others arouses the moral and social qualities, whose combined activity constitute higher and purer motives for action than even those of self-preservation.—From Phrenological Journal.

Giving up Tobacco.

A writer in Hearth and Home justly remarks as follows :— "People of experience should be allowed their say occasionally. I have had a great deal of experience in leaving off tobacco, and rather than descant on injury to the health, or the sinfulness of using it, perhaps it would be better to tell people how to discontinue it. For there are many who would be glad to avoid it who do not know how.

I know Dr. Lewis says glibly, 'Clean up and quit,' and some are rash enough to suppose that a habit engendered in the bone and blood can be laid aside like an old hat. The price of tobacco would fluctuate much more than it does if that were the case. If a man is not sick already, to abstain from his usual quid or pipe makes him so.

I cannot, in a paragraph, write the confessions of a tobacco maniac, but I am sure inveterate users of the weed would be pitied more than blamed if it was known how, by the cravings of their disorder, they are forced to use what secretly disgusts them more than tongue can tell.

But to the point. A slave to tobacco who has not strength of body and mind to break his bonds at once quantity he uses. Three months short allowance takes a man out in the way he got into the habit—gradually. The easiest time to make a total shift, is about the last of the old and the first of the new year. Turning a new leaf is in order then; and during solid winter weather the nerves are less apt to be found in a shattered condition. During those winter months we are in the fullest vigor and inclined to lay on flesh.

Perhaps the worst time in the whole year to quit the use of tobacco is in the spring—when some unpleasant symptoms remind one of failing health. Its omission then aggravates the complaints incident to a change of season. It tests the nerves of a strong man to go through the multiplied cares of the growing months without his accustomed stimulant, only less necessary to him than air.

But the golden opportunity, never to be omitted by the wise man, who means to control his last days, and intends to die gracefully and decently, is when sickness has reduced his flesh and purged his system of one-half its fluids. With convalescence, the old indulgence will occur to the mind, but the physical demand for tobacco is not urgent, and may be broken, if reason does its duty, with comparative ease.

Tobacco maniacs are apt to be of a dyspeptic turn. Such may observe that certain articles of food pester them with a longing for tobacco. Probably one who has been in the habit of eating to the manufacture of superfluous quantities of salvia, will need to change his diet somewhat, and to eat less.

Leaving off tobacco is usually attended with an increase of appetite, and unless this is curbed the stomach will be over-loaded and 'watery,' and persons will return to their 'weed,' to prevent becoming too corpulent. A light diet of simple and unstimulating food, will help much about conquering the enemy. Another thing, inveterate tobacco users should not attempt to perform their customary amount of labor while going through the process of 'weaning.' Many have failed here. They have work right on. Their nerves have been unstrung. Their heads have felt as big and as stupid as a pumpkin; they have become disturbed, distressed, and dejected, struggle and yielded again to the hated fetter.

Those wishing to quit tobacco should take a vacation, or having light work, and that which does not tax the mind, they should eat lightly, sleep all they can, drink water when the tobacco 'hanker' is on them; bathe frequently or wash themselves from head to foot in water as hot as can be borne two or three times a week, always doing it when the stomach is empty, and the strength is not exhausted; praying to God to take away their evil appetite, and by keeping out of temptation and determining by the help of the Lord to be free in Christ and free indeed, the victory will be gained, and success be assured. It will cost a struggle, but liberty is worth the cost. Better health, better appetite, better looks, better sleep, better ideas, and betterments in general in every direction will be the result.

I knew an old man who, I was told, had used tobacco every day for fifty years. He was convinced that the habit was wrong, and he quit it. He grew poor and pallid and sick. His friends beset him to resume the use of the 'weed.' He refused. The doctor said abstinance would kill him. He said he would die then, but he would not use tobacco. After six months struggle he triumphed, and became a hale, rosy cheeked, bright-eyed, healthy old man; and he still lives,—old and full of days, but a freeman, not a slave.—The Christian Advocate. H. The Fault of Hearers.

Some are so dull, and some are so careless;
Some are so hardened, and some are so prayerless;
Some are too proud, and some are too humble;
Some hear the word, and over it stumble;
Some are too refined, and some are too coarse;
Some want the calm truth, some want its force;
Some talk all the time, some take to sleeping;
Some go for pastime, but few are found weeping;
Some are too sordid, and some are too gay;
Some go for custom—how few go to pray;
Some go to see others, and some to be seen;
Some go dressed fine, and some go dressed mean;
Some hear the word joyful, and when it is grown,
The cares of this world show where it was sown;
Some hear it with sadness, some hear it with fear;
Some scarce hear at all, nor care to be there;
Some go because sent, and some because others;
Some go to please fathers, and some to please mothers;
Some go to make fun, and hence it doth arise,
How few are converted, how few the Word prize.

Ready for Action.

When God has fully prepared the heart for religious action, we need not fear that he will fail to find for us our appropriate work. He knows the work which is to be done, and the time of its being done, as well as the dispositions which are fitted for doing it. Be watchful, therefore; but wait also. A good soldier in the spirit of watchfulness is always ready for action; but he never anticipates, by a restless and unwise hurry of spirits, the orders of his commander.—Upham.

The Cheerful Giver.

I was lately reading of a little boy who was trying to be like God, by being a giver. He loved to give. He would go to his father sometimes half a dozen times a day, with his bright eyes sparkling, and his little round face all in a glow, and say:

"Papa, I want a penny to give to a poor beggar at the door," or, "to the organ-grinder," or, "to the little girl that wants cold vituals."

And, on Sunday mornings, he would come and ask for something for the Sunday-school missionary society, and for many other things. His father wanted him to form the habit of giving, while he was young, and so he always let him have what he wanted for these objects.

But one day when he came to ask for something, his father said to him:

"My son, don't you think you give away a great deal of money?"

"Why, yes, papa," said he, "and I do love to give it."

"But then you come to me for all you give. It is not your own money that you are so liberal with."

This seemed a new thought to the little fellow, and he turned away to his play, perplexed a little by what his father had said to him. Presently, however, he came running back.

"Papa," he asked, "who gives you the money that you give away?"

"I earn it by hard labor, my son."

But who gives you the strength to labor with, papa?" asked the little fellow.

"God gives us our strength," said his father.

"And, papa, haven't you often told me that God gives us everything?"

"Yes; every good thing we have God gives us."

"Well, papa, I love to give away the money you give me; don't you love to give away the money God gives you?

The father hugged the little prattler in his arms and kissed him, gave him what he wanted and let him go. And then the father sat down to think over the question which his dear child had asked him. Like a great many other people, he had forgotten that the money which he had was not his own, but God's. All the money in the world belongs to God. In one place in the Bible, God says, "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine." (Hag. ii 8.) God doesn't give us money to keep; he only lends it to us, to use for him, and to do good with. And when we die, he will call us to give an account of the use we have made of it. God loves to give, and he loves to have his people give. And when we learn to give, and love to give, we become like God in this respect.—Dr. Newton.

What will he Become?

This question is often asked by parents in regard to their sons, and by the friends of many young men. And although there is no definite rule for ascertaining, we may get some idea of what a young man will become, by observing his actions and works.

Solomon said, many centuries ago, that "even a child is known by his work, whether it be good or evil." Therefore, when you see a boy slow to go to school, indifferent about learning, and glad of every opportunity to neglect his lessons, you may take it for granted that he will be a blockhead.

When you see a boy anxious to spend money and who spends every cent as soon as he gets it, you may know that he will be a spendthrift.

When you see a boy hoarding up his pennies and unwilling to part with them to any good purpose, you may set it down that he will be a miser.

When you see a boy willing to taste strong drink, you may rightly suppose that he will become a drunkard.

When a boy is disrespectful to his parents, disobedient to his teacher, and unkind to his friends and playmates, it is a sign that he will never be of much account.

When you see a boy looking out for himself, and unwilling to share good things with others, it is a sign that he will grow up a selfish man.

When you hear a boy using profane langauge, you may take it for a sign that he will become a wicked and profligate man.

When you see boys rude to eachother, you may know that they will become disagreeable men.

When you see boys pouting and grumbling when told to do anything, and always displeased when they have any work to perform, it is a sign that they will be good for-nothing men.

But when you see boys that are kind and obliging to each other, obedient and respectful to their parents, attentive to their studies and duties, it is a sign that they will become good and useful men.

When you see a boy that loves his Bible, and is well acquainted with it, it is a sign of great future blessings from Almighty God.

When you see a boy that stays away from theatres, grog-shops, ball-rooms, and gambling-houses, it is a sign that he will grow up a man in principle, knowledge, and goodness.

When you see a boy practicing the virtues of morality and Christianity, you may know that he will become an honor to himself and family, useful to his country, and the glory of his Maker.

Although great changes sometimes take place in the character, these signs, as a general rule, hold good.—Pupil.

Speaking the Truth.

Tell the truth. It is hard to do, not because of itself, but because of the habits and education of society. Men and women have become so accustomed to telling falsehoods, that to do otherwise would appear awkward and rude. Conventionalism demands that straightforwardness and honesty be sacrificed to complacency. Much of what men, and especially women, say to each other has no meaning, simply because it is the utterance of polite mockery. They are glad to see each other, attached to each other, and otherwise friendly in polite phraseology, while in reality they are only able to endure each other, so as to speak and be amiable. To speak and act the truth is a duty, and if it were practiced in all the details of life, society would be infinitely more healthy.

Religion is not a mere sentiment. It is a vital experience of the heart, a resolute exercise of the will, a heroic service of the life.

The firm without pliancy, and the pliant without firmness, resemble vessels without water, and water without vessels. —Lavater.

Quitting Tobacco.

Elsewhere in this week's paper will be found a selection, under the above heading. It gives good advice. We have had it on hand for some time, but it had gotten out of our sight.—Since the subject has been agitated considerably, we now offer it, with the hope that it may afford the encouragement required by many who acknowledge the habit of smoking and chewing tobacco to be an evil, but do not know how to become relieved of it. And there are such among our readers. We know it; for they have told us so. And we believe, with Mr. Hastings, that many persons addicted to the habit, regard themselves possessed with a disease, from which they seek relief, as from a painful wound. And if we would assist such, by affording them encouragement, instruction, and aid, by telling them how to quit, instead of over-dosing which brings them no farther, much more good might be accomplished.—Now, then, kind readers, we come to you to-day with such aid. We come to you, Samaritan like, offering to bind up your wounds. Do not be discouraged. We know you will have to endure much self-denial, but you should look forward to the reward, when you shall be entirely free. And we would not have you rely entirely upon your own strength. You should make an effort upon your own part, for you contracted the habit against your own nature; but if you make your confession to God, and implore him for help and strength he will surely come to your relief. But be sure you make a clean job of it.—Throw yourself at once completely—entirely—over on the anti-tobacco side of the question. It will wonderously assist you in holding your ground. When you once get a Red Sea between your habits and yourself, you will have done a great work. It will even not hurt you to sing the song of triumph. It will let the enemy know where you are, and help you to remember it yourself. Some cities must be taken by storm. Regard yourself anti-tobacconist, out and out. Come over on our side and go with us; we will do you good and not evil. Indeed, we will. Do not imagine, dear reader that we wish to teaze you; no, not by any means.—We often regret that we must publish so much upon this subject, for we know it is an annoyance to many of our dear readers. But then we regard this tobacco using, as a habit, as a great evil, and can not see that we can be justified before God, as a watchman upon the walls of Zion, unless we use our influence against it, both in season and out of season," although this is the first time we have said anything upon the subject ourself this year, through our paper.—Would that our readers would all abandon the habit, how gladly we [illegible] against discussing the subject only so much as to assist us in preventing our children from taking to it. For that glorious end we are laboring. How many are ready now to yield? To all who will come over, the agitation will immediately cease to be an annoyance, and they will feel to join in the work of reformation. But we have just one article more upon this subject, after this week, and then we will not say any more against tobacco, in the Companion for at least a good while. It was the article in favor of it, which our assistants, during our absence, admitted into our columns, that has caused the present agitation. We have just received another letter, complaining of the aggressive aspects of our columns. It is from a woman, at Ashland, Ohio, whose name we withhold. She is not a member, but her grandmother is, who smokes and is very old. She cannot go to preaching, but has the C. F. C. read to her, and is much annoyed by the frequent articles against tobacco. "She says, she never was called up to give an account for the deed done in the body, but since she has got old, she gets one hearing after another, through the church papers." That we cannot help. If the old brethren did not do their duty in preaching against the evil, it is not said that we too must be negligent. We know that we have the admonition of the Annual Meeting as far back as 1817, that it should not be, and that those who used it, and would not quit it could not be ministers.

The writer does not use it herself, but thinks it "would do more good to do some talking on the fashions." We wonder if she does not know that chewing and smoking are among the most abominable fashions in the world? Verily it is. Much as we despise the "Grecian Bend," and ruffles, and frills, and hats, and feathers, they are all as tolerable as smoking and chewing tobacco, and more so, for they injure only those who indulge, while the tobacco user commits a nuisance against all who are in his society. And certainly none of our brethren or sisters should be guilty of such an offense, or indulge in such a fashion. But if our old and esteemed members will continue to do so, what may we not expect of the younger and fickle minded. O, brethren and sisters, let us "lay aside every weight and hinderance;" give "our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God." It is our reasonable service to do so. And we can do it, by the grace of God. Will we try?

A Good Time.

The present is an excellent time for sending in essays, correspondence, and so forth, for our columns. Our manuscript box is very low. In fact there is nothing first-rate in it any more, for we have searched it down to the bottom, for something that could be readily prepared for the printers; but were disappointed, and hence we are compelled to resort to our own pen, and the aid of the scissors. True we found a few articles that might be pretty good, but they are so closely written, being interlined between the rules, that it is almost impossible to prepare them for press, and when prepared are exceedingly difficult for the compositor to set up without omitting lines and words. Wonder why brethren will cram their paper from top to bottom, that one can scarcely find beginning or end. We had rather pay the extra paper and postage, when we use the manuscript, than to be annoyed by such closely written matter.

We have also a few pretty good articles upon some of the subjects that have been almost worn threadbare by frequent use. We had rather allow them to rest a while if we had something else.

Who will start up something new? We now offer a good opportunity for admission into our columns, with a good logical essay, upon a live edifying subject. Smaller favors also thankfully received.

How would an article on "Christian Courtesy" become our columns? You know the apostle says "Be courteous," and that "Julius courteously entreated Paul." Think that would properly belong to the sister's department. However, we have no preference

Western Penn'a. District Mission Fund.

At the last District Meeting of the Western District of Pennsylvania, a plan was adopted for putting into operation a Home Mission in the District. The first section of the plan reads as follows:

"That each member, voluntarily, pay into the Treasury of the congregation, quarterly, the sum of ten cents, or more, to be quarterly handed over to the District Treasurer, for the purpose of supporting the Home Mission, and defraying the expenses of the District."

We have not heard how the congregations have responded to this plan, by way of sending in their contributions, nor how favorably they receive the general plan. It appeared to be quite satisfactory to the meeting, and we were hopeful that the work would move along successfully. We have never yet had an opportunity afforded us to contribute our quarterly dime, but we are prepared to pay the yearly installment at any time.

The matter was brought to our mind afresh lately, when informed that applications are being received for Mission help in some of the outskirts of the District. Hope the Elders of the several congregations in the District are holding quarterly ten cent collections, and will see that every member receives an opportunity —and if necessary an admonition—to contribute the stipulated mite. It will depend upon them, and they will surely be accountable to God, for the manner in which they discharge their duty. We hope too that all the members will be ready and willing to throw in their mite toward bearing the Gospel to those who are languishing for it in our own state and District.

Brother Hiram Musselman, Scalplevel, Cambria county, is the Treasurer.

Editor's Diary.

WENDESDAY, Sept. 14th. Enjoyed a pleasant time with our guests, and at our vocation. We had a good meeting last night. Brother Myers held forth the word in his usual happy style. He took his text in Isaiah 1: 18, 19, 20. "Come now and let us reason together," &c. He showed that it was reasonable that men should serve God; for it was reasonable the creature should honor the Creator. And God himself is reasonable with his creatures. "If they are willing and obedient they shall eat the good of the land." What better could he offer them. But if they refuse and rebel, they shall be devoured by the sword. They should not expect anything better, for if they refuse the good, they also choose the evil, with all its consequences; and who would be so unjust as to blame the Lord for giving us what we have made choice of ourselves.

He also referred to the offer of God to take away our sins, and the means provided for that purpose, and the reasonableness that man should apply them, according to the directions of the Lord.

To-day, at 11: 15 A. M., Elder Lint and our Assistant, brother Beer took the train, on a visit to Armstrong county, this state, to remain about eight days. Hope the Lord will prosper them, and give them a successful mission, and a safe return.

THURSDAY, 5th. Had a fair turnout at preaching last night. Brother Harshbarger spoke first, using Matth. 6: 33, 34: Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," &c.

He did not understand that the Scripture taught that we should not work, nor make provision for the wants of our families, but we should be first and most concerned for the welfare of the soul. When we first seek the righteousness of the kingdom of God we have the promise of God, that all these things shall be granted unto us, of course when we make the proper efforts.

To-day, 10 A. M., the brethren preach at our Mechanicsburg meeting-house, in the German language. Assistant being absent, we found it necessary to remain at home. This evening they preach at Salisbury meeting-house, which is somewhat out of our latitude for evening meeting. Hope the Lord will meet with them, and enable them to impress their hearers with a sense of their duty to their Maker.

Received a letter from our binder, promising that we should very shortly receive a box of the Tune and Hymn books. Hope they will be forthcoming, as our patrons are becoming impatient. And we cannot blame them, for the work is being delayed almost beyond endurance. A little more patience, readers. Patience works experience, you know, and experience hope.

FRIDAY, 6th. Were kept very busy all day, supplying our printers with copy, being required to write the most of it ourself. Brother Plain's contribution on the "Shaking Quakers" came very opportunely.

SATURDAY, 7th. Brethren Myers and Harshbarger returned to us from Salisbury, in the afternoon, and preached in our meeting-house in the evening.

SUNDAY, 8th. Attended preaching at the Mechanicsburg meeting-house, in the forenoon. Dr. Beachly took us out, and it reminded us of some of our western peregrinations, only we had no such beautiful hills and—stone. Brother Myers preached to an attentive audience.

Brother Harshbarger accompanied some of the brethren to Greenville, to fill an appointment at that place. They reported an interesting meeting.

Returned with Dr. B. and dined at their house, with other friends. Brother Uriah and his family possess one virtue without a doubt—hospitality.

Attended Sunday-school at three o'clock in the afternoon. Those who are taking an active interest in the school deserve much credit; but many who are doing nothing to encourage it ought to do differently. Hope they will do better.

Our brethren preached for us again, and the last time for the present visit in the evening. Text: Rev. 22: 13 to 15. Had a good meeting. May the Lord bless the brethren for their labor of love among us. Had a pleasant time of conversation with the brethren after the meeting, but not as long as we would have desired; for brother Myers did not feel very well. O how we do love the society of kindred spirits! It is true we do not agree in everything, and our aged brother has found it necessary to administer some correction to us occasionally, having been under his diocese for a number of years, but it was always done in such a spirit as to give us the assurance that it was intended for good, and not only to show his authority. We did not get half our talk out; and we fear we never shall in this world catch up. Subjects will continue to accumulate, and old incidents recur to the memory that it will only be in eternity that we shall have perfect and full satisfaction. And we believe that in such enjoyments the pleasures of heaven will partly consist. And a song of praise to God, and glory to the Lamb, will be the conclusion of every incident and remembrance of mercy.

MONDAY, 9th. Brethren M. and H. took the 8 o'clock train for home, by way of Bridgeport and Bedford R. R. Brother Myers concluded not to go to Berlin and Middle Creek, intending to visit us again at the time of our love-feast, on the 23 of October, and then to make better arrangements for appointments at said places.

The evening train brought brother John B. Brumbaugh, and Miss Linda M. Will, of James Creek, Pa., both of whom had once been members of the COMPANION family, who will spend several days with us. Miss Will is on her way home, at Bryan, Ohio. We will see what more we can say for our young friends when they leave.

TUESDAY, 10. Had a town meeting last night at the Hall, for the purpose of confering upon the propriety of holding out inducements to the Pittsburg, Washington and Baltimore Railroad Company, to erect their shops at this place, for the manufacture of engines, and cars, &c. Several addresses were delivered by citizens, and Committees appointed to look after the interests of the people, and one to solicit contributions to a fund to purchase land, to offer to the Company as a bonus. Some of us are highly elated with the prospects. We believe if we can get the attention of the officials and knowing men of the Company, to give our location a thorough examination, that we will certainly stand a fair chance to obtain the prize. Perhaps we can tell more about it next week. We were told to-day that a certain man connected with the Mechanicsburg Mineral Springs enterprise has taken offense at our remarks in these columns several weeks ago, and was making threats to reprimand us for our presumption. Well, perhaps he will, but we only regret we did not say what we did a few weeks sooner, as we now learn that some of the brethren have taken considerable stock in it. We would recommend them to get their names off the list, if possible.

That Impostor.

In No. 34, page 541, we published an item from brother J. S. Flory, under the heading "that impostor," exposing a man by the name of Samuel L. Elsworth. By reference to volume 2, page 163, of the COMPANION, we find the same man exposed. It was written by request of the church, by brother Henry Harshbarger, of the Snake Spring Valley congregation, Bedford county, Pa., and is published in the number for August 21, 1866. He says they came to that place sometime in the commencement of last Winter, very poor, and complaining of the hardships they had to endure during the war. The Brethren had compassion upon them, entertained them kindly, and ministered to their wants. In last May he was baptized and remained in that county, until last July. They then went to Ohio, and from there his intention was to go to Indiana. Before he left he borrowed money from several brethren and from others, which he never offered to return. The doctors there pronounced him an opium chewer. He told brethren that the government owed him $1100; that he had employed the "squire" to draw up writings and that he was sure of his money, all of which was afterward ascertained to have been untrue. And so the congregation met in council and expelled him, until he would give satisfaction, and publish him accordingly. Brother Harshbarger was at our office this week, read both the articles above refered to, and says that Elsworth has not yet become reconciled to the church at Snake Spring Valley, Pa.

Brother Harshbarger's address is Bloody Run, Pa., should any one wish farther particulars.

Editor's Post-Office and Telegraph Address.

September 13 to 15, Connemaugh, Pa.; 16 to 18, Altoona; 19 to 26 Martinsburg; 27 to 29 New Enterprise; 30 to October 3, Hopewell; 4 to 9, Tyrone; 10 to 13, McVeytown, 14 to 17, Mifflintown. That is, between the time given, mail may arrive at those points for us. From Mifflin it is now the programme to return home by way of Bedford and Bridgeport Railroad. That is up the Huntingdon and Broad Top railroad to Bloody Run, Bedford, Bridgeport and home.

Brethren's Almanac.

We are still short of several essays to fill up the reading colums of the Almanac for 1873. Who has something prepared for us? And who is now preparing? Let us know that we may reserve you space.

Names of ministers are still being received, and added to the list. Hope none will be withheld. It is intimated that there are a number of ministers in Eastern Pennsylvania, in Virginia, and in Ohio, whose names are not on our list. Will not some brethren in those localities be kind enough to review our list, and furnish us with all names not found thereon. We have a few spare copies which we will supply, gratis, for that purpose, to those who may not have access to it. But it ought to be done soon.

Folio or Quarto.

I have no strong preference, yet folio would be quite acceptable, to me.

JSAAC PRICE.

For the convenience I much prefer the folio form for our paper; besides I think it would look more formidable; and at the same time give you less labor; believing we should consult your interests as well as the convenience of your patrons.

PETER S. NEWCOMER.

"I highly approve of the proposed change of the COMPANION, to the folio, and have wished for it this long time. Give us a nice big folio; let it be no less than 24-36 inches, rather larger if possible.

A. N. CASSEL.

We have before us an expression in favor of quarto form, signed F. G. A short time ago we had another, signed, A Subscriber. We wish brethren and sisters would not do this. Give us your mind over your proper name, then it comes with authority, and will be published. We wish to give especially those who are strongly favorable to the present form a fair chance. Subscriber will write again, and we will let F. G., say the following: "He feels sorry that we wish to change it; thinks it is handy enough now; thinks it has too many advertisements for a Christian paper; fears it would also change the name COMPANION, and that it may become a real newspaper instead of a Christian paper, wherein weary pilgrims have often been encouraged."

No, no; the name will not be changed, nor will the nature of the paper, nor the principle upon which it has been published. It will be the same paper in sentiments, and every other way, except that it will have a different form, and contain more reading.

And we say now again, to all our patrons, that we very much prefer the folio form, because we believe it would be much better for patrons and publisher. All small preferences on the part of the former are respectfully solicited in behalf of the latter. If you can reasonably be reconciled to the folio form, please do so for our sake, as we feel assured you will be quite satisfied inside of a year.

We call attention to notice in this number of COMPANION of a valuable farm for sale in W. Va. We understand brother Frantz has been very unfortunate during the last few years, and his embarrassments are such that it is feared he will have to make such a sacrifice of his property as to deprive him of the means of a home. His farm can be bought of him for ten dollars per acre, or probably something less.

Change of Address.

Brother John Fisher has changed his address from Raymond, Iowa, to Chatham Centre, Medina Co., Ohio.

SAMUEL F. BEHM:—We will send the paper the balance of the year to him. We have no knowledge of having received any money from you.

The Shaking Quakers.

A few Sabbaths since, I attended a meeting of the SHAKERS, a peculiar religious sect, who have a settlement near Mt. Morris, in the Genesee Valley, New York. Their singular mode of worship, may not be uninteresting to the readers of the COMPANION.

When I entered their spacious meeting house, measuring some 60x100 feet, I found seated, about 50 members, on long wooden seats, arrainged diagonally, from the point I supposed the minister was to occupy; though I saw no minister in that place, and no table, pulpit, or seat prepared for him; as the men were all together on one side, and the women obliquely opposite them. I concluded before the services closed, the reason no special arrangements were made for the speaker, that all had the privilege of speaking, both men and women, "as the spirit gave them utterance," and from any part of the assemblage. The sisters' caps came out full over their faces, and were as white, as water and starch could make them. Their drab poplin dresses, and white three cornered cambric handkerchiefs, all lapped over and pinned on the right side, seemed to be made from the same goods, and done up, and adjusted with mathematical nicety. The same scrupulous infirmity, characterized the mens dress.

The floor of the house, of which they have reserved about three-fourths for sacred purposes, is as clean, as when the carpenter lifted his plane from it. The balance of the floor is painted, and contains seats elevated in tiers for spectators, whom they do not admit in muddy times, or stormy weather.

The services were introduced by a man rising from among the brethren, and reading a hymn; after which he resumed his seat, and all the members sung the hymn from the book, or by rote, with a right good will. Then, the same man arose again, took his position, and read the 15th chapter of first Corinthians, and again resumed his seat. At a given signal, all the settees were removed to each end of the hall. When the floor was cleared, they formed themselves into three concentric circles, in the centre of the hall, and sang by rote, a lengthy hymn with a chorus, set to compound time, and made the house reveberate with their sonorous music; at the same time, the outer circle, in double file, moved around in one direction for some ten minutes, keeping time with the music with both hands and both feet, accompanied by a shaking, or tremulous motion of the body. The second circle, in single file, moved around in counter directions, the inner circle remaining stationary, only, all kept time with their hands, feet, and body. When this was ended, they came to a halt, and a sister made some remarks in regard to the character of the Deity, the duty of his creatures, and their moral relation to God: the other members turning their faces to the speaker. When she closed her remarks, a sister started another hymn, or spiritual song, in which they all joined, and all three circles moved around, the inner and outer ones moving in the same direction, and the middle one in a contrary direction.

When this song ended, they all stopped as before, and a man offered some appropriate remarks, on the efficacy, and power of prayer; though I saw none engage in audible prayer during service, as it is customary among other Christians. When he closed, they sang another song, with the accompanying movements, as already described.

When this novel exercise had ended, the settees were all re-adjusted as at first, and all resumed their former places. Then a man came forward with the new Testament in his hand, expatiated for some 30 minutes, denounced Paul in forcible terms, for saying many things without the authority of inspiration, among the most inexcusable of which was, the introduction of matrimony into the church without divine authority.

The shakers do not marry, but replenish their church from the Gentile world, by taking orphan children, and educating them in their faith, which does not succeed as well as their revival, and other systems of regeneration, and of course, the Shakers are gradually decreasing numerically.

The speaker also upbraided Paul, for saying many things he did not understand himself, and that no one else could understand,; and that Peter, than whom, there could be no better authority, corroberated the fact!

The resurrection, he claimed, was nothing more than rising to newness of spiritual life, from deadness in trespasses, and sins, and that everlasting torment, was incomparable with the dignity, character, and attributes, of a merciful God.

Precisely at 12 A. M. the services closed, without any further exercises than those described. The men going out, and the women following, to an adjoining, spacious building, where they had deposited their outer garments; resuming which, they departed to their families, as they call them, the men and women living in separate buildings and families.

I am informed their houses have neither windows nor doors, fronting the streets or highways. It does happen, however, with all their precaution, and rigid opposition to matrimony, that some fall from grace, and marry, when of course they are excommunicated.

Tobacco.

In the C. F. C., No. 31, the use of tobacco is tried to be sustained by brother S. Solomon. I kindly thank the brother for his views. He appears to be serious, and to uphold his ideas in Christian like manner; but on examining the Scriptures we have failed to see tobacco mentioned as an herb. We understand all herbs as given in the Bible are given as meat for the use of or to sustain this mortal body. Tobbacco undoubtedly was not among the herbs that God created to sustain the body, as the effects of it will plainly show. Try it on some one who has never used it; as a general thing it will sicken him.

Tobacco as an herb, if it should be called such, and tobacco manufactured, are quite different; just as much so as the grain we eat, and the strong drink made of it. The brother now, perhaps, would wish to know where we think tobacco came from. We shall refer him to where the enemy sowed the tares. Judging from the effect, we suppose its origin. Therefore its very appearance should be avoided; for it is said the Christian should "avoid all appearances of evil." If I am wrong in my judgment, I have so far failed to see it.

In love.

Queries.

Did Christ give his disciples the law of prayer, or a definite form to be repeated in addition to our prayers?

How many petitions does the Lord's method of prayer contain.

The Lord said, "If two of you agree as touching anything, they shall ask," &c. Do the pronouns you and they refer to the same persons in this case?

Is it according to the directions of the Spirit of the Divine law to leave it to vote to expel a member, or does the strength of the law exclude him?

If a brother will commit a sin unto death, can he brought to life through excommunication?

Does the fullness of the Gentiles, spoken of by Paul signify numbers or blessings?

Is the service of washing the Saints feet, the giving of thanks for the bread and cup, and the breaking of bread?

Official or not, is it according to the Divine law, for a member to command the communicants to "tarry one for another for the bread of communion?" Jesus said, "take, eat."

Did the apostle Paul refer to the supper when he said, "if you come together, tarry one for another?"

Does it require three ordained elders to order one elder?

Did Paul leave any elder except Titus in Crete for to ordain elders in every city?

Does the apostle Paul have reference to the spirit of the fornicators or to the spirit of the church in 1st Cor. 5 : 5?

Does the death spoken of by John denote second death?

SAMUEL A. LEEDY.

From Brother Adam Hollinger.

John and Elvina Hollinger, beloved brother and sister in Christ Jesus, may the blessings of Almighty God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit, rest and abide with us all forever. Amen.

This is to inform you that I am on the mend, slowly, with the abscess in my side; but the dropsy is not getting any better. My legs and feet are still swollen, nearly as thick as the skin can hold. I still have very much pain, and especially at night. The rest of the family are well, and the friends as far as I know. I feel very thankful that my case is no worse than it is, as many are in a worse condition, and are suffering much longer. I will now close by greetings to you all.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

From Nora Springs, Iowa.

Brother Holsinger:— Thinking that you would like to hear something from the brethren whom you lately visited in Iowa, I thought I would write you a little from this place. Notwithstanding the sectarian influences that surround us here in this new place, the Lord seems to be at work also, calling his people out from among them. Yesterday we immersed seven; to-day another one, and the probability is, that ere long there will be some more.

The enemy is belching forth with his heavy artillery; but Jesus being our leader, we are bound to storm his camp with the principles of primitive Christianity. Our prayer is, that the Lord will move upon our ministering brethren to "come over into Macedonia and help us." Our ministry here is weak, especially in this end of the church; hence we would say with the Poet,

"Haste brethren, to the rescue come."

Pray for us. Yours in love.

W. J. H BAUMAN.

From Brother John Brindle.

As it is a rainy day, I will write you a few lines about our Upper Cumberland congregation. We are still increasing some; we have received a few members this summer. On last Sunday we received one old lady of three score years, who is afflicted with Rheumatism so badly that she is unable to walk; her limbs are stiff, and she is unable to bend her knees, so she cannot kneel. She was firmly secured in a chair and carried into the water, and two brethren baptized her sitting on the chair. It was performed well, and she stood it much better than was anticipated. Some thought she could not be baptized. Her hands are also stiff. I would like for some of our brethren to tell me how such a one could wash feet, as some are contending that all should wash and wipe. I am in favor for the one that washes to wipe also, according to the example given us by our Saviour, but I know our members cannot all wash, so I think one may have a right to wash more then another.

SCHUYLKILL PA.,
September 4th, 1872.

Brother Henry:—In reply to "A. Reader," folio 48, C. F. C. I would simply have answered, "Ye call me Lord and Master, and ye say well for so I am; If I, then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them.

What more do we want? How could it be made clearer or plainer? Why add words?

Every added word, every attempt to explain that which is as plain as language ever expressed any idea, only tends to puzzle or darken the understanding. And if only these words of the Saviour had been placed at the foot of "a Readers" effusion, it would have been ample. Yea more than ought that was said, or could be.

As regards the moral lesson taught all agree.

And in what other words could the symbol have been commanded, to be continued as a rite, or ceremony more clearly or more fully? If the Saviour had intended the thing literally to be done, the case, how, or in what words, could we more clearly have expressed it? We are safe in obeying it—I feel confident—And no argument beyond repeating the words of Jesus, ever did, or ever will open the eyes of any on that subject.

Affectionately, farewell,

ISAAC PRICE.

District of Northern Iowa and Minnesota.

The district meeting of northern Iowa and Minnesota, will be held, the Lord willing, on the 11th of October, in the Grundy church, Grundy county, Iowa, 9 miles east of Eldora. Those coming by railroad will stop off at Eldora, where there will be conveyance, if informed of in time. We hope the district will be fairly represented. We also desire our neighboring districts to be with us. We expect the ministering brethren, who can, to remain with us over Sunday, and the week following, until the love-feast at Waterloo. My address is.

HENRY P. STRICKLER
Eldora, Hardin county, Iowa.

Elder Moses Miller, of Cumberland county, Pa., under date of September 3rd., says:

My health is not good. The extreme heat, and much labor in the church, has affected me, so that I must keep middling quiet, and give my body and mind quiet. So I must have patience, and wait to see what the will of the Lord is. I am going about a little. Was at meeting on Lord's day last, but labored very little.

Dear Editor:—This arm of the church is progressing slowly, from the want of ministeral aid. There are some 38 members here but I have not heard a brother preach here for nearly a year.

Brethren think of us, and give us some food for the soul.

ADAM C. NUMER.
Marmaton, Kan.

After reading in No. 30, C. F. C., "Be a Woman," by Prof. E. Brooks, I thought it would not be out of place to send you a poem of some unknown writer, "What Makes a Woman?" Which, if you see fit to publish, may, sometime, fill a corner. MARY A. LAWYER.

What Makes a Woman?

Not costly dress nor queenly air;
Not jeweled hand, complexion fair;
Not graceful form nor lofty tread;
Not paint, nor curls nor splendid head;
Not pearly teeth nor sparkling eyes,
Nor voice that nightingale outvies;
Not breath as sweet as eglantine;
Not gaudy gems nor fabrics fine;
Not all the stores of fashions mart,
Nor yet the blandishments of art,
Not one, nor all of these combined,
Can make one woman true refined.

'Tis not the casket that we prize,
But that which in the casket lies.
These outward charms that please the sight,
Are naught unless the heart be right.
She, to fulfil her destined end,
Must with her beauty goodness blend;
Must make it her incessant care
To deck herself with jewels rare;
Of priceless gems must be possessed.
In robes of richest beauty dressed;
Yet these must clothe the inward mind,
In purity the most refined.

She who doth all these goods combine
Can man's rough nature well refine;
Hath all she needs in this frail life.
To fit for mother, sister, wife:
He who possesses such a friend,
Should cherish well till death doth end.
Woman, in fine, the mate should be,
To sail with man o'er life's rough sea;
And, when the stormy cruise is o'er,
Attend him to fair Canaan's shore.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have intelligibly answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R., Burlington, Iowa.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion..

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Goodness of God.

BY J. W. WILT.

Behold the sea-shore and the sand,
The tall oaks on the mountain stand,
The rocks beneath the tall oaks lie,
The birds above them swiftly fly!

Created by our Father's hand,
Prepared for man's ingenious hand,
Created for the skillful eye,
To show the love of God on high.

He who said the earth shall be,
Where man may work, enjoy, and see,
This God created all for good—
The earth to bring forth needed food.

Behold weak man to work and live
Upon the food the Lord doth give.
And now may you most plainly see,
That God created you and me.

A Rule to Spend each Day Religiously.

Suppose every day to be a day of business, for your whole life is a race and battle, a merchandise and a journey; Every day propound to yourself a rosary, or a chapter of good works to present to God at night.

Rise as soon as health and other occasions will permit; but it is good to be as regular as you can, and as early. Remember he that rises first to pray hath a more early title to a blessing; but he that changes night into day; labor into idleness; watchfulness into sleep; changes hopes of a blessing into a dream. Never let any one think it an excuse to lie in bed, because he hath nothing to do when he is up; for whosoever hath a soul, and hopes to save that soul, hath work enough to do, to make his calling and election sure; to serve God and to pray; to read and to meditate; to repent and amend, to do good to others and to keep evil from himself. And if thou hast little to do, thou oughtest to employ the more time in laying up for a greater crown of glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with some act of piety, of thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, of the glorification of God for the works of the creation, or anything for the honor of God. When you first go off from your bed, solemnly and devoutedly bow your head, and worship the holy trinity, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

When you are making ready, be as silent as you can, and spend that time in holy thoughts, there being no way left to redeem that time from loss, but by meditation, and short mental prayers. If you choose to speak, speak something of God's praises, of his goodness, his mercies, or his greatness, ever resolving that the fruits of thy reason and of all thy faculties, shall be presented to God; to sanctify the whole harvest of the conversation.

Be not curious nor careless in your habits.

Be not troublesome to thyself nor to others, by unhandsomeness, or uncleanness.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands and face, pray God to cleanse you from sin; in putting on your clothes, pray him to clothe your soul with the righteousness of your Saviour. And so in all the rest. For religion must not only be the garment of your soul, to invest it all over, but it must be also as the fingers to every one of your actions, that something of religion appear in every one of them.

As soon as you are dressed with the first preparation of your clothes that you can decently do it, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Then rise from your knees, and finish your dressing according to the foregoing rules. When you are dressed, retire yourself to your closet, and go to your usual devotions, which it is good that at the first prayers they were divided into seven actions of piety:

1. An act of adoration; 2. Of thanksgiving; 3. Of oblation; 4. Of confession; 5. Of petition; 6. Of intercession; 7. Of meditation; or serious, deliberate, useful reading of the Holy Scriptures.

I advise that your reading should be governed by the these measures. Let it not be of the Bible in order, but for your devotion use the New Testament, and such portions of the old as contain the precepts of a holy life.

Those portions of the Scriptures which you use in your prayers, let them not be long, a chapter once, no more. But then what time you can afford, spend it in thinking and meditating upon the holy precepts which you read. TOBIAS M. KAUFFMAN.

Are Parents Held Accountable.

This is a subject upon which I have seen but little in the COMPANION. I shall therefore try to give my views, hoping that they may prove beneficial. The readers will remember that this is a fast age of the world. Every human being has a tendency or anxiety toward laying up earthly treasures. Why is it so? Because, the parents are teaching their children so from their infancy, instead of "bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." They rear them to hard labor. I have seen parents call their children from their sweet repose, robbing them of an enjoyment which God meant for all the children of men, the blessed night to rest the body and mind, only for the purpose that they may lay up treasures upon earth. Did God ever require of us to lay up earthly treasures? I think not. Has he not given us the day to perform labor for our living? What right then have we to rob our children, as well as ourselves, from the recreation which sleep affords us? Only in order that we may be glorified by man; for surely God has given us no promise, or encouragement: Have you ever met a man who will call his children around him, hours before day, for the express purpose of worshipping God? If you did you have found a man trying to teach his children to lay up heavenly treasures. It appears that some regard the time spent in serving the Lord, as lost time. They will say "I have no time to go to church." Or, "if I go my children must stay at home and carry on the work, for we will lose too much time." The time will come, my readers, when such will think differently; they will wish that their earthly treasures were changed to heavenly treasures. But, alas, it is too late! Their labors are ended; their race is run; their treasures will only make them miserable in the world to come. If the love of money is the root of all evil," why do our good Christian friends strive so hard to gain it? Why not lend more of their time to Christian devotion, helping to advance the cause of Christ, and hunting up the lost children of Israel?

The Brethren, in general, are a very industrious people, and many of them have laid up abundance of treasures, here on earth; but not being satisfied they still continue the same course. Would it not be more profitable for them to direct their thoughts heavenward? "No man can serve two Masters." I will here mention several chapters and verses of Scripture and ask the reader to find them, and peruse them carefully and ponder well the contents. First I will refer you to Matthew 6: 19 verse to the end of the chapter; Matthew 19: 20—25; Mark 10: 19—27; James 1: 8—11; 2: 1—10; 5. 1—7; Luke 18; 18—29; Col. 3: 1—3. I would write much more on this subject but I might take up too much space in your columns. So may God speak peace unto all the world is my prayer.

Unbelief.

"And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 15.

There is but one of two things left for the children of men to do, and that is, they must either enroll themselves in the Lamb's book of life, (Rev. 21: 27,) and become heirs of salvation, or they must die the second death—"be cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death." Rev. 20: 14. This is then the certain doom that awaits all those who will not be found written in the book of life. But if I should neglect my duty as I find it in the word of God, make a bargain with the devil to pay no attention to the "one thing needful," it would be reasonable to suppose that I should find some loop-hole of escape, and probably the very first attempt would be to upset the hell-fire doctrine advocated by Christians; up-rooting as it were Heaven's appeal to men, thus making out God a liar, His will a myth, and Jesus Christ and impostor. (Rev. 22: 16.) Oh! would not hell at last be seven times hotter to my guilty conscience for thus denying what we have received from the hand of our Father, who has in love warned us to flee from the wrath to come? It is evident that, if we deny part of God's word, we will be judged by this which we deny; (John 12; 48) his words will judge us in the last day. Knowing this to be the fact, why do men deny part of God's word? Just because, if I comprehend the fact, they are not willing to bring their nature under subjection; too proud to take up the Bible glass for fear they may behold the carbuncle of sin, that is swiftly hurling them into eternity. If I have a right to disbelieve the Scriptures in one point, my brother or sister have as good a right to disbelieve another. If I hold that one commandment in the New Testament is non-essential, my brother has the same right. If I thought that God does not mean what he says in some part of his word, my brother has the same right in other parts of God's word. And if I do not believe in the Bible at all, why does my friend, who rejects part of the same condemn me? Is not my principle of reasoning yours and yours mine? Have not these principles made an Infidel world a world of skepticism and disputation? Dear reader, do you see what I am striking at? Is not this the foundation of Infidelity? Will not God hold you and I responsible for the manner in which we believe? Oh! let us not have our faith and doctrine based upon a principle that will infuse into the hearts of the rising generation a spirit of unbelief! Whatever God says let us believe it, and this will prompt us to action. "Be not as the hypocrites, who say and do not." It is not strange when we hear men deny the plain and simple but powerful commandments of Christ, such as feet-washing, holy kiss, etc. This is only a little thing, naturally speaking, compared to the disbelief in a hell-fire or the lake of fire. I have given no explanation on the scripture at the heading of this article. It needs none if we only believe what it says. Who will be satisfied to be found missing in the book of life, after taking the love of God into consideration.

How Miracles are to be Weighed.

As miracles are apart from the ordinary experience of our senses, the demand for the grounds on which they are justified is not unreasonable. And the response, promptly at hand, that the miracles of the Bible are intimately connected with the religion of the Bible in defense of them also not unreasonable. If the establishment of the true religion required miracles, that need justifies them. They are to be weighed in a balance in whose other scale is man's soul. If man's first bodily creation could balance a miracle, as it did, surely his eternal salvation can balance a miracle. This is a problem which even a child could correctly solve.

Miracles are claimed for the nation of the Israelites, as they divided the sea and the river, and tracked the desert. Yes; but that nation, along with its tents, furniture, and appliances for worship, carried the true religion—all elsewhere lost out of the world; and, in their loins, bore the future Messiah, the incarnate Son of God, the only Redeemer of men. And this carrying with them, as it were, of the salvation of the human soul, is surely an all-sufficient apology, to every considerate mind, for all the miracles that attended their history, from Abraham and Moses to Christ and his apostles.

So, Gideon's fleece of wool, wet or dry was not for his sake merely, nor for the temporary deliverance of Israel from her outward enemies; but for the Church, the true religion, for the birth of Jesus Christ, for his atoning death on Calvary; and so for us, for the world, for every age of believers, or martyrs, gone by, and for every age of believers yet to come, in all parts of the world, till time shall be no more.

"A trifling thing," says Skepticism, "was that of Gideon's fleece, for the great God to have anything to do with." "Ah, no," says Faith; "for that seemingly small incident touched all the vitality of the world's gospel, being one of those minute conditions of events which affected the question whether that gospel should ever reach us or not." And so on down. Every Bible miracle was, in effect, a gospel miracle; contributing to the salvation of countless multitudes of human souls.

And when the Old Testament laid down this rod of Moses, the New Testament took it up. Our Savior journeyed up and down through Palestine with the staff of miracles in his hand. It was not merely, or mainly, through pity for the widow of Nain that he raised her only son to life. There were other widows in the world who would have liked to have had their sons raised also. The world has had myriads of them. But the peculiarity of this case was that it fell just in the path of the Son of God on earth, when he saw fit to authenticate himself as such by the mighty signs and wonders that he did.

And, in like manner, the miracles of the gospels and early Christians were not works of private benevolence, but had a public end to subserve, namely, to help on the gospel, the true religion, to its establishment among men. They had the same aim that Christ's miracles had. They were to the great end that men might believe on his name. They looked toward the salvation of the human soul. They were necessary for the spread of Christianity and the planting of the church. And these ends being reached, the need of miracles mostly, if not entirely, passed away. The supernatural having done its appointed work, God left his cause thenceforth to the agency of ordinary causes,—including his own providential control of all events,—save only as he continued to interpose, in the individual soul's conversion, by the always supernatural agency of his Holy Spirit.—John Hall.

Receiving the Weak.

"Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations." Romans 14: 1.

The apostle in this chapter from which our selection is made, was addressing his Roman brethren, or rather admonishing them, on account of their difference of opinion, and for their conduct towards one another and towards the Church of Christ. In reading this chapter we gather the idea, that the Romans at this time were a divided people, separating themselves into parties. We understand that the Roman church was composed of converted Jews and Gentiles, and the Jews were a very zealous people in religious matters, and were well instructed in the ceremonial law, and all their lives they had been in the habit of observing it to the very letter; that is outwardly; and in it certain things were forbidden for them to eat, such as are enumerated in Deut. 14th chapter. They were also instructed to esteem some certain days or seasons more than others; such as, the Feast of Unleavened bread, the Feast of Harvest, and the Feast of In-gathering. See Exodus 23rd chapter.

We do not understand that those days about which they were disputing had any reference to the Lord's day, but to the six days of the week wherein men labor. It seems somewhat strange that those converted Jews, after embracing the Christian religion, could not give up those ideas concerning the ceremonial law and its teachings. From this we can understand how hard it is for us to give up the things we were taught in our youthful days. Preconceived opinions seem to be very hard to be forgotten or abandoned.

But the Gentiles, not being included under the ceremonial law and its teachings, as were the Jews, had no such ideas to abandon in order that they might receive the gospel of Christ and thus become the followers of our Lord and Savior. They possessed a great advantage over the Jews, and in consequence of this were more free, and more firmly established in the faith. Taking this into consideration the apostle recommends that they receive such as are weak in the faith, and that not to dispute with them about the eating of meats, or the keeping of days, &c., but to receive them into church fellowship, and then bear with them until they become stronger in faith, and able to renounce all preconceived opinions, and look forward to the beauty of the gospel dispensation, and not be cumbered any more about the things contained in the ceremonial law.

Brethren, let us take the admonition of the apostle; and when we differ in sentiment, bear with one another until we are positively sure that we are right, and that those differing in sentiment with us are in error and have no desire to become right. It is our privilege to persuade and to instruct, also to rebuke in love, considering ourselves that we also may err in our judgment and exposition of truth.

Love.

At first it surprises one that love should be made the principle staple of all the best kinds of fiction; and perhaps it is to be regretted that it is only one kind of love that is chiefly depicted in works of fiction. But that love itself is the most remarkable thing in human life, there cannot be the slightest doubt. For see what it will conquer. It is not only that it prevails over selfishness, but it has the victory over weariness, tiresome and familiarity. When you are with the person loved, you have no sense of being bored. This humble and trivial circumstance is the great test, the only sure and abiding test of love. With the persons you do not love, you are never supremely at your ease. You have some of the sensation of walking upon stilts. In conversation with them, however much you admire them and are interested in them, the horrid idea will cross your mind of "What shall I say next?" Converse with them is not perfect association. But with those you love, the satisfaction in their presence is not unlike that of the relation of the heavenly bodies to one another, which, in their silent revolutions, lose none of their attractive power. The sun does not talk to the world, but it attracts it.—Arthur Helps.

—For myself, I am certain that the good of human life cannot lie in the possession of things which it is for one man to possess is for the rest to lose, but rather in things which all can possess alike, and where one man's wealth promotes his neighbor's.—Spinoza.

On the Departure of our Much Beloved Brother Jesse P. Nyce.

Tune :— We are going home.

Our Brother hath been called away;
He could no longer with us stay.
The Lord hath called ; he had to go,
And leave us one and all below.

His cheerful voice is no more heard,
In singing praises to our God ;
But now he's free from death and pain,
Our loss we hope is his great gain.

How oft we saw his flowing tears,
When he did tell his hopes and fears,
When we together here did meet,
Around a common mercy seat.

But now he's gone to his reward,
To be forever with the Lord,
Where he can sing forever more,
On yonder bright, celestial shore,

Where all his tears are wiped away,
And he can reign in endless day ;
In that bright world, where all is joy,
His tongue in praises he'll employ.

My brethren and my sisters dear,
Oh ! let us prove right faithful here ;
And walk in all of God's commands,
To do his will with heart's and hands.

Then when God calls us, we can go,
To join our friends that left below ;
With them to praise and to adore,
The Lamb of God forever more.

What Shall We Do.

"What shall we do that we may work the works of God?" is a question which often arises in our minds. It is now the same it was eighteen hundred years ago. This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent. Are we willing to believe, and enter into rest? If salvation were by works of Righteousness which we have done, how many of us would strive to gain it? Our Saviour has offered us mercy and pardon and salvation, without money and without price. Believe and live, is the substance of divine testimony. It is not do and live, but it is believe what God has already done for us; take His promises and believe them, and rest there. If God has done and will do all that the Bible says, then we may give ourselves into his hands to do and suffer all his will, without fear or doubt about the result. Why do we try to make ourselves righteous, when "this man receiveth sinners"? Why do we pretend to be good, when God offers mercy only to the sinful and the vile? Why do we try to make ourselves better, when Christ will receive the worst, even the chief of sinners? Why do we make long prayers for mercy, as if God was unwilling to hear, when he says: "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out"? Why do we keep begging and praying for things that God has promised to give, and in our hearts believe that he has failed to hear us. We give ourselves to him, and then do not believe that he will receive us. We ask his forgiveness and do not think that he is willing to forgive us? We talk about seeking the Lord so long, and yet in vain. All the time we have been doubting his goodness and love; disbelieving his promises; forgetting that it was him that took care of us all our lives. We believe that God hates sin; but we do not believe that he loves sinners. We believe that God loves others, and will hear and save others, but in our own case we believe that the God of Truth tells falsehoods. We must believe and live. The Son of Man has been uplifted upon the cross, as was the brazen serpent in the wilderness. One longing, one lingering look; yes; one believing, trusting glance, and we are healed. But refuse to look. We look at our wounds and sores; at our sins and sorrows; we look to our work, our duty, our church, our minister, our friends, our neighbors, our feelings, our experience of others, and the doubts and fears of others, and all the while grow weaker and worse, and draw nearer the gates of death. We must look and live; deal with Christ alone in these matters, as if there was no one else in all the universe, but ourselves and him. As if he died for us alone, as if he loved us alone, as if he speaks to us alone, as if he lives to make intercession for us alone. There is no other name but his whereby we can be saved.

God has not placed our salvation in the hands of our minister, but in the hands of our Saviour. God has not conditioned our salvation on our feelings, but on our faith. It is not by having a good story to tell about ourselves, but it is by believing the good news (the Gospel) that the Bible tells us about God and Christ which must save the lost. We must believe his word; we must have confidence in our heavenly Father. He says he loves us; we must not doubt his willingness and his power to save; we must come boldly to the throne of Grace to help in every time of need. We shall not come in vain; he is willing to be gracious. We must believe what God has said. He has not said that we are good, or righteous, or happy, or saved, while in unbelief. So we need not believe any of these things. But He has said: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." He has said: "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink"; He has said: "He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out"; and He has said: "To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation." We must believe that we are sinners and Christ a Saviour, and all will be well; but if we think well of ourselves and nothing of him; if we think little of our sins, and less of his pardon, we cannot have peace nor blessing, for how can we escape if we neglect so great salvation. Seek the Lord.

Seek ye the Lord while he may be found —Isaiah 55 : 6.

What is it to seek the Lord? To seek the Lord is to seek to know him. We cannot know him until we are taught by his inspired word. By nature we are in darkness as to an Omnipotent being. We must seek to learn his will, his love, his nature, his right to rule us, and his allwise plan of salvation. We must also seek his divine approbation, and by living a holy life, we can gain his favor; and if we are favored by God all the world may be against us, we have no need to fear we are safe. But if he be not for us, we are of all creatures most miserable and undone. If all classes of mankind would praise us and speak well of us, I believe our religious traits would not be consistent with the will of God. If we desire God's love within our hearts, we must seek to serve him; his service is freedom to all. "David choose rather to be a door-keeper in the house of God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." No one has ever spent his life in God's service for naught. He has said that he will make his abode with those that love him. What a glorious consolation it is to us, when we feel as the Psalmist did when he said, "The Lord of Hosts is with us." We should also seek a home with God; for the time will soon arrive when we can no longer dwell upon this earth. Then we can exclaim with the Apostle Paul, "It is better to be with Christ" than to be in this world. Certainly it is a glorious thought to be forever with the Lord.

But again, the question arises, how must we seek the Lord? Now this seems to be a very great point. It is sometimes said, "Many seek and never find." If they do not find, they seek amiss. We should confess our sinfulness before God, and seek humbly; for "God resisteth the proud." "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted; but he that exalteth himself shall be abased." We must humble ourselves that we may be approved of God. He giveth grace to the humble. The Publican was humble, and God saved him; Paul was humble, and he did not perish. We should seek the Lord from day to day, and until the end of our lives. Suppose a man should say, I will seek God for six months or a year, he could not realize God's pardoning grace as long as he was in that mind, certainly not. We must hold on to God's promises as long as we live if we desire to be heirs of that celestial abode which God has in reservation for his people. He hath declared in his word, "If a man draw back, my soul hath no pleasure in him." It is our inevitable duty to seek God supremely—to seek him more than health, and friends, and ease, and life itself. To seek him above all things else we cannot serve God and Mammon. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Leave all for Christ. Give up all to Christ; for he is worthy of your whole heart. He has said, "Ye seek me and find me, when ye shall search your whole heart."

When must we seek the Lord? We must seek him in this life, and not in the next.

For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge in the grave whither thou goest; but seek the Lord now. You should never procrastinate nor wait for more convenient time, for God is angry with the wicked every day, and may cut asunder the threads upon which our life depends. God has said, "He has no pleasure in the death of the wicked," but would rather all would turn and seek God. Think but for a moment of our blessed Saviour, who left the shining courts of heaven, condescended into this sinful world, and suffered and died upon the cross, that you through his blood might be saved and have access to the tree of life. Can you hesitate a moment to give your heart to him "who will in no wise cast away." What holy thing did you ever do that he is not worthy of your whole heart? "For in him the Father is well pleased." God says, "I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me." From the tenor of the Gospel, we are inclined to believe that God desires us to seek him in our youthful days, while our hearts are not hardened in sin; as the morning is the most desirable part of the day to us, so are youthful days the most desirable to God if devoted to his cause. As man grows old, his heart grows hard. If you ever had a thought to enter into the fold of Christ, and waited for a more convenient time, did you not find it much harder the next? But now, to-day; if you wait till to-morrow it will be the same as now. Now God calls you by his word, his ministers and his spirit.

Twelve Excellent Rules for Promoting Harmony Among Church Members.

1. To remember that we are all subject to failings and infirmities of one kind or another.

2. To bear with, and not magnify, each other's infirmities. (Gal. vi. 1,2.)

3. To pray one for another in our social meetings, and particularly in private. (James v. 16.)

4. To avoid going from house to house for the purpose of hearing news, and interfering with other people's business.

5. Always to turn a deaf ear to any slanderous report, and to lay no charge brought against any person, until well founded.

6. A member be in fault, to tell him of it in private before it is mentioned to others.

7. To watch against a shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment.

8. To observe the just rule of Solomon, that is, to leave off contention before it be meddled with (Proverbs viii. 11)

9. If a member has offended, to consider how glorious, how godlike it is to forgive, and how unlike a Christian it is to revenge. (Eph. iv. 2.)

10. To remember that it is always a grand artifice of the devil to promote distance and animosity between members of Churches; and we should therefore watch against everything that furthers his end.

11. To consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the Church in particular, when we are all united in love, than we should do when acting alone, and indulging a contrary spirit.

12. Lastly, to consider the express injunction of Scripture, and the beautiful example of Christ, as to these important things. (Eph. iv. 32. Pet. ii. 21; John xiiii. 5, 33.)—Evangelical Messenger.

Joy the Key-note of Christian Life.

"Finally, my brethren rejoice in the Lord. To write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe" Phil. iii. 1.

Joy, it has been remarked, is the key-note of the Epistle to the Phillippians; and such also should be that of the Christian life. But there is a certain class of disciples who, like doubting Thomas, are willing to die with the Lord, but are always occupied with beholding the shadows of the cross which they bear, rather than with the light emanating from that which bore their Savior. They thus deprive themselves of the strength and comfort flowing from joy, and their Lord of the glory due him. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me."

What though stormy billows surge around you, afflicted child of God!—If like the boy on the mast, you fear and are bewildered, but heed the call, "Look aloft," and all will be calmed. Seated on the throne of the universe is your Redeemer. He is made head over all things unto his body, which is the Church." He is "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land;" "a high rock and and strong tower of defense" to his people. And tender lambs are borne in the bosom of the gentle Shepherd of Israel.

Does your way appear dark and mysterious? Look aloft. Jesus is a "sun and a shield;" he giveth all that is needed: grace for the conflict, and glory for the crown. He will "guide you by his eye." He will gently lead you. Amid the devious paths of life the Christian may feel like saying as the benighted child, "O Father it is so dark, I can not see the road. Where am I going?" The calm reply comes back, "Never mind, my child I know the way; only follow me. I will lead you."

Are you sore and wounded in the conflict with Satan and your own sins? Look aloft. Cease to behold the conflict and cares around you, and the sins in you, and fix the eye of faith on him who passed through the one and bore the other. "Is there no balm in Gilead?" Yes, "with his stripes are we healed.

Are you weary, pressed beyond measure with the cares and trials of life? Hear the joy-giving message, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Yes, "there is a rest for the weary;" rest in Jesus, and rest in heaven. This rest in Jesus filleth every desire. Your sufficiency is of God. "I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward." "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste." "He will make you lie down in green pasture; he will lead you beside the still waters." Hence the prophet could exclaim in his exalted trust in Jehovah "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there be no herd in the stall"—Though all earthly comforts seem gone—"yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." Then if storms of sorrow fall, only look to Jesus. Look aloft.—Church Advocate.

Selected for COMPANION.

A Through Ticket.

BY H. SNYDER.

Having travelled thousands of miles, and become pretty well acquainted with railroads, as well as other modes of conveyance, I propose a few suggestions for the safety of travellers in this fast age.

Be sure you are in the right train. In the confusion, where several roads meet, it is easy to make a mistake; and many a traveller has come to himself after it is too late, and found himself going in the wrong direction. The hurry to be off in pursuit of wealth or pleasure is so great, that many start without being properly equipped. And some are so encumbered with unnecessary baggage, that they suffer great loss before their journey is ended. For safe travel, and to avoid being detained, or losing your property by knavish porters or hackmen, take no more baggage than is necessary. Apply to the agent, ticket through, check your bagage at the start, select your seat in the right car, and do not leave it while the train is in motion; keep a guide book at hand, attend to all the directions of the conducter at all the junctions, keep out of the grog-shops by the way, and all evil company; when you change cars, do it with as little delay as possible, and you will no doubt reach your place of destination in safety, and find a cordial welcome.

Fellow-traveller to the bar of God, have you a through ticket? Are you in the car of salvation, on the straight and narrow way to the city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens? Has your fare been paid through, and is your seat secured? The Conducter will soon be round to examine the tickets. Is yours genuine? Has it been stamped with the blood of Christ? Has the Holy Spirit sealed it with the seal of heaven? Will it stand the scrutiny of the eternal Judge, and admit you into the banqueting house above? Need I tell you, you are in the car of time, on the road to eternity: the engine is in motion; no stopping now, no, not a moment. Are you in the right train—the train for heaven? Have you got your ticket? Is your name registered in the office above, and your fare paid? If not, get it immediately. Don't delay a moment.

I beseech you, don't travel another day without a through ticket for heaven—no, not an hour; another moment may be too late. There are but two roads. You are in the express, bound direct to heaven or to hell—no time to lose; have your name registered without delay, and your seat secured. Then let the train fly swift as it will; you are safe.

Do you want to know where, or how to get a through ticket? We will tell you; you cannot buy it with gold or silver; neither will pass in the office to which we allude. If you had all the world to give, it would not be accepted. It could not even purchase a cure for leprous Naaman—you must accept a free ticket or none. For your encouragement, I tell you Jesus Christ has paid the fare, and all you have to do is to accept his terms. Don't be offended at the terms, for he will not change them for your accommodation. Though you may be a great man in your own estimation, and think yourself better than others, you must come down to the same terms Naaman did. God is no respecter of persons; all wash in the same fountain, the king and the beggar, the master and the servant. The terms are, repent, and forsake your sins, or no ticket. Turn, or die; believe in Christ, or perish. He will not give you a ticket to loiter by the way at the grog-shop, the card-table, ball-room, or theatre, or to associate with wicked men, and travel on his holy Sabbath on business or pleasure. He has in his great kindness provided a Guide-book for travellers, and laid down in it all the places of danger, and how they are to be avoided.

He has told you the way is straight, the door narrow; that many will seek to enter in, but will not be able; to avoid the way of transgressors, and deny yourself sinful enjoyments. He has condensed the rules of conduct in the 20 chapter of Exodus, so that the traveller can commit them to memory in a few minutes; and his Guide-book ought to be ever at hand. No traveller should be without it. It should be consulted at least every night and morning by the way. It points out the safe stopping places, and what kind of company to keep. It is full of examples of wrecked passengers, mutilated corpses, blasted hopes, and murdered souls, all by their own neglect. It holds up the antediluvian world, and the wicked people of Canaan, Sodom, and Gomorrah, crowding the cars on the broad way to destruction; while on the other hand it abounds with facts of safe arrivals in the heavenly city, of the angels rejoicing over new accessions to the mansion-house above. It tells of the crowns of glory and palms of victory that await wise travellers; that there is a land of pure delight, where saints immortal reign—where there are no sorrows, tears, or death. It tells us, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things God hath prepared for them that love him." They are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. What more can the traveller want?

Dying fellow-traveller to eternity, how long have you been on the road? May-be it is only a few years; yet in that short time, how far and fast you may have journeyed in the wrong direction—on that road which ends in woe. Apply at once for a through ticket upon the royal road which the King of heaven himself has cast up and opened—a through ticket, with the life-insurance included. You know not how soon you will reach your journey's end, or pass the station beyond which it will be impossible to change your course. An hour longer may fix your home in hell forever, as you cannot come back to remedy the neglect.

Have you travelled on to the meridian of life, and still no genuine through ticket for heaven? Apply at once; be importunate; take no denial; the Conducter may soon call for your ticket, and your undying soul be demanded. No excuse will avail you then; all eternity will not be sufficient for you to mourn over your folly. Between those two worlds there is "a great gulf fixed," and no soul can pass from one to the other. Here and now you are deciding which of the two shall be your everlasting home.

Are you old, and near the end of your journey, and still in the wrong train, or uncertain where you are going? Oh, awake to your danger. Heaven or hell must soon burst on your vision; a company of angels or devils are waiting for your arrival; their conveyances are all ready; your place is prepared. Holy angels and saints are waiting to greet you with joy, or devils and lost spirits to aid in torturing your wretched soul. May-be you will find among them your own children, to curse you for your example, and charge their damnation on your neglect of their souls. Remember the rich man in the gospel.

See, the engine is beginning to slack its speed. The brakes are pressing on the wheels. A moment, and all is over. The pulse is stopped, the eye glazed, the heart still, the journey ended. The Judge is there to greet you; "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;" or to say, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Oh, look well to your ticket without delay. C.

On The Lord's Side.

No man can be on both sides of the line at the same moment. "He that is not for me is against me." Because a man takes his seat at the communion table half a dozen times in a year, it is no proof that he is on the Lord's side. For through all the rest of the year he may be living on the side of worldliness and self-indulgence. "One swallow does not make a summer." The church-member who is quick to accept every invitation to evening socialities, and is almost never seen at a prayer-meeting, cannot certainly be on the Lord's side. The church-member who lives in luxury at the expense of Christ's treasury, certainly is not on the Lord's side. The professed Christian who, in full view of the fact that the drinking-usages are filling hell with victims, still offers the intoxicating cup to his neighbors, is most assuredly not on the Lord's side. For we cannot see how a man can possibly act so as to please God and to please the devil at the same time. When a person is glib in the store or the shop in recommending his goods for sale, and yet never opens his lips to recommend Christ, how can such an one claim to be on the Lord's side? When a church-member abuses the confidence placed in him to sell damaged wares to his customers, or when he lives on the money which honestly belongs to his creditor—how can he without a blush, pretend to be on the Lord's side?

We might multiply such close questions; but the real and final test which covers the whole is this one—Am I living in daily obedience to God? Then am I on God's side. Am I trying humbly and faithfully to keep Christ's commandments? Then am I one of his disciples. Not only in the one act at the sacramental-board, but in every act of our lives the Divine Master seems to be saying to us. "Do this in remembrance of me." We fear that if Christ were to come to all our communion services this month, and by his reproachful look were to drive out all the Peters and Judases who have either denied him or betrayed him, there might be a sad array of empty pews! Scores would be "going out into the garden to weep bitterly."—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, in Evangelist.

The Bible

Oh, friends, if there is one great thing in this world, it is the Bible of God; great in origin, great in thought, great in promise, great in beauty, great in purpose, great in power, great in its results! It hangs us by a golden cord from the throne of the Highest, and all heaven's light, life, love and sweetness come down into it for us. It hangs there like a celestial harp; the daughters of sorrow tune it, and awake a strain of consolation. The hand of joy strikes it, and feels a diviner note of gladness. The sinner comes to it, and it discourses to him of repentance and salvation. The saint bends an ear to it, and then it talks to him of an intercessor and immortal kingdom. The dying man lays his trembling hand on it, and there steals thence into his soul the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." "When thou passest through the waters, they shall not overflow thee, and through the fires thou shalt not be burned." "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world!" "The last enemy shall be destroyed is death." "This mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and death shall be swallowed up in victory." Where is promise, where is philosophy, where is song like this? Magnify the word of God!—E. E. Adams.

Repose in Christ.

To those whose flight is upward, though toiling on wearied wings, yet the very air by which they are upborne, and without which they could not ascend, is the breathing of the spirit, and there is rest in that atmosphere. It is not felt, because the soul is toiling upward to find repose in Jesus, and until it finds that repose, nothing seems to rest; but were it posible to send it back again to earth, it would quickly feel that there was no more real rest of the heart in seeking Heaven than in possessing Earth. —Selected.

How to Preach the Gospel.

The Gospel is God's message of love to the world. It harmonizes with the law's denunciation of sin, and even amplifies the claims of Moses. It announces God's readiness to pardon offenders, and his ability to do this in conformity with his own being and government, without seeming to favor transgression. Nay, the Gospel enlarges in God's holiness, his detestation of vice, and his infinite forbearance, wisdom and power, as manifested in the sufferings and death of his dear Son, in order to save the guilty from the "curse of the law,"—a curse wide-reaching, inexorable, and eternal. It declares that Jesus Christ has become "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." The Gospel, then, is simply the annunciation of God's method of saving sinners, —a system every way worthy of the blessed God.

This message of love and salvation has been been committed to earthen vessels. God does not come in person, to proclaim it. Who, if he did, would not withdraw, and, "standing afar off," exclaim, "Let not God speak with us, or we be all dead men?" Nor has God commissioned the angels either to redeem or announce to the world the the glad tiding of redemption. But men, of like passions, wants, weaknesses, and sympathies with the whole race, have been selected, and, moved by the Holy Spirit himself, bidden to proclaim "all the words of this life" to the people. Thus commissioned, the minister becomes a "savor of life" or of "death" to all who hear him. "Who is sufficient for these things?"

Happily the New Testament not only teaches the Gospel in its nature and power to save men, but gives faithful instructions as to how it should be preached to render it most effective. The New Testament alone gives a better insight on the method of preaching the Gospel than many of the seminaries impart by years of the most painful, not to say pitiful training.

The gospel should be preached with authority, simplicity, and faith.

Too many preachers go forth, especially from the seminaries, to compare the merits and claims of Christian religion with Mohammedanism, Confuciusism, Buddhism, or rationalism, strike a balance in favor of the truth and then suggest to the people that they might do well to consider the claims of the New Testament. Others speak of sin and its consequences, of God and his authority, of man and his wants, with such an indifferent air as to make the impression that God will be greatly obliged if the people will patronize him by believing on his Son. Very little soul-stirring denunciation of wrong is heard in such quarters. The gravest conviction produced by these efforts simply causes the people to regard religion as, perhaps, a good thing, but only secondary in importance, which it may be well enough to give heed to after they have attended to the, more weighty matters of time and sense. If the preacher, as God's messenger, spake boldly, "O wicked man, thou shalt die;" "the wages of sin is death;" "but he that believeth not shall be damned;" and then, as the people inquired what they should do, tell them to believe on the Lamb of God, he would be regarded as bringing a message that could not be neglected but at the greatest peril. The Master spake with authority. He demanded, not begged, an audience. He told the people that whether they were willing or unwilling, God's authority must be respected; and that if they did not repent, speedily repent, they should all perish. Now the minister should catch this spirit. He is not, of course, denounced, in the spirit of bitterness and haughtiness, as if he were the Judge or Savior, but with a zeal and love begotten of a conviction of the worth and wants of immortal souls.

The preacher should adopt the plainest and most straightforward style. There are few men in the pulpit to-day who do not use words, phrases, classical or historical allusions that are not understood by the tenth part of their audiences. Some of them commend simplicity who do not practice it. And I have heard a few preach who were so evidently thinking of themselves,— their gestures, tones of voice, the rounding of their periods,—that the message they were sent to deliver and the desire for its saving effects on the people were entirely forgotten. Such efforts would cause angels to weep. Let such seek to have their hearts and heads full of the soul-stirring truths of the gospel and they will have no trouble to so preach it that men will believe it. Whether they lift their hands too high or too often, stand too straight and stiff, or walk about too much, agree with Webster and Bullion in every word and sentence pronounced, or not, will signify very little, if they deliver their message with the view of making it so plain and emphatic that the most ignorant shall understand.

He must be a man of faith. The realities of things invisible must live in his heart and life. Without faith he will never so prophesy that the dry bones about him will rise up and live. Barnabas was "full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." No wonder he was eloquent, and nothing strange that "much people was added unto the Lord." Such are men of power with God and of salvation to the people. The gospel is not a fable or a may-be-so in their messages, but the power of God and the wisdom of God.

W. M.

The attention of the public, during the last few weeks, has been largely directed to the movements of workingmen in New York, Philadelphia, and other places. We see no reasons why an effort of the workingmen of this country to redress their grievances and to improve their condition, should not enlist the prevailing sympathies of the people at large, unless, indeed, such reasons are furnished by the agitators themselves. Too often the combinations of the employed classes proceed on the assumption that employers are their natural enemies, who must be overborne and humbled at all hazards; and when they have so far succeeded as to be masters of the situation, the trades' unions and strikers exhibit a remorseless tyranny that is scarcely parallelled by the most selfish of employers. A recent instance of this kind is thus described by a New York daily.

A New Scientific Discovery.—The higher we ascend, the colder it becomes; and yet at very great elevations the rays of the sun exert a heating power greater than that which they are found to produce in the valleys. Prof. Piazza Smyth found that on the top of Teneriffe, at an elevation of 10,000 feet above the level of the sea, a thermometer exposed to the direct rays of the sun, showed a temperature of nearly 200° Fah.—Prof. Phin.

LEND A HAND.

Life is made of ups and downs—
Lend a hand;
Life is made of thorns and crowns;
If you would the latter wear,
Lift some crushed heart from despair—
Lend a hand.

Crowns are not alone of gold!
Lend a hand;
Diadems are bought and sold;
But the crowns that good men own,
Come from noble deeds alone—
Lend a hand.

Many crowns that many wear—
Lend a hand;
Never in the sunlight glare;
Diamonds never in them shine,
Yet they hold a light divine—
Lend a hand.

Hold a light that ne'er shall fade—
Lend a hand;
Beauty, art hath never made;
For these crowns that good men wear,
Everlasting are, as rare—
Lend a hand.

Would you own so bright a crown?
Lend a hand;
When you see a brother down,
Lead him from the deep, dark night,
Place him in the morning light—
Lend a hand.

"No Man can serve two Masters."

BY D. B. MENTZER.

So says my Testament. The words are the words of Jesus. We have reason to believe that many persons do try to serve two masters, but they find it impossible to please both, and find it impossible to love the one as well as the other. The ways and manners of the one master are not the same as the other, and so they conflict. The one may be more agreeable than the other, and so jealousy may arise. Surely "no man can serve two masters." A few days ago I saw two men walking along the street together, and a little dog ran along after them. So they went on for a while until they came to the corner of a certain street. The men shook hands and went opposite ways. Then I saw at once to which of them the dog belonged; he could not follow both, so he trotted after his master. He could not follow two masters.

So, dear children, it is with you. You may try to be Christ's servants and the servants of Satan, at the same time, but your efforts will prove useless. You must follow either the one or the other, because the way to Christ is just in an opposite direction from the way to Satan. If you turn your faces toward Christ and heaven, then Satan and his dismal, horrible hell will be behind you. Get farther and farther away from Satan and his burning pit, by giving your whole service to Christ. When Satan tempts you, give him no attention. Look to Jesus, and pray for his help. Let not your mouth speak the lie, the profane word, or any evil word. Think good thoughts, and let your mouths be filled with words of prayer, or songs of praise, or words of kindness and good cheer to all your associates. If thus you live, you will not only be useful and honored members of society, but will grow in the knowledge of the Lord, and by obedience to this command you will do his good pleasure, and he will give you a home in heaven. But remember Satan is busy and exceedingly cunning. He tempts everybody, and if he could, he would make everybody as miserable and forlorn as he is himself. He was the first sinner, and the first liar. Beware of him. He will come after you with the "latest fashions," and try to get you to wear some of them, and how many, many obey him quick. He will show you the dram-cup with its crimson contents; he will throw beside you highly colored bills of the "Latest Novel," or "The coming circus and combined show." Now beware. Keep your faces toward Jesus, and all these vanities will neither entice nor corrupt you. But here he comes with other snares! Be awake! He gets up a fight among his servants, to attract your attention. But heed it not. You cannot fight, because you love Jesus, and love everybody else. He provokes his servants to swear; but you cannot profane or take in vain that dear name in which you find salvation, and grace, and hope of heaven. He shows you a band of persons who make extensive use of a weed which he claims and cultivates, and uses as an instrument of temptation. Some are helping to cultivate and prepare the article for market. Some chew it; some smoke it in pipes, and some take rolls of it, put fire to one end of it and their mouths to the other, and on they go, drawing, puffing, spitting and making themselves disagreeable generally. Satan says boastingly, "It is manly." The consumers assist in the plea of justification, and say it is beneficial, when there is no nutriment, nor even purity in it, and not only truly sensible people, but many of the consumers declare it injurious.

So the Satanic master, in many ways, seeks to destroy our race. Dear young readers, beware; and give your influence on the side of purity, true manhood, holiness, righteousness—the side of your Lord and Savior.

"You cannot serve two masters." Remember it. Let the words be so familiar to you that they may seem hung about you, every day of your life. Do you hear that voice from heaven, coming down through the periods of Bible history: "The Lord, your God; Him only shalt thou serve." I re-echo the sound, Serve the Lord, and him only. Let Jesus be your only Master. He is kind, gentle, pure, the best master. Serve him truly, and heaven will be yours surely.

How Children Suffer from Fear.

No pain is more dreadful to endure than fear. Few parents realize how much their children suffer from this cause. "There is nothing to hurt you," is an assurance which does not allay the apprehension. An undefined something, existing often only in the imagination, is the occasion of just as real suffering as a most tangible evil could be. This suffering from fear has much to do with the almost universal dislike which children have of going to bed. They are left alone in some chamber away from the family—a wise arrangement so far as quietness is concerned, and judicious entirely if the child exhibits no fear. But only those who remember what horrors possessed the imagination when they, as children, were left alone in the dark can fully realize the sufferings of a nervous child. "I don't mind you whipping me, father," said a little fellow who had been repeatedly punished for crying when put to bed alone."—Rural South Land.

DALE CITY, PA., Sept. 24, 1872.

Visit to Armstrong County Pa.

We left Dale City on the 4th inst., at 11:15 A. M., in company with Elder C. G. Lint, on a mission of love to the brethren in the Redbank and Cowenshannoc churches, Armstrong county, Pa. The day was pleasant, and we much enjoyed the trip of 112 miles north-west, down the Casselman, Youghiogheny and Monongahela rivers, to Pittsburgh, where we arrived at 6 o'clock P. M. Here we were obliged to remain till next morning.

THURSDAY 5th. When we arose in the morning it was raining, which, in connection with the smoke of the Iron City, made the morning seem rather dreary. At 7:20 A. M., we took the train on the Allegheny Valley railroad for Mahoning, 55 miles north, arriving there at 10 o'clock A. M. There we were met by our young brother, Jeremiah Shoemaker, son of brother Philip Shoemaker, a worthy deacon in the Redbank church. He took us to his father's, a distance of 11 miles. This route, between Mahoning and Redbank creeks, abounds with picturesque scenery, but the continuous mists and fogs prevented us from enjoying it. We reached brother Shoemaker's about 1 o'clock, where we were kindly received and entertained by his interesting family, and the afternoon was passed very pleasantly in social and religious conversation. Here too we met our esteemed young brother Jesse P. Hetric, who is the only minister in this church. Although he is alone, he applies himself with a commendable zeal, and, no doubt, the Lord will bless his labors. He labors about one-fourth of his time in the Cowenshannoc church.

In the evening we were taken to the meeting-house to fill our first appointment. Because of the inclemency of the weather, the attendance was small, but otherwise we had an interesting, and, we trust, profitable meeting. Brother Lint preached to us from Matt. 18: 20, "For, where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them." This text, so well adapted to the occasion, was treated in an appropriate manner, and we were made to realize our Savior's promised presence. It is indeed cheering to know that the Lord condescends to meet with and bless the few, assembled in his name, as well as the many. Let us ever try to meet together in his name—with a feeling sense of our weakness, dependence and unworthiness, yet with humble boldness and reliance upon the Lord—so that we may be enabled to receive and use all needed grace. After meeting we returned with brother Shoemaker, under whose comfortable roof we enjoyed a good night's repose.

FRIDAY 7th. We passed the forenoon at the same place. Meeting at 1 o'clock P. M. The congregation was again small. This we could not altogether understand. The night before it was too unpleasant for people to get to meeting, but now it seemed to be so pleasant that they could not leave home. We will suppose, however, for charity's sake, that the appointment was not well circulated. We tried to preach from 1 John 3 : 1.

After meeting brother Shoemaker took brethren Lint, Hetric, and ourself to brother Robert Ferguson's, to see our young sister Sarah Ferguson, who has been afflicted with dropsy for more than a year. We found her cheerful and resigned, although she suffered considerably. May the Lord give her strength to endure her affliction and to prove faithful. After enjoying a pleasant, social season, and supping with them, we again repaired to the meeting-house for evening meeting. We had the pleasure of meeting brother Jacob Kelso (minister) from the Plumcreek church, and some more brethren and sisters whom we had not seen for a long time. Brother Lint preached from James 1: 25. We all had the privilege of seeing; and if any failed to do so it was not because the Gospel mirror was not held up to them, but because they refused to look into it. May we not be forgetful hearers, but doers of the work, and thus be blessed in the deed. Lodged at brother P. C. Hetric's, and enjoyed their society much.

SATURDAY 7th. In the forenoon they brought their offerings together and we dined at the meeting-house where we continued to partake of our meals till Sunday evening. At 1 o'clock P. M., brother Lint preached from the first part of the 14th chapter of St. John. Here at the meeting we met Elder Lewis Kimmel from the Plumcreek church.

After meeting there was a choice held for two deacons. The result of the choice was not announced till Sunday morning.

The examination exercises commenced about half-past 4 o'clock. The number of communicants was unusually small; but we had a spirit-riviving feast together. We take occasion to remark here that the ordinances were observed more according to our views of propriety than we had ever seen before. There was comparatively little speaking done during their observance. Would it not be much better to dispense with that time-honored (and that is all it has to commend it) custom as much as practicable? A few words to the members on each ordinance, without consuming time in talking to the congregation, would render the services much more impressive and edifying. Spectators would be better entertained, and would have a chance to observe more closely; and thus they would enter into the spirit of the ordinances more than with all the preaching that is done to them.

Lodged at friend Wm. Baughman's, our brother-in-law. Brother Lint lodged at sister Katie Shoemaker's, widow of our much esteemed, deceased brother, Elder Joseph Shoemaker.

SUNDAY 8th. Met at 9 o'clock to install the deacons that were chosen. The brethren selected were P. C. Hetric and George Lonberger. These brethren are in the prime of life. May they use "the office of a deacon well," and "purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus."

Preaching at 10 o'clock A. M., by brother Lint from Rev. 21: 7. At the close of the meeting three expressed their desire to unite with us in the service of the Lord, two of whom were then baptized, and the third, we presume, was baptized since.

At 2 o'clock P. M., meeting again. Brother Lint spoke from Matt. 11: 28; and in the evening again from Mark 8: 36. This was the last of our meetings at Redbank; and, consequently, we were obliged to give the parting hand, no doubt, never to meet again as we had during this love-feast season. We lodged at brother Philip Shoemaker's.

MONDAY 9th. After a pleasant, social and religious season in the morning, we were taken, by brother J. Beer (our father, according to the flesh,) to his home in the Cowanshanoc church, a distance of about 16 miles. We arrived at his place about noon, and found the remnant of our scattered family in usual health, excepting our youngest sister, Sarah, who has been delicate for some time. As we had only about a day and a half to stop here, and considerable business to attend to, we were obliged to adopt the motto, "Business first, then pleasure"; and we found that, when the former was over we had but little time for the latter. Evening meeting in the Baptist meeting-house in the neighborhood. Brother Lint preached from Matt. 7: 21. The congregation was small, but very attentive, and we hope the good seed sown may be productive.

TUESDAY 10th. Day of business. Met many relatives, old friends and neighbors.

WEDNESDAY 11th. About 8 o'clock we bade farewell to the dear ones in the home of our youth, and were taken 11 miles to Kittanning, the County seat of Armstrong county. Having occasion to call at the Court House, we also interviewed the new jail and the Sheriff's house. We were credibly informed that the building will cost $300,000. What a monster is sin! We took the train at 1:20 P. M., for Pittsburgh. Arrived at 4:45. Lodged at the St. James Hotel. Before retiring we stepped over to the Union depot. Here we met brother Jonas A. Miller from near Dale City, on his way to Waterloo, Iowa. He had met with the misfortune of having his valise carried off by some unknown person. Let others take warning.

THURSDAY 12th. Took the train at 6 A. M., on our line homeward. At Connellsville brother Lint took the train to Uniontown. We passed on, and arrived safe home at noon. Found all as well as usual. We thank those whom we met for their kindness, and the Lord for his care. J. W. BEER.

Brother Adam Hollinger says: "Would it not be better and more convenient, in the list of addresses of ministers, to arrange all who live in one District together?"

"I have not improved much of my disease since I last wrote. I am not able to raise from my pillow alone, nor to stand upon my feet with my whole weight."

ADAM HOLLINGER.

"In regard to brother Hollinger's proposition, we will say, we have been thinking of such an arrangement; not by Districts however, but by congregations. (Wish our correspondents would remember these specific terms, congregation, or branch; District and Church or Brethren.) But it is too late for the coming issue. Will try it for 1874.

Folio or Quarto.

My subscribers and I are strongly opposed to the change in the form of the COMPANION, as many of us bind them into a book, of which the change would deprive us. Please don't change it. ADAM HOLLINGER.

As you propose a change, I will give my mind, as a drop in the ocean. I would prefer the present form, with a cover to contain all the advertisements, or any secular matter that might seem proper. I don't like the credit system; for if I see a dun that don't mean anybody, I don't know but it might mean me; but if you said A. B. or B C., then I would know that it did not mean me.

H. SNYDER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

To Elder John Harshey, of Cornelia, Mo.

DEAR BROTHER: I devote an early and precious hour of a beautiful Thursday morning, in order to give as early a response to your request, found on page 541 of Vol. 8, of the C. F. C., as I can. You request of me to answer seven questions in reference to an article written by me, found in Vol. 8, No 26 of the C. F. C. In that article you seem to understand that I had called public attention to the things concerning the work of the last District meeting of Mo. in such a way as to cast censure and reproach upon the old and young, brethren and sisters who composed said meeting, &c., which is indeed a charge that grieves me to be thought guilty of; and I still believe that after I answer your seven questions, you will understand my article, at least in reference to said charge, in a different light.

1. You ask, "Who says the A. M. forbade the publication of the labors of the District of Mo., on account of its offensiveness?"

ANS. The cause of that remark in my article is found in the first two sentences of the first column on page 362 of the C. F. C., and whoever gave that report there published, says it in regard to the appeal sent from the District of Mo., in these words, verbatim, "There was but one more which was in the form of an appeal, which was tabled and on account of its offensiveness it was forbidden to be published, by adopting the following resolution, which is the cause of its non-appearance in these columns. Resolved that the appeal from Mo. in regard to Salem College, be not permitted to be published in the COMPANION."

2. Who is the A. M.? Is it Brother Wrightsman, or brother H. R. Holsinger, or any brother who gets up and makes assertions which the brotherhood assembled passes by unnoticed, not regarding them worthy of being referred to, or is the work done and decided by referring to the meeting, and by silence getting their united consent, the work of the A. M.?

ANS. These questions I answer inclusive by answering the latter one in the affirmitive. But I am made to wonder, if our reporter brethren report so incorrectly, why they are not immediately sharply rebuked, instead of those who groan in distress from their erroneous reports.

3. "In what sense do you use the word offensiveness?"

ANS. I understand the reporter to mean by that word, in this case, that the appeal referred to above, had offended or given offense to the general brotherhood assembled at A. M.

4. "What are the things you refer to as known to be facts?"

ANS. In my article I referred to things reported, and also to things as known to be facts. Now the things we hear who were not present at D. M. nor A. M., are the things reported; and the things which were heard and seen at either or both meetings are the things by them known to be facts. Yet it is at least probable that some, on account of their confidence in their authors, take things to be facts which are only reported to them as such.

5. "Who are the brethren in Mo., who, if they had been present, would have put different features upon the appeal, or kept it from A. M. entirely?"

ANS., My article does not speak of any certain brethren who would have put different features on the appeal, neither does it say anything about keeping it from A. M., for, perhaps it would not have appeared before D. M. in the form it did. The article reads thus: "And I feel safe in saying, that, had our District been generally represented by delegates (was it?) the appeal would have had on different features, had it at all appeared." This I believe for three reasons: first, from what I believe to be the general sentiment of the brethren assembled and not assembled, who composed the District of Mo., in reference to the subject which I was credibly informed that the appeal embraced; second, on account of your non-assumption, courtesy, and liberality as a moderator; or in other words the general liberty of each expressing their sentiments and with which reverence and respect our reasonable suggestions have hitherto been accepted of; third, because I have strong faith in that proverb which says, "But in a multitude of counsellors there is safety." Prov. 11: 14.

6. "Who is the reporter you refer to, that has imposed upon us the burden you speak of in Vol. 8, No. 26 of the C. F. C."

ANS. My article does not say that any reporter had imposed a burden upon us. It asks the question whether the reporter of the proceedings of the last A. M. imposed upon us this burden, which you call censure and reproach, by himself being the author of this expression (offensiveness) when it was not the expression of A. M., and thus impose upon us brethren of Mo., and especially upon those assembled at D. M., a burden which justice does not demand or require of us to bear, and then I requested the brethren who were present at A. M. to inform on him if he had; but if they did not inform us of such fact, then silence would confirm that he was not the author of that expression or word.

7. "What position do you occupy in the church?"

Dear brother, this is a question which it seems to me that you are not asking for yourself, because I thought you knew it. Perhaps not. It is a question which my timorous disposition would not allow me to answer before the public on every occasion; but in reverence to one who occupies so prominent a position as you do, I can tell the public this because you have asked it. I am not fearful of being charged with being or having been too much concerned in the prosperity of that part of God's Zion which is in Missouri, for one in my position. Nor have I, as yet, been told that I had reached beyond the bounds of my province. But I do hope that if I have been too rash in my remark that my brethren will instruct me how to perform my duties in a manner more effectual for good. For such correction I promised, in my former article, to be open, and that I would submit myself to the elder, &c.

ANSWER. I try to occupy the position of a minister of the gospel, in the first degree. Yours affectionately,

C. C. ROOT.

Brethren's Almanc.

In No. 33, C. F. C., you ask the brethren how the almanac shall be arranged for next year. I will venture a reply for myself, and award each brother or sister, the same privilege.

I regard the Brethren's Almanac as a household necessity. And we had as well have one gotten up in proper style; and contain all useful astronomical data; the names of all the ministers of the church, with their address, which is a great convenience to that part of our fraternity particularly. Historical matter relating to the church, the nation and the world; useful recipes, Biblical history, quotations, proverbs, &c.

Braefogles "pow wow," was very good, if designed as a burlesque; but I could not determine, whether he was on the side of "Art or Nature."

The astronomical department should contain the eclipses, risings and settings, phases and changes, of the sun, moon and stars, with aspects and characters of the planets, all of which are useful to those versed in astronomy!

But the anatomy of the human body as governed by the signs of the Zodic is absurd, indelicate, and superstitious, and would better grace or disgrace a comic almanac. The signs of the Zodiac, and changes of the moon, exert about as much influence on the growth of vegetation, farming, fencing, roofing, salting meat, &c., as the Ecumenical Council did upon the man in the moon. The conjectures of the weather, is of little importance, as we get that in our newspapers, through the Signal Service, which is very good when it happens to hit; astronomical science in regard to the weather, is yet in its infancy, and we can wait till it grows older, and has more experience.

The space allotted to remarkable days, might represent the birth-days of eminent men, as far back as known with accuracy, including our brethren, remarkable events, sacred and historical. Good Friday, Easter, Pentecost, Christmas, &c., may serve to remind us of the events they are designed to commemorate, and form a basis for the brethren, when those days occur to expatiate upon, and about them, and show a superstitious world, that they should not worship, and hallow the creature, instead of the Creator; and that there are 364 other days in the year, upon which it is just as likely these events occurred, for which those days are held in sacred remembrance, as the days named in our almanacs!

Patent medicine advertisements, I don't regard worth the paper on which they are printed.

Now I have said what should be, and what I think should not be in it, and I hope the dear members will all assist in supplying the needful matter, that we may have an interesting and useful Brethren's Almanac.

The Word "Dunker."

The term "Dunker" is an Anglicized Dutch word, derived from the German tunken—to dip, or plunge,—and perhaps is just as appropriate and expressive as the word Baptist, as applied to another denomination. But as the followers of Christ were at one time stigmatized by their opponents in the use of the term Christian, so the Swartzenau Baptists were derided by their rivals on account of their more scriptural mode of baptism; hence the appellation Dunkers. But it can hardly be said in this day and age that this name is applied in a spirit of mockery by any one. Even some of the members and preachers in the church, while speaking to others, make use of the term just because they know of no other word which is more expressive and points more directly to a distinct sect. The phrase "German Baptist" directs the mind of a stranger to the German speaking portion of the regular Baptist church; while many, if not all of the outsiders modestly decline to say "The Brethren," or "The church of the Brethren;" and hardly any, except those who have read the prospectus of the Companion, know why this particular denomination wish to be designated in such a way. The writer has frequently seen a good many men and women too, quite embarrassed, just for want of a better and more expressive term than that used in the church. The writer asks in behalf of a friendly public why the objections to the word "Dunker," as applied to the so-called German Baptist church, cannot be withdrawn; more especially now since it is more intensely English than German.

Dunning.

Brother Holsinger:—I notice in your Diary that a well-wishing brother suggests a plan to relieve you of the task of dunning delinquents. If I apprehend the situation properly the remedy in the case must be applied at "the other end of the string." "Owe no man anything, but to love one another"—is the command; but it applies to those who owe, and not to those who dun. Paul did not approve of delinquents from the fact he wanted every one of the Corinthians to lay by him in store—that there be no gatherings when he came to receive it. He required the Roman brethren to "owe no man (that will include editors) anything"; and the Corinthians be commanded to have the means in readiness that there be no "gatherings" or collectings.

Pay up by paying down, is about the best motto I can devise for all business transactions. Each day spend less than you make, will enable every one to have pocket money. Editors, however, will have their trouble, so long as their agents and others encourage subscribers who are among the promise-to-pay-at-a-more-convenient-season class. Every body in all business should adopt the cash system so far as practicable, and all dunning can be avoided. The command, "Owe no man anything"—is as binding upon the Christian as any other duty,—consequently we should be willing and ready to pay at the proper time,—and it is by so doing that we can truly "love one another."

Daniel Hays.

Brother Henry:—After a long silence, I will again contribute a few lines for the Companion, though what I am about to write brings vivid recolections of things transpired within the last few months, that are painful to think of. We buried a sister-in-law in the month of June, a brother-in-law and a little nephew in the month of August; and during the last two weeks, two of our dear sisters are lying ill with fever. Last evening we drove out into the country to see and wait upon them. This morning they are a little better, for which we feel to thank the Lord who "doeth all things well." Oh, how anxious we feel for their recovery! What affection we see bestowed upon them by the members of the family! Our aged parents,—God bless their gray hairs,—with what careful anxiety do they watch over their two sick daughters? Our careworn mother, after carefully instructing us how to issue the medicine, went to their respective beds and gave them a careful exaination to see if their wants were all supplied, and committing them into the care of God, retired to rest for the night, leaving the sick in our charge for the evening. While attending to their wants, our mind was led to enquire, where will this affliction cease? In death, or in the sound health of our sisters? We pray God for the latter. Ah! but stop, "man is mortal." We think back a few years. We buried an affectionate sister; a year later, a kind brother. This disturbs our mind; thinking perhaps they also may not recover. Perhaps ere another fortnight we may be stricken down ourself. But then, if we have our "lives hid with him in Christ," we can live in him, die in him, be resurrected in him, and forever be with him. Blessed be the thought! Our two sick sisters have been trying from youth up, to live for Christ. Then should God in his wise providence, see fit to remove them from hence, we have a lively hope that they will be with him at rest. When we look around us and behold the many sacred ties that are severed by death, the many families that are broken up, we must of a truth believe that all that is mortal soon will be enclosed in death's cold arms. The young man and the young lady leave the paternal roof to associate with the object of their choice, and live happily together a few short years, as was the case with the two former that we have mentioned. Disease approaches like a strong man, and strikes its victim; he sickens and dies. What deep solemnity prevails around the couch of the dying members! With what painful anxiety do we look upon them, as their life blood is chilling in death, their breath is becoming shorter, their eyes more dim—a gasp! a shudder! the spirit has left its prison house of clay and gone to the God who gave it. The husband has lost his best earthly friend; the parents, a daughter; the children a loving sister. We feel sad. We weep, and long for the time when our spirits, like theirs, shall quit this tenement of clay and fly to heaven and be at rest. "Man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" Job realized the frailty of life. He sees man must die; thence the inquiry, "If a man die shall he live again?" Yes, if we live in accordance with God's holy will we shall live in yon bright world of glory: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. We must have faith in God, do his will; and then, when life shall come to a close, when weeping friends shall stand around our bedside, watching the last respirations of the body, they with us can have the happy consolation that we are going to rest.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Despair Not.

Oh, dear pilgrim, traveling
To the regions of bliss,
Despair not, though Satan
Assails you in this.

Thy way may be dreary
Clouds thy sky of't obscure,
Thy trials be numerous
E're the prize thou secure.

In all may the gospel
With its treasures untold,
It's wrath still concealed
To thy visions unfold.

When sorrows beset thee,
Or temptations assail,
Make Christ's precepts thy shield
And thy guide through the vale.

May his strength to thy soul
In its trials be given,
And the lamp of his love
Guide thee safely to heaven.

Anti-Tobacco.

In COMPANION No. 31, I find an article almost too sweet on tobacco, for me, and as the brother who penned it invites criticism, I trust he will receive the same in a good humor. I do not criticise him to please or displease any one, but to defend what I sincerely believe to be the right.

Brother Solomon starts out by calling our attention to Gen. 1: 31, and then adds: "Now here we see that God was well pleased with his whole creation, and pronounced it very good." True, brother, but that was before the curse, some six thousand years ago, at least, and, in my opinion, will no more apply to the present pernicious modes of consuming tobacco, than Brother S. can smoke his pipe in the lovely bowers of Eden. Ever since the fall, the earth has brought forth many noxious plants, not for man's service, but mainly for his annoyance, to remind him of the curse of yielding, as did Mother Eve, to an appetite that should be subdued. That nature, both animal and vegetable, became vicious and corrupt, and that God ceased to be well pleased, are facts too well known to need proof; and yet Brother S. draws a conclusion from the above, and similar texts, that wholly ignores said facts. His argument in syllogistic form would seem to be something like this: Everything was good; "everything" includes tobacco; therefore tobacco is good. The conclusion is illogical. And if the term "good" be used in a comprehensive sense, with special references to the popular uses of the plant, I am quite sure that the conclusion is, not only illogical, but also false, utterly, mischievously, sinfully FALSE! Hear what an eminent physician says on this point. After speaking of the effects of tobacco on the body, he says: "The disastrous influence of tobacco upon the mind is no less fearful than upon the body. No tongue or pen can describe the intellectual ruin occasioned by it! If angels ever weep over self-inflicted tortures, they have mingled their tears over the unspeakable wretchedness of the tobacco consumer. Liquor and tobacco go hand in hand in the work of destruction; and sooner or later, these stimulants destroy the health, physically, morally and intellectually!"

After quoting several other passages from Genesis, Brother S. continues: "Now, in the foregoing we see that God gave the whole herbial kingdom to man, for his judicious use, tobacco not excepted, that I can see." Well, suppose we grant every word of the above, and what does it prove in favor of tobacco? Absolutely nothing, "that I can see,"—unless, indeed, it can also be shown that chewing, smoking and snuffing, are a judicious use of the tobacco plant. Otherwise the above statement is an argument against these vile practices. Such it really is. Thanks, Brother.—Now, is this question answered right: "What organ in the human body needs this narcotic poison, in order to perform in the most perfect manner, a healthy action? There is none. God has made none; nor is there an organ whose healthy action is not disturbed by the use of tobacco, and which does not instinctively regret it. To every organ it touches, tobacco is poison." These are the words of a noted physician and medicine writer. I believe they are true words.

Brother S. begins his next statement thus: "If it is forbidden in as plain a language of the Holy Bible as that which I have called your attention to," &c. Now, as the "plain language" referred to has little or no bearing on the subject—except to betray the weakness of the opposition—I might safely pass this without further notice. But a word or two. That there is no positive "thus saith the Lord" against tobacco will not seem strange when we remember that in the days of Christ and the apostles the tobacco was doubtless as little known as the country of which it is a native. If I am not mistaken, the Caucasian first learned the manly art of smoking from the American Indian, about three centuries ago. But the noble white man soon got ahead of his teacher, and added not only the refined art of chewing, but also the exhilerating one of snuffing, to his many other accomplishments! But I am not aware that the heathenish savage could ever be brought under the influence of these additional refinements—hence (?) he is a savage and heathen still! To the white man, on the other hand, they have become so enchanting that it seems the spell can be broken only by a new revelation, a part of which must be: "Thou shalt not use TOBACCO!

Brother S. next says, "but if there is none (positive scripture), would it not be very advisable for every brother and sister to consider well what it is to condemn as an abomination, 'that which God created,' &c.? Certainly. But I fail to see in this acknowledgement any excuse for that filthy, but no less "highly esteemed" abomination—tobacco. Brother S. quotes from Genesis, "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you;" but, notwithstanding this, we read further back in the Bible, "Thou shalt not eat any abominable things." So we need not be too sensitive on this point—calling things by their right names. We know that God's very best gifts (not saying that tobacco is one of them) may be abused. And "would it not be very advisable for every brother and sister to consider well" whether the sin does not lie in the abuse (or "use," if it sounds better)and not in the condemnation of the same? Corn and rye are excellent things; and yet,when converted into whiskey, (and even whiskey is an excellent thing—for snake bites) they become a potent element in one of the greatest vices of the age. Just think of the monstrous, fascinating, but soul-destroying perversion! And then remember, too, that a physician of extensive practice, who had thirty-five years in which to make observations, has said that, with few exceptions,every drunkard is also a tobacco consumer, and that a hankering for either of these stimulants naturally leads to the other: and may we not exclaim in his own language:—"O, thou miserable spirit of liquor and tobacco, if thou hast no other name to be known by, let us call thee, devil, for thy name was derived from Bacchus one of the principal leaders in the camp of Satan!"

"To everything there is a season and a time to every purpose under the heavens." This is quoted by the brethren as a "striking evidence" in his favor! But it "strikes" me that the most "striking" thing about this passage is the "striking" amount of evil it will excuse when misinterpreted. If it sanctions chewing and smoking, will it not also sanction drinking and gambling, or any other vice under the heavens? Surely props must be scarce when such flexible ones are sought—sought too, outside the Gospel!

In answer to the question, when is the proper time to use tobacco? Brother S. says, "That seems to be each one's privilege to decide for him or herself." Liberal enough, certainly! But might not some still have a difficulty in deciding?—besides is conscience always a correct moral guide? Why not say at once, "whenever the appetite craves." This answer would remove all doubt as to the "proper time." It would also be consistent. What has conscience or reason to do in the matter?—Passion is on the throne; and if Baal (tobacco) be worshipped as God, why not acknowledge him as such?—However, my answer to the above question would be a little different—something like this: As the tobacco plant is a drug, and like other poisonous drugs has some medicinal qualities, the proper time to use it is, when prescribed by a well-informed physician. But we should no more think of using this narcotic when in the full enjoyment of health than we would think of sending for a doctor merely that we might experience the pleasure (such as it would be!) of taking some of his sugar-coated but, nauseous pills, and of paying him right liberally for making us sick.

"Let all be done decently and in order." Well, well! As if such a a thing were possible. Was Brother S. really in earnest, or did he say this just to amuse the many readers of the COMPANION? At any rate, the advice can not fail to be good,—even if the word "decently" is not quite "in order." May all lovers of the "filthy weed" lay it to the heart. Half a loaf is better than no bread—especially when the company (like the non-tobaccoites) is small. It is safest not to own a mad horse, (perverted appetite) but if he can not be gotten rid of, why, of course, better keep him bridled than to let him run loose. If a certain nameless quadruped must wallow in the mire, it would certainly be more becoming for it to do it "decently and in order," with due respect to all the proprieties of time and place, rather than to splush about regardless of the presence of its more cleanly or more fastidious comrades. Of course said animal might be a little more respectable (and no less happy) if it would forsake its favorite amusement; but if the temptation to indulge can not be overcome, why, then, "let all be done decently and in order"—especially decently—and there can be no "cause for offense"!—But, to be more serious, is there really any "must" or can not" in the case of the tobacco consumer that claims to be a true disciple of Christ? I hope no one will say there is, although many seem to think so. The Christian should feel able to say with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." It is related of an eminent minister of the Gospel (just think a minister—and "eminent!") that he had often in private put a quid of tobacco in his mouth, and then wept like a child under a sense of his shameful bondage to the contemptible weed! He made frequent efforts (on his own strength) to abandon the vile practice, but without success,until at length he resolved in the strength of the Lord to be FREE —and he was free.—Why not go thou and do likewise?

And now I have come to the concluding sentences of brother Solomon's article in favor of tobacco. These have the true ring, and are so unacceptionable that I can not do better than close in his own words: "If any one takes a different view of the matter let him search the Scriptures and take that for the man of his counsel, and walk thereby. May God bless us all and when our few days are ended, crown us heirs in heaven, is my prayer." J. ZUCK. JR.

Condemnation.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. Rom. 8 : 1.

God will never condemn those who are in Christ Jesus; who believe in him, and walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit as the Holy Spirit directs. We must regard principally God, Christ, heaven, and eternal things, in order to please God and to escape damnation. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death, so says Paul. Now we understand by Romans 8 : 2, that the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, has made Paul free from sin and death. Why should it not make us free also? Not only Paul was made free, but a number of others were made free from sin and death, by the same Spirit, the Spirit of Christ. As long as we walk after the Spirit of Christ, there is no condemnation. Let us then be obedient to the law of Christ, and carry out his will, his gospel, and his commandments that we may be made free from the law of sin and death. We learn by reading the third verse that the law in itself was weak through the flesh. God sending his own son in the likeness of sinful flesh; and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us. The law could not deliver those who have broken it, from condemnation and ruin; neither could it lead them to obey it, nor to repent of having broken it. It could make no atonement for sins, and could not save from sin. It was weak through man's depravity and transgression. God sent his son in the likeness of sinful flesh, assumed human nature, to die for us that we through him might live. He died the just for the unjust, condemned sin in the flesh, by dying in our nature to make atonement for sin; showing the evil of sin, the guilt of those who commit sin. Christ then has opened the way in which God could be just, and the justifier of all that believe in Jesus, procuring the Holy Spirit, to lead them to believe in Christ that we might be accepted as righteous, and from love to God always striving to obey him. If we follow after the Spirit, in whom the Spirit dwells, moulding us into the image of Christ, causing us to walk in his way and to follow his footsteps: to regard the things revealed in his divine law; strive to do what he requires: to be spiritually minded; to be governed by the will of the Holy Spirit, regarding principally those things which he reveals, and living for the Savior in whom he delights to glory. To be spiritually minded is life and peace. Spiritual life is manifested in love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, kindness and all the dispositions and and habits which promote the glory of God, and the good of men. Now if we are in possession of these spiritual things, and are not in the flesh or in our natural state under the reigning power of sin, then it is that we have the Spirit of Christ in us. We have been born of God and are his adopted spiritual children. If so be that the Spirit of God dwell in us, the Holy Spirit will lead us to manifest the fruit of the Spirit, Gal. 5: 22—24. If Christ be in us, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life, because of righteousness. For if we are led by the Spirit of God, we are the sons of God. We have not received the spirit of bondage which causes uneasiness, but have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we can cry Abba, Father. Now we are no more foreigners, but are children of the family of God. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs of God and joint heirs of Christ." Now brethren and sisters if we are in possession of these things, let us hold fast to our profession. If we have denied ourselves of fleshy lusts, and have our carnal minds changed into spiritual, let us walk with Christ and keep possession of the Spirit of life that there may be no condemnation to us. The Spirit of life will deliver us from condemnation, and we are spiritually alive, having been raised with Christ through the power of God, who raised him from the dead because of righteousness. Conformity of heart to the character and will of God, through faith in the merits and works of Christ, if we have the Spirit of God dwelling in us, he who raised up Christ, shall also quicken our mortal bodies; make them alive, and raise them up spiritual and immortal, to be with the Lord forever.

Your brother in the Lord,
A. B. HOCHSTETLER.

Sabbath Day.

"Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy."

This command was given to Moses on Mount Sinai, and also written by the finger of God in the tables of stone. There is no commandment of the ten of greater importance; yet scarcely is any one so much disregarded. Well may it therefore begin with "Remember," seeing that thoughtless mortals are so prone to forget it. The Sabbath was not first instituted when the law was given to Moses: it was only renewed. We read of the Sabbath in the second chapter of Genesis. It began as soon as the world began; for on the seventh day God ended his work and sanctified it. There can be no doubt that Adam, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and all the good men of old observed the Sabbath. It is true that we do not keep the self-same day that the Jews did; they kept the seventh day of the week, while we keep the first; but the morality of the Sabbath does not consist in its being the seventh day of the week, but in its being the seventh part of our time. Besides we have the same authority for keeping the first, as the Jews had for keeping the seventh; for Jesus Christ is the Lord of the Sabbath, and his apostles, who acted by his directions, and under the influence of his spirit, constantly met for divine worship on the first day of the week, which was called the Lord's day Acts, 20: 7; Rev. 1: 10.

How are we to keep the Sabbath holy? "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; But the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son," &c. Gen. 20: 10. Six days are allowed for labor, but the seventh is a day of rest. Our worldly business, whatever it be, must be laid aside. The whole family, as well as the master of it, must cease from worldly enjoyment. This commandment is directed particularly to masters of families, who are to take care that all persons under their roof keep the Sabbath. We cannot suppose that only work, or manuel labor or trade, is here forbidden; everything is forbidden that is inconsistant with the design of the day, which is to serve God, and edify our souls. Traveling, walking or riding for mere pleasures sake; trifling visits, paying or receiving wages, frequenting public houses, writing letters, settling accounts, reading books on ordinary subjects, and conversing in a worldly way are all forbidden. Many who will not work on the Lord's day, will play. The Sabbath is as much profaned by idleness, as by business. Mere rest of the body, is the Sabbath of a beast, not of man. We have immortal souls, and this is the day in which their eternal welfare is to be sought. We have the authority of God for these assertions; "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day &c." Isaiah, 58: 13. We are to remember the Sabbath-day, and so prepare for it as to be ready for the service of God; and devote the whole of the day to it. When God separated the Sabbath, or the seventh day of the week, he did not intend that we should worship him three or four hours of this time, but to keep the day holy. Where do we read in the scripture of canonical hours, or find a distinction between church hours and other hours. Does not the passage say, "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy?" By what argument can it be proved that a Sabbath-day is shorter than another? We should begin the day with private prayer. This is necessary to prepare our minds for worship. "Early," said the Psalmist, "I will seek thee." In love. R. POLLARD.

The Christian and Politics.

Is it right that a believer should be a politician?

This is the question before us. And to treat the matter clearly, let me state some points which belong to such a character, if they are not the very conception of it.

I understand then by a politician, one who takes a considerable and constant interest in the civil government of his own country, and of the world at large. He praises the rulers, when he thinks they deserve it, and condemns them when, as he believes, they govern amiss. He lifts up his voice against injustice, fraud, deception, corruption, restraints on liberty. He will resist what is evil, as far as he may by law. He exercises every civil privilege to which he is entitled, to influence the government of his country. If opportunity were offered, he would take office and power in the world, and exercise it for his citizen's benefit.

1. How then can we tell whether this is right of a believer or not? By looking to Jesus as our pattern. His life is recorded to this end—"leaving us an example, that we should follow in his steps." (1 Pet. 2: 21.) Everything he did was pleasing to his Father. "I do always those things that please him;" (John 8: 29; Matt. 17: 5;) and since every perfection was found in Jesus, whatever he did not do, or sanction, is not pleasing to God.

Was Jesus then a politician? Did he take any interest in the political government of his country? Did he pass judgment on the persons or measures of the civil rulers of Palestine? Did he stand up for the politically oppressed and rebuke the political oppressor? Did he exercise authority of any kind in civil matters?

1. His conduct is the very reverse of the politician's. Had he been one, his political feelings must have been peculiarly drawn out by the circumstances of the day. In his days the last shadow of Jewish liberty departed, and his country was oppressed beneath the iron gauntlet of Rome. Such a state of things would have thrilled and agitated to its core the independent citizen, the love of liberty. In the gospel we only gather the political changes of the land, from the most distant hints of the narrative.

2. When occasions occur, on which, if politics be right for the Christian, the Savior must have declared himself, he uniformly puts them aside. One of his hearers beseeches him to engage his brother to divide an inheritance with him. (Luke 12: 13.) Here the politician would have shown himself. Jesus refuses to listen to the matter or to exercise even the lowly power of an arbitrator. "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" If the christian's duty is take the office of judge or divider, Jesus ought to have taken it, as our perfect example of what is right; but he thursts away with firm hand the political element of the question, and only warns the disciples against covetousness.

3. John the Baptist, his own forerunner, the greatest of womenborn, is slain through the arts of an adulterous princess, and by the orders of an ungodly king. How does Jesus meet the event? Does he lift up his voice against the oppressor and murderer? No. John is imprisoned, but Jesus speaks not of the injustice; he is murdered, but he utters no cry against the cruelty or tyranny of Herod. John's disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus. When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by ship, into a desert place apart." (Matt. 14: 10—13.) The case is solemnly announced to him by John's own followers. As pointedly he is silent. The Savior was no politician.

4. Take another incident. "There were present at that season some that told him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices." (Luke 13: 1.) A politician would have been on fire at this national outrage. Religious antipathies met with political. Here was a field wheron to inveigh against Roman cruelty! and to rouse the Jews against tyranny that trampled on the true religion. A pagan profaning with bloody hands the worship of the true God! What would the politicians of our day have said had a party of the Queen's troops fired into a dissenting chapel while they were at worship, and shot some dead, while on their knees? Would not the politician account it almost treason to be calm?

What is Jesus' reply? "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." The politics of the question are wholly passed by, the moral and spiritual view of the matter is alone regarded. This is an especial, a most decisive case. Doubtless it made the blood of every native Jew boil with rage. But Jesus drops no word of indignation against the governer's crime, nor applauds the Galileans as martyrs for their country. Jesus then was no politician.

5. The politician must maintain his civil rights, not only (he would tell you) for his own sake, but to teach authority not to overstep its just boundaries. An unjust demand upon his purse in the way of tax, he would esteem himself bound to resist. But how does Jesus act in such a case? The demand of the tribute-money is made upon him. (Matt. 17: 24.) He proves his exemption, but he works a miracle to pay the demand.

6. A question is raised by his countrymen, and referred for his decision —'Whether it was lawful to pay tribute to the Roman emperor or not?' This critical question must have drawn out the politician. Involved in it lay the right of the Romans to rule Judea, and impose taxes at their will. The oppressions of the governor were before his eyes. The Cæsar that swayed the sceptre was profligate, cruel, a murderer. Yet he bids the Jews pay tribute to an idolater, and though the emperor might apply the money to the support of idolatry.

Jesus then was not a politician. I am a disciple of his? Neither then am I to be one. 'It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master.' If Jesus did not intermeddle in civil government it is because such conduct would not be pleasing to God. Jesus neither acted politically himself, nor sanctioned it in others. To be engaged in politics, therefore, either as an actor or speaker, is no part of my duty as a Christian, else the character of Jesus is not perfect. But his perfection is my pattern; and, therefore, it becomes me to refuse, as pointedly as he did, to mingle in politics. For this my call, to be "not of the world, even as Jesus was not of the world." (John 17: 19.)

II. But did not Paul plead his Roman citizenship when they were about to scourge him? Did he not, when his life was in danger, appeal to Cæsar? True: and the Christian is permitted, therefore, when on his trial, to plead the provisions afforded us by the law to save himself from death or injurious treatment. Be neither of these points from part of the character of the politician, such as we have described him.

Take the strongest case. Paul and Silas are dragged by interested men before rulers of Philippi. The magistrates, without any form of trial, scourge them and thrust them into prison. (Acts 16: 19—24.) What would a politician have done in such a case? Would he not have thought it due to his Roman citizenship to carry the cause to Rome and to make an example of these tyrannous magistrates, that all throughout the empire might know that the rights of a citizen were not to be trampled on? Does Paul say so? No. He requires, indeed, that the magistrates should not dismiss them privately, but come themselves and set them free. But he exacts no apology; he lays no information against them. This would have been to act the politician, and this he does not do.

III. Many of the principles put forth in the Epistles decide the present question.

1. What is the Christian's position? He is a "stranger and pilgrim upon earth." (Heb. 11: 13—16; 1 Pet. 2: 11.) Then he has neither inclination, right, nor title to political power. By profession he surrenders it. Who may take part in the government of a country? Natives only, not strangers. What has an Englishman, living in France, to do with the government of France? But he is moreover a pilgrim, and, therefore, has less reason still. If a stranger may not interfere in the policy of a foreign country, much less one who is not even residing in it, but merely passing through it on his way to another land. To meddle with politics, then, is to put off our character as strangers and pilgrims.

2. To take up the politician's character blinds the Christian as to his true place before God, and mars the testimony which he ought to give to the world. The witness of the Holy Spirit to the world, (which, therefore, the believer is to take up and manifest by his word and life) is, that the world is sinful, because it believes not on Jesus, and that it is under condemnation, together with its Prince, only spared from day to day by the patience of a long-suffering God. (John 16.) The Christian is to testify that the Lord Jesus is coming to execute upon it the due vengence for its iniquity, and that, therefore, it becomes all to flee from the midst of it to Christ. All who do thus flee to Christ become a part of his flock—the Church, which is not of the world, but gathered out from it.

If, then, the Christian readily surrenders the world's good things, pleasures, privileges, title, he lives as becomes the child of faith, and, like Noah, condemns the world. Lot, escaping out of Sodom with nothing but his staff, bore a strong testimony that he believed that the wrath of God was about to descend on it. But how would the force of the testimony have been broken, if he had gone back into the city to purchase a house there? Or had Noah, after declaring that in a year the flood would destroy the earth, bought an estate, would not the world have seen the inconsistency at a glance? Would not men have said, "Noah himself does not believe his own message. Why, then, should we credit it? If he believed that the flood were so near, would he buy, and plant, and build?" Apply, this Christian, to politics.

3. At this point the prophetic question comes in. They who think that the Christian should act as a citizen of the world imagine, also, (and this fresh error is necessary to render them consistent,) that the world is becoming better, and that in the happier times that are approaching, the Gospel will, by virtue of the means now employed, prove triumphant everywhere. Is this the truth? What saith the Scripture? What is the motto of our dispensation? "Many are called but few are chosen." "God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." (Acts 15: 14.) And what is the close of it? "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits." (1 Tim. 4: 1.) "In the last days perilous times shall come." (2 Tim. 3: 1.) When the world "shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail upon a woman with child: and they shall not escape." (1 Thess. 5: 3.) The world is evil, then, and will be evil when the Savior returns, will be caught in its iniquity, and smitten with his destroying judgments.

4. But if he may not rightfully use his political privileges as the private citizen, much less may he take office in the world. But it is said—what! are not Christians the fittest persons to hold power? No, they are of all the most unfit. For they have a Master to serve, whose laws are quite opposed in principle to those of the world. And the magistrate must execute the world's laws, as being the world's servant. The law of the world, when at its highest perfection, is strict justice. But Christ has to his disciples repealed this and taught us mercy as our rule (Matt. 5: 38—48.) Could any worldly government act out the Sermon on the Mount? When one of its citizens had been assaulted and robbed, could it dismiss the convicted robber, because the Savior commands us not to resist, nor to avenge evil? Its principle is, "punish according to the offence," and by that it abides. If so the Christian (if he understands his place) cannot be a judge or wield the power of the world's law. He is commanded—"Judge not, that ye be not judged." (Matt. 7: 1.) As he stands himself on mercy before God, mercy is to be his rule towards man. Judgment now is to him judgment "before the time." (1 Cor. 4: 5.) God challenges vengence as his own. "Vengence is mine," it is not, therefore, his saints' office. But the magistrate is "a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." (Rom. 13: 4.) He then who sees this can never consistently touch the civil sword. The saints shall indeed one day "judge the world." (1 Cor. 6: 2.) But now, because we are the sons of God, "the world knoweth us not, even as it knew him not." (1 John 3: 1.)

5. The same thing might be shown from Paul's rebuke of lawsuits: for these seem matters of necessity almost, as men are apt to account them. How much more then would he have rebuked the seeking the world's privileges or honors? Paul had to counsel the believers in the world's loftiest, imperial city. He had to indite directions to those who lived amidst the perpetual strife for consulships, praetorships, quaestorship, and every kind of honor. Were the Christians then to engage in the struggle? "Mind not high things; but condescend to men of low estate." (Rom. 12: 16.) Is not this decisive?

The Epistles show the Christian is to conduct himself as a husband, a father, a master, subject. But no rules are given to him as a magistrate or citizen. What must we infer then? That God does not recognize Christians as acting for him in either of these two conditions. The politician rebukes the real or supposed misgovernors of his country. The Christian is to "speak evil of no man, to be no brawler, but gentle." He is not to despise government or speak evil of dignities, or to bring against them railing accusation. (2 Pet. 2: 10—11; Jude.) He is to "show all meekness unto all men." The politician's motto is, 'Agitate, agitate, agitate!' the Christian's, "that ye STUDY to be QUIET, and to do your business." (1 Thess. 4: 11.)

6. To the extent that the Christian is a politician, his heart is engaged after the things of the world. A new thorn is planted in his breast to choke the good seed and make it unfruitful. A new weight is hung about his neck to hinder him in his race. To the extent that he is a politician, he comes under the censure passed upon the false prophets. "They are of the world, therefore speak they of the world and the world heareth them." (1 John 4: 5.) He is a soldier of Christ, who, contrary to his Captain's will and pleasure, is entangling himself with the affairs of this life." (2 Tim. 2: 3—4.) It is the Christians condemnation to be living like others. How surpassingly strong is that word, "Are ye not carnal and WALK AS MEN?" (1Cor. 3: 3.)

Look to the practical results of this doctrine. Are political Christians the most heavenly-minded, useful, gentle patterns of their Lord? or have not the love and zeal of the Nonconformists sadly declined since they have come forward to take a prominent part in the world's strifes and partizanships? Do they not confess that the work of the Lord has not prospered? This then is one of the reasons. They have descended to the world's level and have drank into its spirit.

Let me exhort the believer then to surrender all interference in politics. "Let the dead bury their dead?" Your concern is the kingdom of God, your city the one to come, your citizenship in heaven. Refrain from the world's politics, for Jesus was no politician. Refrain, else you mar your witness to the world, that it is evil and lying under judgment. Are you not a stranger and pilgrim? Then meddle not with that world which you have left.

The world is ripening for judgment, and all your efforts cannot improve it in God's sight. Gather out from its doomed streets as many as you can, but leave the city alone. Lot cannot mend Sodom; but Sodom can, nay will, corrupt Lot.

Leaving God Out.

One of the most significant traits of a good deal of the speculative thought of our day is its endeavor to get along without God. Elaborate schemes of life and knowledge are presented on every side, of which the characteristic feature, and it would almost seem the transcendent reccommendation also, is that they are schemes which dispense with God. There seems in many of them an impatience of the very idea of a present supernatural element in affairs. Any attempt to recognize a moral intent in nature, or signs of an actual spiritual goverment in the world, is declared to be idle. Origins and purposes are forbidden problems. God is a being or a name with which philosophy and science have nothing to do. Their province is to catalogue and compare the facts and sequences of the physical and intellectual worlds. Divine intents, spiritual uses, ultimate moral designs, are resultless questions and may better be forgotten.

That this is the position taken by many leaders of modern thought, requires no proof. The view is a popular one, and advocated by not a few.

But it is a view, nevertheless, which however seemingly profound or wise, is narrow in its philosophy, unspiritual in its quality, and depressing in its result. That many of its inculculators are technically learned and scholarly men, makes not their views one whit less earthly and sensual, and for that reason, if for no other, intellectually shallow, incomplete. And the holding of their views, in their application to the great problems of human welfare, tend to darkness and despair. They are none the less fraught with oppression and gloom that they wear an air of wisdom. It is a wisdom without God.

Look, for example, at that melancholy conception of human existence popularly advocated by Buckle and Draper, and many others, which finds in the mere physical conditions of climate and food, the sufficient and determining laws of human welfare or decline.

Look at that view of the probable future of the human family which for years disquieted the vision of Malthus and has been like the skeleton in the house to many a political economist, besides,—the view which sees no relief from the ultimate over-crowding of the earth with swarming multitudes, starving through very redundancy of numbers, trampling one another under foot from sheer incapability of finding room. A view which finds war, therefore, a blessing, and pestilence an angel in disguise; seeing that they help to postpone that horrible time when the multitudes swarming this little globe shall be like rats on a sinking plank, crowding one another off in effort to get foot-hold.

Certainly if there be one gloomier and more hopeless view of this world and its destinies than another, it is that view which comes through those eyes which decline to see anything but the reign of natural laws, and refuse to give God a place in the present guidance of the world. Cheerless, prospectless, funereal, they are, with all their air of profundity and wisdom, sensual and irrational.

The mind which takes God into the account is not ignorant of these things. Whateve is true in the calculations of mathematics or the foretellings of political economy it sees full well. That climate and food do influence human progress it discerns perfectly. That the law of multiplication in the human family is slowly but surely conducting to an occupancy of the whole globe, and to questions arising from that over-stocking of the earth, unanswered yet, it sees plainly.

That mankind are prodigally spending their visible means of support, is a fact of which the decline of their Nantuckets and New Bedfords, the giving out of their oil-creeks, the exhaustion of occasional tin-mines and coal-beds, remind it as promptly as any one is reminded.

But the mind which believes in a present divine Ruler is not thereby disheartened. Its forecastings are not are not filled with fear.

They are not, because it remembers that one fact which the wisdom which dispenses with God forgets; the fact that God lives, and concerns himself still with the world he has made. It takes God into each problem—an element the other leaves out.

It recognizes the operation of divine influences above nature—an operation which the other disregards. It believes that the world's affairs are conducted by an immediate and all-loving Ruler in the interest of human welfare and spiritual perfectness—a belief which the other, with all its studiousness, is too short-sighted to attain.

And therefore it does not dispair. It borrows no overwhelming gloom from the mighty agency of diet and climate on human weal. It believes that there are higher agencies than these; and that it lies not in the power of northern cold or southern heat to defeat the best hopes of a race which education undertakes to elevate and the gospel attempts to save. It disquiets not its confidence by the thought of burnt-out coal-beds and uninhabited seas. It believes that the God who tenanted by his creatures awhile the one, and stored up for ages unseen the supplies of the other, will, if need be, open yet other supplies for human want.

Above all, it believes that God, who became incarnate in human flesh to save men, is not to be frustrated in the fulfillment of his design. Poverty, ignorance, and disease are not to defeat the counsels of Infinite Love. Above their influences—nay, sometime even by their means—the grace which stooped to Bethlehem and Calvary will work out a blessing for mankind which no "laws of nature" can effectually prevent.

And the mind which takes God into the problem holds such cheerful conviction without apology. It deems itself rational in doing so. It deems it irrational not to do so.

God is! That is the greatest of facts the universe holds. God is, and he is doing well for the world he has made: that is the most reassuring of convictions to the troubled mind.

To leave God out, is to leave out the chief factor of the problems of life and hope. To forget him, is not sinful only but irrational. The science or philosophy which does forget him, is, as scripture long ago said, science, or philosophy "falsely so called."

And such schemes pay the appropriate penalty of their leaving God out, by arriving inevitably at conclusions which are full of hopelessness and woe.

To take God into the case is the only cheerful and wise way. To take him into the problems of life, is to make them clearer in their meaning and hopeful in their issue. That, and that only, is what can shed light on the world's else inscrutable and even horrible mysteries. God is; and he has not forgotten us; and he is doing well by us, whatever darkness surrounds us;—that is the thought which brings us peace.—Christian Union.

A Few Christian Thoughts.

This is a rainy Sabbath morning and I have just been reading the COMPANION, and thought how lonesome I would be without it. And now beloved sisters in much love and sympathy I will try to converse a little with you through the silent medium of my pen and the press, if the Lord will be my helper. There dear sisters we often lose the lack of faith. Oh, my Christian friends, let us come boldly to that rich fountain that overflows with that good we poor mortals need! Let us put our trust in Him when trials and sorrows come which we so often meet with here in this pilgrimage to that better land. We often feel tempted and tried; we are poor and weak creatures, much oppressed with the many infirmities which do attend us; but we have a friend that is closer than a brother, He feels our inmost sorrows. Oh, that we might appreciate properly His sufferings which were for you and me! He was taken, bound, beaten, mocked, condemned and crucified, all of which He patiently endured. Oh, may God help us to be more like our dear Saviour! Oh, for that sweet communion to cheer us by the way! Dear brethren and sisters this Christian warfare will soon be over with us, then we will reap the fruit of our labors. How well we would like to be of that class to whom it will be said, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you, from the foundation of the world." To be blessed of the Father! Ah! the worth of that no tongue can tell. It all depends upon our conduct here in this world. So then, dear fellow travellers with me to the bar of God, come let us double our diligence for heaven. I have thought that there are more temptations, more of the seducing spirit, the enemy of our soul's salvation, than ever. Oh, that the Lord would enable us at all times to know the enemy! To know rightly how to judge between good and evil, so that we may not be entangled with the evil. Therefore dear brethren and sisters, let us be more humble, more prayful to our God, who is able to keep us if we will come to him. There is no friend like our Jesus! He will hear all our complaints, he sees all we do; he will give us all we need while in this world we stay, and when we have done with time, he will take us to rest in that bright mansion of glory which he has prepared for those that have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb. I will yet say in conclusion to my dear brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation.

I am Weary!

BY VINE TRYON.

I am weary!
Weary of the cares of life,
Weary of the toil and strife:
Weary of the pomp and show,
Weary of the glare and glow.

I am weary!
Weary of the world's deceit,
Weary of the foes I meet;
Weary of the heartless throng,
Weary of the idle song.

I am weary!
And I long once more to feel
O'er my spirit gently steal,
Comfort from a higher pow'r
As in childhood happy hour.

I am weary!
Father in that land above
Give to me thy pitying love;
Though weak and sinful I may be
I consecrate myself to thee.

What are We Doing?

We as rational beings, created by an allwise Providence, "so fearfully and wonderfully made," placed upon God's footstool, as instruments in his hands; 'what are we doing?" Are we properly applying our time, place and opportunity, in repaying Him for his goodness? Are we making proper use of those talents, and limbs, and bodies of ours? Are we daily tuying to improve any of those members to be of use on God's terrestial globe, and also for the Celestial? As we are so richly favored with so many blessings, are we content and thankful for the same? We are afraid some are destroying some of these members to a fearful extent. For instance, the mortal body is often brought to an unhealthful state by tugging and tight lacing, cramming and forcing together those parts of the human body which need easy pressures. This is mostly among females. This should not be. God has endowed us with minds which ought to know better. It is in part murdering your own body. Health is only kept by adhering strictly to the laws of nature. What is man with an impaired constitution? The man who has a sound body, straight bones, strength in his sinews, and has all his senses, is indeed rich without anything more in this world. Then we should not try to destroy any of these members merely for pride, or "for the looks," as some would have it." But this is too often done. Pride is the greatest curse that ever befell our country, it is bringing thousands of persons to a premature grave.

Pride not only consists in too tight lacing, girding, but branches out in various ways. Sometimes persons live intemperately just on account of pride. This is mostly practiced among our men. May the time come when men may see the error of their ways, and not be trampling upon the laws of nature, and thus impair their bodily health. And see to it that you are not wearing anything that is injurious to the health. Every generation is getting weaker, and these are some of the reasons why. Let people so live as God requires them, and it will be for their good here and hereafter. And try to be thankful for what you have now, and be hoping for better things in the world to come. Let us live as we understand; it would make quite a change in our health, in our churches, and in society at large. Let us not be thinking of that emulation of appearing in gayer dress than others, and so trifle away our time with such nonsense. Take no thought of what you shall put on your bodies, &c. But put on just what is comfortable and most convenient to the body, and spend more of our time in pondering the ways and designs of God, and of a blessed immortality beyond this vale of tears.

Preaching.

While the largest liberty of illustration ought to be accorded, and the broadest license in the practical application of the truth of the Bible, a positive purpose, relating to the religious life and condition of those immediately addressed, should be distinctly apparent in every pulpit discourse. The minister is not to intone his sermon, if he does the liturgy of his church. He does not stand up before his audience to sing a song, to simply interest his hearers, to discourse for their entertainment, and to while away sacred hours, but he preaches to save their souls and to inspire them to the highest Christian labors and sacrifices. Local occasions are certainly to be seized. The particular circumstances of the people are always to be considered. Their spiritual want is to be carefully sought out at any given time, and to this point the positively aimed discourse of the minister is to be directed.

The most unprofitable, so far as spiritual results are concerned, of all sermons, are those adapted to any audience, and to all occasions. He will be the most unsuccessful minister, although he may have crowds to hear him, who prepares his musical sentences upon sentimental themes suggested by scripture mottoes, without reference to any immediate necessities or result in the audiences that he addresses. He will, without doubt, "have his reward." He wishes to attract the hearer, to be admired for the beauty, or elegance, or eloquence, or originality of his matter; and this he does and is—and that is all! The true preacher is a meditator and an embassador between God and man. His work is a solemn one, both in itself and in its possible consequences to himself and others. It is to be renewed in the presence of those to whom he has been sent by Him that commissioned him. Whatever variety of forms he may use to arrest the attention of those among whom he is to execute his mission, he has but one set of terms to offer, and one great end to gain. This solemn idea should pervade every discourse, and give a positive point to every sermon that is preached.—Zion's Herald.

The Yoke.

Jesus said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart and you shall find rest for your souls." Matth. 11: 29. Brethren and sisters how did our hearts swell within us in love to Jesus, when we complied with the ordinance of baptism! What a solemn vow and covenant we made to the Lord before many witnesses! How many of us now, do still continue to wear his yoke? I understand by the yoke, not to go back in the world and conform with all its ways, and gaudy fashions. Jesus says, "Learn of me:" Learn what? To be humble under the mighty hand of the Lord, and he will exalt us before the Father in heaven. Let none of us look back to the world for comfort and enjoyment. Let not the devil cheat us out of the crown of glory, reserved in heaven for the faithful. The angels in heaven rejoiced when you gave your hearts to the Lord. But dear brethren and sisters how very sad they must feel if one of us should lay off the yoke, and quench the Good Spirit, and conform with the world. In conclusion I would say to all my brethren and sisters both old and young, fight on the battle of the Lord, in faith, taking Jesus at his word, and there will be a crown of glory reserved for all.

HEAVEN.—How charming is that word, Heaven! where no tears will ever fall, no groans be heard, no sorrow be seen; where no sin will mar the perfect joy, no death to bring it to an end. O weary heart, there is rest for you. O burdened heart, there is full pardon and holiness for you. Do sickness and pain make life a burden? Sickness and pain never enter there. Do sinners vex you? None but the holy are there. Do you wish perfect holiness and perfect bliss? You will find them there.

Editor's Diary.

THURSDAY, Sept. 12. Our brother, J. W. B., returned by the noon train in good order. Think traveling would agree with him. The afternoon was spent in arranging matters, and making preparations for our eastern trip, upon which we were obliged to set out in the evening, in order to make our first appointment. Took the accommodation train at 7 P. M. Left home rather reluctantly, feeling that there were duties that demanded our presence in the office. The Almanac ought to be printed during the time of our absence, and it should have our supervision. But the appointments have been made; we announced them ourself, and some of them without solicitation, and we must fill them.

Our company consisted of wife, Lottie, Miss Linda Will, and self. At Confluence we were obliged to remain over night. Put up at the France House. Visited brother Ephraim's. Found them rather snugly situated, and prepared to do a considerable amount of work in the way of plain Job printing. They are enjoying reasonable health, although their eldest child is always an invalid, and it is feared will remain such, being afflicted with paralysis.

FRIDAY 13. Took the accommodation train at about 6 A. M., and arrived at Pittsburgh at 11, after a pleasant trip, so far as the Company and conveyance were concerned, but a severe cold and cough deprived us of its enjoyment. Have not had so favorable an opportunity for conversation with Miss Linda for several years. Her company has always been very agreeable, being moral, courteous, and intelligent. At Pittsburgh we left her, and took the eastward train. Hope she may reach her Bryan, Ohio home in safety, bearing our regards to her kind parents.

Landed at Johnstown a few minutes before 1 o'clock. Brother Benjamin Gochenour met us with conveyance, and took us directly to the Horner meeting-house where the love-feast was being held. The examination services were just being closed. Soon found ourselves among a number of old acquaintances, and making new ones. Brethren Christian Lehman, Joseph Berkey, and Emanuel Blough, from Somerset county, were the foreign ministers in attendance. There was a fair attendance, and very good order. On account of our cough, and consequent hoarseness, and depression of body and spirits, we were obliged to refrain from labor. Lodged at sister Horner's.

SATURDAY 14. Preaching commenced at 9, and closed at 11 A. M. Had a good meeting. At the close of the meeting an election was held for two deacons, resulting in the choice of brethren Jacob McCartney and Samuel Knavel. Hope the brethren chosen will come up to the work faithfully.

At this church election we were again reminded of the importance of some measures which we have long been advocating, to wit: To have member meetings, or schools, in which our rules, or customs and practices would be taught, so that members might know how to conduct themselves in such cases, and what was expected of them. Some mentioned the names of brethren for deacons who have been serving as ministers for years. We think it would be very good to instruct our members how they should vote, and who are eligible to office. We also observe the necessity of our members being familiar and acquainted with each other, that they may know who would be the proper persons; hence we are assured that the sociability proverbial among us, is a part of our religion.

Took supper with a number of friends at brother Stephen Hilderbrand's. Reaching at the same place again, in the evening, to a very attentive and orderly congregation. This will likely be the last communion season that will be held in the old meeting-house. It is "under the hammer" and expected to be "knocked off," and torn down by the first of October next, and the foundation of a new one begun, which is to be finished during the winter and by next spring. The brethren have taxed themselves to raise a fund for building. This taxation for church purposes does bring out some curious things. Some brethren whom you would suppose to be worth six hundred dollars, have a tax of five hundred dollars to pay. And the best of it is, they appear as ready to pay it, as though it were only five dollars.

Lodged at friend Christian Snyder's of Jackson township, whose wife was a Stiffler, and is a sister in the church. Why he is not a member is a mystery to us. His time, according to the course of nature, is not much longer in this world. What a pity if it should all be wasted upon timely things, and no preparations for eternity!

SUNDAY 15. Friend John Snyder took us to the Benshoff meeting-house for 10 o'clock. Stopped in a few minutes at Elder Solomon Benshoff's, whose family is sorely afflicted. None of them could attend the meetings. The sister and two of the children are bed-fast, and another is just able to be up, while the old brother himself is only slowly recovering from an attack of sickness—disease of the bowels. They have our sympathies and prayers.

Preaching was well attended, but no unusual demonstration, either by speaker or hearers. Dined at brother Benjamin Benshoff's, who took us to the Union meeting-house, near Hetrick's, where we preached in the evening to a full house. This is a new house, built as a Union house, but used almost exclusively by the brethren. It is substantial and well furnished. Supped and lodged at brother Ephraim Gochenour's.

MONDAY 16. Brother Gochenour took us to Johnstown, to sister Cobaugh's widow of brother Lewis Cobaugh. Had a brief, but very pleasant interview with the family, whom we found comfortably situated, and enjoying each other's confidence and society. Took dinner, and then got aboard the 11:45 A. M., train. Landed at Altoona at about 2 P. M. Met brother J. F. Oller, of Waynesboro, Pa., on the train. Why might not our ministers, who travel on business missions, make their ministerial duty at least a secondary matter? We think it might be done to profit.

Brother Jacob N. Dieter met us, and conveyed us to brother Conrad Imler's. Preached at the schoolhouse in the evening, to a small but attentive audience.

TUESDAY 17. Remained with brother Imler until after dinner, and wrote out this report. At present we are only in middling good order. The cold we have taken is a great hindrance in our ministerial labors.

Almanac for 1873.

Do our brethren want a good Almanac for the year 1873? If they do, why do some, who heretofore have been very particular, not take more interest in furnishing us good, interesting matter? There is still room for short essays, biographical sketches, instructive anecdotes, announcements of District Meetings for 1873. Why wait on each other until it is too late? Would it not be better for a dozen to contribute an item of importance, than for none to do it? Think of this, and act now. Will you or will you not? If we cannot get what we wish to publish, will you be satisfied if you do not find in the Almanac what you desire to see in it? We wish to send out a good Almanac; but we cannot do as well as we wish to, unless you assist us in the work. If an article appealing to reason would move you to action, we would try to write it; if coaxing would be of any use, we would say, Please help us; but as former experiments have proven the futility of both, we will stop and await your decision, and ask you kindly to be satisfied with your own work. How is it? How will it be? What say you? No reflections, mind you.

Several hundred Tune and Hymn books have been ordered, and orders are still coming in rapidly. This we are glad to see; it seems to be as it ought to be. As soon as they come your orders shall be filled as fast as possible. We still solicit further orders.

The Editor.

It will be seen from the Editor's Diary that he, his wife, and their daughter Lottie, are on their eastward trip. At last accounts the editor and Lottie were not quite well, and consequently were not enjoying themselves as well as they otherwise might. Our best wishes accompany them, and we hope circumstances may so change that they may have a pleasant visit. We hope, too, that our subscribers, contributors and readers will remember us and lend us a helping hand, and extend their forbearance where we may fail to render satisfaction.

J. W. B.

Folio or Octavo.

I am in favor of the folio form for C. F. C. Another thing that I approve of very much is, when an article is written, for the writer to sign his full name and address. It affords much satisfaction to the reader, to know who is the writer, and also where he lives.

D. F. WAGNER.

Montandon, Pa.

Inasmuch as there has been no complaint from the readers to amount to much, it seems to me that there must be self-interest at stake, else the Editor himself would not propose a change in the paper from an octavo to a folio. I consider the octavo much better for several reasons.

For binding in book form. This was an argument presented in the paper, by our worthy Editor when he first published it. I believe the argument to be as good now as it was then.

I believe the present form better, from the fact that, when you cut it properly, you need not fold it at all. The other form you must fold; and if much used, it will, as a matter of course, wear out and get soiled wherever it is folded, and the probability is that it will be used like other papers that are not much cared for.

I believe in this case it might be well to let good enough alone. This is about my mind in regard to the proposed change. Others may speak for themselves.

J. B. WAMPLER.

"Adam Braefogel is opposed to the proposed change in the form of the COMPANION in toto, as it will intefere with his books; having every volume saved up and preserved from the beginning. He feels like 'fighting it out on this line,' if it takes until New Year."

ADAM BRAEFOGEL.

We have no objection to the folio form of the COMPANION. Think it will be an improvement. PETER WOLFE.

For several weeks past we have been publishing short gleanings under the head of quarto and folio. This was a mistake. The contest is between octavo, the present form, and folio, a sheet folded into two leaves. It is hoped that our subscribers will look at this matter with deliberation, and express themselves in favor of that form which they think best calculated to accomplish good—not only now but hereafter. We know that those subscribers who say that the best use they can make of the paper is to tie over crocks and jars of butters, would prefer the form which is most easily unfolded; but what say those who are interested in the reading, and wish to preserve the COMPANION for future reference? It is also suggested that you send us the reasons for your choice. The simple statement of your preference is of no advantage in the case: we ought to know what is the basis of your decision. J. W. B.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The Papal Question.

The occupation of Rome by the King and Government of Italy was the first act of a drama which grows in intense interest with every month. It was a blow to the Papal temporality which after the downfall of the "Eldest Son of the Church," was inevitable. Ever since a secular arm thus possessed itself of the sacred city, the Pope has resided in sullen protestation of the Vatican, claiming, but still refraining from, the exercise of the sovereign power in Rome. Time has only rendered the situation of the successor of St. Peter more precarious and his ambition to recover the lost patrimony of the Church more hopeless; until now the Papacy is threatened with double evil of absorption by the Kingdom of Italy and the imposition of a nominee of Protestant State upon the throne of the Popes. An account has recently appeared of an interview with Prince Napoleon, in which that shrewd and brilliant Frenchman declares that the only true policy of the Holy Father is to come to terms with Victor Emanuel. Prince Napoleon is no ordinary man, and his words are not idly spoken. He is one of the most original and liberal of the French thinkers, one of the most forcible of French orators, and one of the keenest of observers of the politics and public characters of the age. While a partizan of the Empire his cousin, Napoleon III., he yet suggested reforms, and boldly favored a progress towards liberal institutions. An actor in many of the events of the last quarter of a century, he understands the complications and difficulties of European politics as thoroughly, perhaps, as any man living. He has peculiar qualifications for judging wisely of the Papal question, for while he is a citizen of the nation which above all others best merits the best "defender of the faith," his family connection with the King of Italy inspires his sympathy for the newly-created sovereignty of the House of Savoy. Prince Napoleon deplores the obstinacy of the Pope and his counsellors, and urges that unless some arrangement is soon effected with the Italian Government, it will be too late. The Pope may, by persistently shutting his eyes to things as they are, not only not regain Rome, but lose his present vantage of the Vatican.

Prince Napoleon's advice to Pius IX. and his Ultramontane counsellors is all the more wise and timely because Bismarck is preparing to impose the will of a Protestant power on the College of Cardinals. It is his plainly declared intention to effect such an election to St Peter's chair, on the death of its present occupant, as shall be satisfactory to the Protestant Court of Berlin. He has gone so far as to compose a compact to this end to the principal European powers, and the remarkable statement is made that Italy, Austria and Spain —but a few years ago the great pillars and bulwarks of the Papacy— have responded favorably to the German chancellor's appeal. Bismarck intends to have a non-political, an exclusively eclesiastical Pope; there shall be no Vatican influence to teach the Poles to be rebellious, or to nourish conspiracies in German convents. The war is not only declared by the great Pomeranian statesman, but it has begun in good earnest. Six months hence no Jesuit is allowed to breathe German air. Prelates and priests who refuse to accept the rule of Wilhelm I. as paramount to all authority, sacred or secular, whatever, are to be dealt with in the summary fashion which Bismarck has made an art. This danger which so seriously threatens the Papacy, of being forced to receive a head chosen by a Protestant and a persecutor of Catholics, can only be averted by the submission of Pius IX. to the inevitable. The conciliation of Italy is necessary, and might be efficacious in preventing the execution of Bismarck's design; indeed, should the Papacy cease to be temporal, or to claim temporalities, this would, to a large extent, deprive Bismarck of the motives of his proposed action. These are truly troublous times for the Church; and the nineteenth century will be fatal to it unless its venerable head acknowledges and submits to the changes which the nineteenth century has wrought.—Ex.

Cholera is steadily coming toward the Atlantic ports. From those ports, vessels are almost daily sailing to ours, and it will be almost a miracle if it does not come over to us in some of them. If only our seaport cities and towns can hold out clean hands to it when it does come, the fatal presence may be made to turn aside.

"HEAR YE HIM."

BY MISS MARIA STRAUB.

Oh, hearken to your Savior, Friend ;
He'll guide you to the right,—
He'll lead you through the gloomy way
Into the path of light.
He is the Teacher sent from God,
In whom he is well pleased.
Then hear ye him, ye erring ones,
And be from sin released.

He came to earth, the Prince of Peace,
To tell of things above ;
He came to bring salvation near,
To show a Father's love.
Oh, listen to his glorious words,—
They bid the darkness fly ;
They still the tempest, calm the sea,
And bring sweet comfort nigh.

From heav'n still comes that gentle voice,
Through cloud of brilliant ray,
Saying, "'Tis my beloved Son ;
Oh, hear him, and obey!"
Whoe'er would reach that better world,
Where naught the sight can dim,
Must follow where the Shepherd leads.
Then, pilgrims, "Hear ye Him."

Lansing, Michigan.

"Air-Castles." (Advice to Boys.)

Some of my young friends may not exactly understand what is meant by the above fabrics.

You may be just old enough to be deeply interested in the study of history; for there are very few young people who have any literary inclination at all, who do not love to read of the kings and queens of the old world, their manners and customs, their sports and recreations, as well as their palaces and castles.

But a king's castle conveys a very vague idea of an air-castle.

An air-castle is a structure of the imagination alone—merely a wild and chimerical fancy.

You have planned, together with your associates, when you "get big" that you would have a fine horse and buggy, or you would have a store crammed full of nuts and candies and eat all you want, and then "roll over the counter" until they were sufficiently settled for another mess, while other boys would have to be out in the hot sun grubbing hazel-bush or hoeing corn. Or you have heard of the great ocean, and the daring exploits of the sturdy "salts" in capturing the whale; and you "must be one of them." Or you have heard of hunters and pioneers, who have nothing in the world to do but to chase the wild deer over glade and glen, through bramble and thicket, far away from the encroachments of civilization, where the wild denizens of the forest are not scared by "the ring of the settler's axe." Oh! you envy the hunter, whose cabin is in some wild wood-land spot; and the music he hears is the melodious gurgling of the limpid streams of water as they flow through mossy dells and frightful chasms. You see, in fancy, the hunter prowling stealthily through the tangled underwood. Now peering high up into the branches of some aged "lord of the forest" to spy out the retreat of old Bruin who had paid him a friendly visit under cover of the dark vail of night, but whose foot-prints were revealed to the vigilant eye of the hunter by the dawn of aurora.

Or you fancy you see the grouse, nestled closely under the tufted leaves of the pine, falling under the unerring aim of his rifle.

Under such ideal observation you conclude his situation is one of ease and pleasure. Here you think you will "kill two birds with one stone." You think you will enjoy nature in her primeval loveliness, and at the same time get rid of scolding mammas, and not be tortured to death by orders, mandates, injunctions and commands, to do this and that and the other thing.

Lastly, ambition's potent grasp may have bound your heart in thrall. It has various ways in which it leads its votaries to the summit of its aspirations. He may meet its demands on the field of battle, or in the Legislative halls of his country, or in the literary fields, the pulpit, or in the criminal court. His highest ambition may be to defend some poor culprit doomed to die; to marshal such an array of words; to display such a power of oratory, and to move with such a resistless tide of argument as to silence all opposition and draw forth the tears and prayers of all.

It is not improbable that you have drawn such pictures time and again, and this is what we call building air-castles. I do not intend to censure you very much for doing so, for I know it is a result of childish ignorance of the true nature of things and the inability from want of mature compensation to judge from a proper stand-point.

This is an inability that age and experience alone will remove, unless the youth is wise enough to heed the counsel of his parents and others who are his superiors in age and understanding. One of the first parts to be played in the grand scheme, is leaving home. The sage advice and ominous warning of parents, are no congenial element for this fair young ship launched on the ocean of destiny, and which is to anchor safely at the royal gateway of fame or fortune, or on the margin of some sylvan, almost fairy land.

While I would not discourage any laudable efforts to make your condition better, morally, physically and mentally, I must declaim against the course that is generally pursued.

Whatever else you may hazard do not hazard yourself among strangers. Stick to the old homestead; if your do not, your "fondest dreams will never be realized," your most carefully laid plans will suffer wreck.

If you do your duty, your parents will assist you in carrying out any plans that will really benefit you. Stay with them at least until legal obligation binds you no longer, then your discretionary powers will be such as not to lead you astray; then you will see the absurdity of some of your original ideas.

Granting that all should seek out the sources of pleasure most consistent with morality and religion, I know of no place where it is more unalloyed than within the consecrated portals of home. Should you ignore this assertion as well as the remonstrance of your friends and cast your lot among strangers in a strange land, you will accept in sorrow what you put aside in contempt. You will then see familiar faces and places only in dreams. You may hear a little brother or sister calling you or shouting gladly on the green sward by the brook, or hieing away in the hazy autumnal mornings to the old chestnut trees to gather nuts, and fancy you are with them and enjoying every familiar scene as in days gone by, when you will awake to find it an illusion greater even than the false mirage of the desert. WILLIAM R. GOODMAN.

Wasted Strength.

A writer in the Herald of Health thinks that a young man might serve himself by seeking the counsel of a Physiologist, tell him frankly all his habits, and have a table prepared which, by showing him where his strength is expended, might guard him against excess. The table prepared for some young men would read very much as follows:

Spent in digesting a big dinner, which the body did not need, sufficient force to raise 30 tons of matter one foot high.

Spent in getting rid of several drinks of wine and brandy, force sufficient to raise 20 tons one foot high.

Spent in smoking cigars, force sufficient to raise 10 tons one foot high.

Spent in keeping awake all night at a spree, force sufficient to raise 20 tons one foot high.

Spent in breathing bad air, force sufficient to raise 15 tons one foot high.

Spent in cheating a neighbor out of $30 in a business transaction, force sufficient to raise 15 tons one foot high.

Spent in reading worthless books and newspapers, force sufficient to raise 5 tons one foot high.

Spent in hesitation, doubt, and uncertainty, force sufficient to raise 5 tons one foot high.

Total—120 tons one foot high.

Left the practical and useful labor only enough to raise 55 tons one foot high, or to do less than one-third of a day's work.

Circumstances form the character; but like petrifying matters, they harden while they form.

Reply to Brother John Hammer.

Dear Brother:—Your answer in No. 33 to my criticism in No. 24, is received in the same spirit in which it was written; and as we still differ in opinion, and as the closing remarks in your last are somewhat pressing, I feel like reasoning with you a little in the spirit of love.

First, we will notice Mark 9: 38. Here you say is one casting out devils in Christ's name that is not a follower of his. We will try again to establish our opinion on this passage. If we read the foregoing paragraph we find the disciples were disputing among themselves, evidently evincing a little envy. So was John in his remarks to our Saviour concerning this man casting out devils in his name. He had forbidden him, but our Saviour says, "Forbid him not." Why? "For he that is not against us is on our part." Does not our Master's language intimate very strongly that this man was a follower of his? See context, Matth. 12: 30. We think this man was on our Saviour's part, for so he says.

You can see no bearing on Mark 9: 38, or Num. 11: 26–30. We have intimated that John evinced a little envy in the matter. So did Joshua, the son of Nun, when he said, "My Lord, Moses, forbid them. And Moses said unto him enviest thou for my sake? Would to God that all the Lord's people were prophets." Can you now see the bearing? This is enough to establish my opinion on that passage. Refer to 1 Cor. 12: 3, as a context to Mark 9: 39.

Next in turn is Matt. 7: 21, 22. We cannot see that there was any prophesying or casting out devils done here. Our Saviour does not say so, but says, many will say so in that day. He does not even intimate that they did do so, nor that they will yet do so; that is, cast out devils. Men are not to be judged of by their words only, but by their principles and conduct. Our Saviour says he will not know this class of pretenders.

Our Savior also foretells the awful rebuke of those pretenders in that day, while he sanctions the works of the one spoken of in Mark 9: 38. You have intimated that others have cast out devils, in Christ's name, that were not followers of his. Not likely that Christ would lend his power to devils to work miracles in his name, in direct opposition to his designs, else how could we tell the good from the bad, or, if he (the Devil) could do it with his power, how could we make the distinction. The point in which we differ is: you say, others cast out devils that were not followers of Christ; I say, none can cast out devils but true followers of Christ. The apostle says, Paul's testimony did do some curious things; but they did not cast out devils, else their location would have been dutiful. And our Savior says, "A kingdom divided against itself must fall." Magicians may perform many tricks of enchantment on natural principles, but never cast out a devil.

You say I misunderstood you in reference to acts 17th. Here is what you say: "But it seems to me that the seven sons of Sceva, a Jew and chief of the priest, did it more for sport than anything else, yet they did it in the name of Christ. Does not this intimate that you think they did do it? We think it does. We read of sorcerers in Acts 8: 9, also in Acts 13: 6. But did they cast out devils and do wonderful works?

Brother John, in conclusion we will sum up our argument thus: The one spoken of in Mark 9: 38, was a follower of Christ, and did cast out a devil in his name. The others were not followers, consequently did not cast any out. I am not fond of differing with my brethren; but I thought I would submit these few thoughts to you in love, hoping that they will do no harm, if they even should not benefit you any. Had it not been for the Christian Family Companion we would never would have know each other by name, much less exchanged our opinions on this subject. My knowledge of you through the C. F. C. makes me love you as a brother; and be assured I love you still. Yours in the hope of meeting in heaven.

John of Ænon.

Brother Holsinger.—While there is so much enquiry concerning "The Watery War," by John of Ænon, which was reprinted from the Baptist in Nos. 33 and 34 of the Companion, I would say, for the information of all, that the original of this very rare piece of poetry is a neat copy-righted pamphlet of thirty-six pages, "Printed and sold by Manning & Loring, No. 2, Cornhill, Boston, 1808." It was written under the fictitious name of John of Ænon, by David Benedict, the great Baptist historian, who is yet living at Pawtucket, Rhode Island. He was born October 10th, 1776, and will therefore be 96 years of age. He appears almost a miracle of intellect. For, old as he is, he still studies. Our mutual friend, H. G. Jones, saw him, not long ago, reading with much interest the works of Augustine in Latin, and is even now engaged in writing a history of the ancient Donatists, a sect which held many views similar to the Baptists of the present day.

Dear Brother:— In Companion No. 26, 570, I notice an article respecting the Sioux and Ponka Indians. Now I would like to know who this W. M. Welsh is, and what he is. And where is the Chief's, White Swan's, pretty chapel? Last week these very same Indians killed a whole train of emigrants, and they are tearing up the Northern Railroad as fast as they can. That does not look much like singing,

"Nearer my God to thee."

We have no objections to the Protestant Episcopal church christianizing the Indians; but we would like to have them do the work before they report them Christians.

Dear Brother Henry:—When I contemplated taking the Companion, I understood it was cash in advance. I think it would be better to adopt the cash system again, as I am always willing to pay in advance. I am in favor of the folio form, if it contains more reading, as I never get too much reading. But we are to read in the spirit and with the understanding. I am also willing to pay one dollar into the Missionary fund, that is, if I can pay within this and next A. M. We all should be anxious to have the pure Gospel truth preached where it had never been preached before. But we, in our little church, have no minister to spare to send on a mission.

Your unworthy sister in Christ.

Sarah Stem.

Brother Holsinger:—I read in the C. F. C., a proposition by M. J. Thomas to raise a Missionary Fund. This is something I have long desired. You may put my name on the list for $5.00. I am willing to give one dollar to it every year, as long as I live.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Pipe Creek congregation, Carroll county, Md., August 15th, our beloved brother and elder PHILIP BOYLE aged 65 years 6 months and 4 days. On the 17th his remains were consigned to their resting place in the Pipe Creek burying-ground in the presence of a very large congregation of brethren and friends. Brother Boyle had the oversight of the church for about thirty years; and, although he was not classed with the able in the ministry, yet his ability, as a housekeeper, in preserving love and union in the church, was unsurpassed. In his death the church has sustained an irreparable loss; but our prayer is, that his mantle and spirit may fall in a good measure on our dear brother who will now have to take his place in the church. The funeral occasion was improved by the brethren present from adjoining congregations, by reading 1 Cor. 15: 35—58, and 1 Peter 1: 13.

In the same congregation, July 4th, brother JOSEPH ENGLER, in the 72nd year of his age. Disease, apoplexy. He died sitting in his chair on the porch, while his daughter-in-law was preparing supper for him. Funeral preached by the brethren present.

Also in the same congregation, in Baltimore, August 28th, brother L. J. GROVE, in the 55th year of his age. On the 30th his remains were interred in the cemetery at Westminster. Funeral services by the brethren. Text, Matth. 24: 44. Brother Grove died of heart disease, to which he had been predisposed. On the day of his death he was covering his tinning establishment with gas tar, the fumes of which, together with the heated tar and broiling sun, overcame him. He was taken with a pain in his left side; and he said to a boy that was with him, "Call." Then he lay down upon the roof and died there in a few minutes. So suddenly death may come, and, if our work is not done, it will then be too late. Brethren and sisters, let us try to be ready always, lest he come suddenly and find us sleeping. And to those who are not ready, young or old, we say, acquaint now thyself with God and be at peace.

EPHRIAM W. STONER.

PETER HOLLOWBUSH, was born June 2nd 1805, and died at Lawrenceville, Chester county, Pa., March the 13th, 1872, in the 68th year of his age. He was almost miraculously converted at Coventry in the winter of 1840, and was baptized March 28th, same year. He was elected to the ministry November 5th, 1842, and forwarded to the second degree soon after. He was a devout Christian, well versed in the Scriptures, and a faithful minister, taking delight in attending to his Master's business. His voice was known in the churches far and near. He spoke to us the last time on Sunday, the 3rd of March on the last chapter of Revelation. He took sick in the afternoon of the same day. Disease, pneumonia. His sufferings were severe, but he bore them with Christian fortitude, and realizing that the departure was at hand, he encouraged his beloved companion to remain steadfast, and his children to know their Lord and Savior.

Jacob Conner.

In the Grundy county, branch of the church, Grundy county, Mo., September 7th brother WILLIAM H. HILLERY aged 31 years 9 months and seven days. Our beloved brother was a faithful and zealous minister of the Gospel; ever ready to go and sow the good seed of the "kingdom." Some of which we are rejoiced to say, as we believe, fell into good ground and is now yielding fruit, to the glory and honor of God, and to the advancement of the cause of Christ. The circumstances attending his death are about as follows, some two weeks before he died he was taken with a disease known as the grey flux, but was not considered to be in a very dangerous condition; being up and going about the house a good part of the time. On the day before he died I was to see him, he appeared to be getting along well, said he felt better, and conversed freely. Next day, in the morning, he was up walking about the house and out doors, appearing lively enough; but toward sundown he laid down on the bed to rest. After some minutes repose, he got up, walked across the floor to the window, attempted to raise the curtain, when he sank down and died instantly without speaking a word, or uttering one single groan, sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. He left a companion, a sister in the church, and two small children, with a large circle of friends to mourn his loss which is no doubt gain to him. Brother William was poor in this worlds goods, but rich in faith of the Gospel. Brethren, his bereaved family needs substantial sympathy, as well as our fervent prayers in their behalf. Funeral discourse by brother George Witmer and others, from Rev. 14: 13, to a large and attentive congregation.

J. H. Roberts.

In the Coventry congregation, Chester county, Pa., Sunday, September 8th, died suddenly of apoplexy, brother DAVID B. KLINE, of Stonersville, Berks county, Pa., in his seventy-second year. He was buried on Thursday the 12th in the family burying-ground on his place, by a large attendance of relatives and friends, to pay their last respects to his remains. Funeral occasion improved by brother John Price and—Hoffman. We mourn his loss, yet not without hope.

Jacob M. Cassel.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Phrenological Journal, an illustrated first-class Family Magazine, devoted to the "Science of Man." Subscription price, $3.00 a year. By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For the Companion.

"Shall We Know Our Friends in Heaven?"

This question was asked some time ago by one whose name we have forgotten. Several answers have appeared, and these writers, also, we do not know, save what we know of them through your printing press.

The question is one we feel quite an interest in, but as our views differ much from others, we have been slow to give them in public. We now give them only as our views:

We do not believe that we will know our friends in Heaven, if so be that we ever reach that happy place.

If the reader does not turn away from us in disgust at our want of proper feeling, we will give the reasons for thinking as we do.

1st. The love and respect we have for our relatives and others, is one that is imparted to us by training, or by association; and one that is greatly influenced by where and how we are placed. We love our mother, because we believe she is our mother, but we had no means of knowing it until we were told it; and we could as easily have been trained to love another woman, and to call her "Mother," as to love the one that gave us our body. I heard a man say, as he looked into the grave of his grandmother, "She was all the 'MOTHER' I ever knew." It is said that all mothers love their children, and we know that a great many do, but some do not. Well, even those who love their children most, might be deceived; should their offspring be taken away from them, when young, and brought back when grown up, what love could they have for it more than any other stranger, till told that "This is thy son," or, "This is thy daughter?" Experience has proven this.

2nd. It is a fact, we all know, that parents and children as well as many others, often lose their love for one another and become most bitter enemies. If it then begins in this life, and is subject to so many changes, and in some cases altogether to exist, may we not think well, that it is only a creature of time, and is confined in the limits of this life?

3rd. We do not love those most who are nearest by blood. Human life is so changeable and our affections so varied that we love almost anything, and some things that are very unlovely,—whiskey, tobacco, and many other evil things that fasten themselves on us, are samples of what we may indulge in, and say we love them. We leave every reader to ask himself whether there are not some who are made near to us by the blood of Christ, and by the religion He taught, who hold a place in our affections occupied by few others, even those who may be near by kin. If we then love those most whom we hold as pure, good and holy, and desire more than all else, to be in their company, even at the sacrifice of houses, lands, relatives and life itself, how shall we love relatives and friends, whom we may find in heaven, any more than some poor Lazarus or slave, who may also obtain admittance there, through faith in the Savior's blood.

4th. The gospel is the plan by which all may enter heaven. Its Author loves our children and friends no more than He loves other's children and friends. If they all do that which is right they all stand equal before Him; and the land of eternal rest is not promised as a place for the reunion of a few relatives and kin people, but for the assembling of all the redeemed, out of every nation and kindred and people and tongue. Who of that blessed, happy number, could ask to love one any more than another? Or, who would desire to know any relative or friend, when they were all relatives, all friends, all brethren, all saved to sin no more?

5th. If we, in Heaven, shall know relatives and friends, and rejoice to meet them there, we shall also remember some who will never get there, and then we shall be sad. There is no sadness or sorrow in Heaven. We cannot see how we shall know any friend or relative in Heaven, and not at the same time think of others whose situation is so different.

6th. We are told that when the judgment is past, that all will offer to our Heavenly Father, songs of praise for His justice and mercy, and will ascribe glory and honor to His good name. We believe that then the righteous will sanction the judgment and punishment of the wicked. There will be a great change in our affections before we can do that, and we shall lose every attachment to this world and to those who have disobeyed His Divine will.

7th. We, in this world, have means by which to know one another. We know first, by sight or appearance, and second, by name. In Heaven we cannot remember our friends, neither by appearance nor by name. For one says: "It doth not appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see him as he is." 1 John, 3:2. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it." Rev. 2:17.

8th. If friends will know each other there they will greatly desire to meet all their friends and relatives and associates, so as to share with each other the raptures and grandeur, and withal the matchless beauty of those upper regions. Should they fail to meet all they look for, and expect to find, they will be anxious. There can be no anxiety in Heaven.

9th. In conclusion we will review the reasons for thinking that we shall not know our friends in Heaven and submit it to your readers for criticism as they may see proper. We cannot know them by appearance, for none will there appear like we last saw them. "For we shall be changed while the dead are raised incorruptible, for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 'Tis then that we shall have gained the victory. We cannot know them by name, for not one of those many names of ours will be heard in Heaven. We shall not search for friends there, for we cannot search without anxiety. There will be no anxious, waiting hearts in Heaven. We cannot feel then as we do now, for the righteous cannot sanction God's judgment of the wicked; with such feelings, and knowing at the time that many friends, relatives and associates will be in the number that go into outer darkness. Our enjoyment cannot depend upon the number of friends there, for in this life many have lived and died without friends, and their happiness would be greatly limited, when there, were there no friends for them to meet in that better Land.

Much more might be said, but we in conclusion, will say, that if we love our friends truly and desire a heaven for them let us beseech them by the mercies of God, pray them in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God, and knowing the terror of the Lord let us persuade them to come and obtain this abundant life, and gain a wide, glorious entry into that heavenly land, is my prayer.

LANDON WEST.

God's Finished Work.

Who shall ever be able to fathom the depths of that which was accomplished when Jesus said upon the cross, "It is finished?" No man, in our present state of existence, we may rest assured, and whether the most exalted saint, who shall shine as the stars forever and ever, shall be able, even then, to comprehend the depths of the wisdom and knowledge of God, is a question.

But one of the chief beauties of the revelation which God made, when he spoke to us by his Son, is that gave us what the most humble, simple mind may study with endless delight, while he unraveled, at the same time, the questions which the learned and great could no more solve than they could hold the ocean in the hollow of their hands.

It is always hard for the human mind to grasp and comprehend mere theories, however truthful they may be, but it is easy for any one to apprehend great facts which are transacted before him. Thus is the wisdom of God and the power of God seen to be in the gospel of his Son, and the foolishness of preaching becomes a power for the salvation of men, when the most learned philosophical investigation had failed; because in preaching "Christ and him crucified," all speculative theories are discarded, and in place of them are presented stupendous, but plain facts. Any rational mind may lay hold on these facts, and when they are fully believed the motive power is in the heart which will make the children of Adam sons of God, and give them a joint title with Jesus Christ to all the wealth of the universe. And when this faith has led us to take the first steps in obedience, instead of requiring us to see all things, and learn their relations to each other, and to the great end to be attained, as He sees them and knows them now, God lifts us high above all complications, and shows us a specimen of the finished work. Instead of conducting us through the boundless realms of nature, and showing us how every blade of grass, every fish, every beast, every vegetable, animal and mineral, is working onward to an end worthy of Him who saw it from the beginning, he gives us a sample of what the perfected work is to be, when all is completed. "Beloved, now are we the SONS OF GOD, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2.

Though the great groaning universe may challenge us to an investigation, and puzzle us for a solution of its mysteries, and though we might plunge into any department of natural science, and fail entirely to answer our own inquiries, we have a satisfactory answer to them all, when we look unto Jesus, and know that "all things were created by him and for him," and that "in him all things subsist." Though the fall of man, and the introduction of sin and death into the world, and the present existence of evil, may raise many questions to puzzle us from a philosophical or scientific standpoint, we are lifted far above all such questions, and such means of answering them, when we know that God's Son has come in the flesh, to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and to destroy death and him that has the power of death, by achieving victory over them on their own chosen battle-field.

But oh, how sadly men fail to avail themselves of the opportunities which God offers, when he points them to his Son, saying, "In him all fullness dwells." How little do the best men appreciate the blessed fact, that in Jesus Christ we perceive the end of all things to be that God should be in man, that man's life may be "hid with Christ IN God." That God built up the whole creation, and has guided its complicated machinery for ages on ages, in order that he might create, out of nothing, beings who should be like Him, who never was created, in their endless life and perfect happiness. In Christ the Creator is united with the creature may be made one with the Creator forevermore.

Suppose that I should go into one of the immense watch manufacturing establishments, which have been built up at several points in this country, and ask for the evidence that all the machinery is what it ought to be. I am handed over to the men who have labored a lifetime to bring to perfec the pieces of machinery which cut and finish the various parts of a first class watch, and they undertake to minutely describe to me all the parts of the different machines, and to tell me just how they progressed from one improvement to another, through years and years of labor and thought; and so, from one department of the great establishment to another, I am led, until all has been described to me, and I thoroughly understand all so that I shall be able to say "all these things are so perfect that they cannot fail to produce a perfect watch," it would take me a lifetime, and I would have to know as much as all the men in the establishment put together, before I could reach with certainty this conclusion. But if I would know the perfection to which the machinery for making watches has been brought, let me have one of the best watches they can produce, let me examine its movement, let me carry it six months in my pocket, and if they have produced a perfect watch, I shall know it, and I shall be able to testify that the machinery is all right by an examination of the work it has produced.

No botanist ever lived who would presume to say that he had fathomed all the mysteries of the vegetable kingdom; no zoologist who could tell all about the animal kingdom, no mineralogist who had no more to learn in his department. All those most deeply versed in any branch of natural science will unite in the testimony that they are mere children in their several departments; that when they have toiled a lifetime they have only made a beginning, and yet they are men in every community who are not deeply versed in any science, who claim sufficient knowledge, from their superficial observation, to be able to say, that in the eternity of God things must be so and so. If I am not fit to judge of the perfection or imperfection of machinery for making watches, how shall I judge of the great instrumentalities which God has made, and which he controls, that he may fill all heaven with redeemed, glorified and beautified beings, who shall live and reign and love throughout all eternity?

But oh, when God shows us his finished work, in the person of his glorified and all powerful Son, and tells us that we may be like him, is it not enough? Do we not know that all the parts of a system which produces such work as this must be perfect?

Crucify, Crucify!

A frightful and unbroken cry of "Crucify, crucify!" sounds through the world against Jesus and his people. Crucify! cries fashion, which is already almost ashamed of the Christian name, and has raised anti-christianity to the rank of the religion of the polite world. Crucify! cries polite etiquette, in the assemblies and circles of the great, from which Christ has long since been banished, and where no Christian can enter, toll free. Crucify! cry a thousand priests of Baal, who will have nothing but morality: No Christ, no cross, no blood, and no grace. Crucify! cry almost all the Journals. While they, without ceasing, open their batteries against true Christianity. To whatever side we turn, to books and writings, to companies and societies, to assemblies of the great, and the polished; or the drinking rooms of the vulgar and the low; to the work-shops of the mechanics, counting-houses of the merchants, and even to lectures of professors, and the sermons of preachers, wherever we turn, ere we hear one "Hosannah to the Son of David;" the fatal word, crucify, crucify! rudely or politely, covertly or openly, a hundred or a thousand times assaults your ears. Thus do matters stand. So rage the waves of the sea, whose breakers around the city of our God. But my brethren it will yet be worse. God's watchmen proclaim it from the battlements, and more than one sign of these times, indicate that the prophecy is hastening to its accomplishments. The waves will one day become billows of fire, and the hissing of the sea, roaring and howling. A fearful mass of rage and rancor has gradually collected against the cross and its followers. And this powder magazine waits but for the match, to blow up with a fearful explosion. The thousand that have become anti-Christians, must still devour their gall and bitterness. The waves of Bable, which lie round Jerusalem like a calm, deep, treacherous sea, still lurk behind the dams; their fury is yet stayed, but who can tell how much longer. Everything indicates that the time of a universal breaking of the bars and dams is at hand, and the great hour of temptation is no longer distant; the sea is already prepared for a dreadful commotion. I hesitate to name those missionaries, who with mad fanaticism, rage through the neighboring kingdoms, teaching for hire and divining for money, so that the humble Christian cannot enter toll free. Brethren, may the Lord strengthen us in the faith, that we may walk cheerfully under the dark sky of this world, looking up to the glorious stars of promise that he has placed amid the clouds. In this faith, may he inclose us as in a fortress, so long as we weep in this vale of fogs and storms; in this faith we repose amid the hour of temptation, like Noah in his ark. The voice of crucify, is heard everywhere. The name of Christian is worn by almost all classes, ranks and grades. Yet it is a fulfillment of that Scripture that informs us that Babylon has become a cage for every vain and fruitful bird. The name has become a fashionable garb for all; it is worn summer and winter, as a protection from suspetion; yet the wearer by his actions cries, crucify, crucify him. Such humility is not fit to be on earth. Let us have popularity, and it cries, crucify! Let us have the great, and the learned, and they cry crucify! for of the religion of Jesus they say they are ashamed, by their haughty looks and ways. We want the name as a cloak but we don't its ways. Satan is in their hearts waging war against the cross; teaching them to sin as he did, err in the beginning, using the same word that he used then. In this way his ministers cry, crucify! the doctrine of feet-washing. To crucify the doctrine, is crucifying Christ; and in this way they have persecuted Christ and the apostles, until they have fled to another city, and Bable is become a cage for every vain and fruitful bird. Brethren keep out of it is my prayer.

Speak Kindly.

Kind words exert a great influence over us. Who has not felt the effect of them? When our hearts were full of sadness, and disappointment, how one kind word spoken to us by some one, lightened our hearts, and cleared away the dark clouds of disappointment. It is but a simple thing to speak kindly; but, if we form a habit of speaking kindly, it makes all we meet happy, and it makes us happy as well.

We who have been fortunate enough to have good homes, and loving friends, who were ever ready to speak kindly to us and encourage us, do not give kind words their full value. But it is the one who is poor, and has always been used to being slighted by those who considered themselves above him, that appreciates these light-winged messengers of love. Then let us, one and all, remember when we meet a poor child on the street, to speak kindly to it, and though it may be poorly clad, still it will feel happier to think some one has stopped to speak kindly to it. And the poor laboring man, when you pass him on the street, turn not to one side, but speak pleasantly and kindly to him; for true, noble hearts often beat beneath ragged coats. So do not think kind words lost. Perhaps they will be cherished in some poor hearts long after you have forgotten you ever uttered them.

Every one in this world has enough of care—each heart enough of trouble; so if we can be the means of lightning the burdens of any one by speaking kindly, let us do so; for kind words cost nothing.

Voting—Subject to the Higher Powers, &c.

Since there are so many well-meaning people among us, who think it no wrong to go with their neighbors to the polls, to cast a vote for some one or other officer, and even some who think it a very binding duty upon the followers of Christ, and tell us we shall be subject to the "higher powers," and if we do not go to the election we are disobedient to the word of God, we have been thinking to offer a few of our thoughts upon the subject: and if others cannot see as we see, they will try to bear with us.

We will first say, there are "two kingdoms," the "kingdom of this world" and the "kingdom of heaven," and it appears that where there is a kingdom there must also be citizens, or subjects, who are obedient to that power or kingdom. If they be good citizens, then they will try to live up and be subject to the laws of the kingdom of which they are citizens, and will not yield to two adverse kingdoms at once. It cannot be, "ye cannot serve two Masters" And if a citizen leaves one kingdom, and goes to another he cannot be owned as a full citizen until he becomes naturalized—he must denounce the kingdom from whence he came, and avow obedience to the one he wishes to become a citizen of. Now the Savior says, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered (into the hands) to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence." John 18: 36. Now if the Savior's kingdom was not of this world, no doubt it was just as little so of his followers. Now let us see how this garment will fit a Christian, to go and to take part in such an affair, where there is shouting and yelling, cursing, swearing, fighting, bighting, electioneering, blackguarding each other with the most vulgar and pinching language they can find; will such a garment as the above become a Christian? It seems to me I hear some one say it fits him as well as the peacock's plumage would fit the crow. We think it will look as odd for the follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, to participate in such affairs, as did the "five year old boy" with his grandpaps suit on. You will bear with my language, I do not mean to abuse any one; but simply to make things as clear as I can to all. Some one will say, I do not participate in such folly as the foregoing, I simply go to the polls, cast my vote and go home again; and deem it a duty I owe to my country. To such we will say can you take a coal of fire into your hands without being burned? You can take a char into your hand and press it hard, and it will not burn you, but it will blacken you. A stream of clear water and one of muddy may flow together side by side for a short distance without mingling together; but on a little farther they become more and more united until all is involved into one muddy mass. We will ask how can a man go and help a man into an office and then when the hour of peril comes, when that man whom you have helped to put the sword in hand, calls on you to help defend the land; we say, how can you then prove concientiousness, by helping to set that man into such a situation and when help is needed, turn a deaf ear to his cry? We say it is nothing short of traitorousness; you put him to an open shame. Some one will say, I will help him to fight it through. But friend, you forget that then you are no follower of Christ, for his disciples did not fight, and if Christ is a "Prince of Peace," he will not allow his followers to engage in anything that will gender strife, quarreling and fighting. Therefore we would say "Touch not, taste not, handle not. Abstain from all appearance of evil." And as to being "Subject to the higher powers," a vast number do not know what the higher powers are. They will tell you a Christian ought to be patriotic—he ought to go to the polls and help to get good officers—fight and lay down his life for his country and be subject to the higher powers. If asked what the higher powers are, they cannot tell. We will try to explain: First we say each township or district in our land can form its own laws in regard to the district independent to the other; but when a law is made by the county, in regard to certain things, then all the districts of said county must be subject to that law; because it is of a "Higher Power." And the same with counties; each county can have its own relative laws independent of the other, but when the state composing the several counties makes a law, then all said counties composing that state must adhere to the law of the state, for the state is a higher power than the county. In like manner must all the states be in subjection to the laws of the United States. And if the United States would bind a law upon man, contrary to the doctrine of Christ, or of God, then we must hearken to God, rather than to man, for he is the "Supreme Power," over all others. By him "the heavens and the earth were made; and without him there is nothing made." Therefore the follower of Christ cannot engage in political affairs, if we understand the Scriptures aright. He cannot serve "God and Mammon." He can, and shall pray for rulers and magistrates, that they may lead and guide things, so that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life.

In Revelations 12: 1, we have the true allegory or symbol of a Christian, which reads, "and there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, (the gospel light) and the moon under her feet, (the world) and upon her head a crown of twelve stars (adorned with the doctrine of the twelve apostles,) and she being with child, cried travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. She could not get her mind fixed upon other things, because she was in travail, neither can a Christian have his mind fixed upon things that partain to another kingdom. It is all lost time to him. We must cut our discourse short, else we become wearysome. In conclusion would say, "Search the scripture, for in them ye think ye have enternal life," &c.

Is Feet-Washing a Christian Ordinance?

There has been considerable written on the above subject, but as the subject is one of importance I feel like giving a few ideas to the readers of the COMPANION.

The Reader, as I shall call him who first wrote upon the subject, thinks the bretbren condemn others who do not see in this particular as we do. When the brethren preach the plain word they are sometimes censured for judging. The Saviour says, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." James says, "He that speaketh evil of his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one Law-giver who is able to save and to destroy. Who art thou that judgest another?" And the angel said to John, "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." Then we see there is great danger in judging our brother; and in judging and scrapping the word of truth, that this or that is not essential," &c.; but the doers of the word are justified.

The Reader says, we fail to give the origin of the rite. We are not very particular as to the rite in the Old Testament, as that dispensation is not unto our salvation; but no humble Christian need be in the dark in regard to the rite as an ordinance in the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth. The Savior makes it very plain when feet-washing should be observed as a Christian ordinance, and for what purpose. His teaching proves to every humble mind the necessity and importance of the observance of this sacred rite. Had the Savior washed the disciple's feet as an act of hospitality, he would no doubt have had his own feet washed also, as a natural cleansing; but as he did not we must conclude it was of spiritual import, therefore he had no need, "for he did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. Jesus says, "He that is washed needeth not, save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all," &c. Acts 22: 16; 1 Cor. 6: 11; Eph. 5: 26; Ti. 3: 5; Heb. 10: 22, and 1 Pet. 3; 21. These scriptures prove to my mind that baptism is the washing Jesus alludes to: "He that is washed, regenerated, born of God, born of water, and of the Spirit." But if we have no faith in baptism, as many have not, then it is of no benefit to us, and our sins are not washed away. Just so with feet washing, if we will not believe and obey from the heart, believing in his promises, we cannot expect to receive his blessing. Jesus says, "It is the spirit that quickeneth the flesh, profileth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Paul says, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith. Prove your own selves." By what? By our own hearts or feelings? Nay, but by the word of God, and then we will find ourselves sinners before God, and unworthy of the least of his blessings. Frail creatures, liable to err, one against another, and come short of many duties. Solomon says, "There is no man that sinneth not." And James says, "For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able, also, to bridle the whole body." It is indispensably necessary that we should have faith in, and make use of every means of grace to make us fit subjects for his table, that we may eat and drink worthily, and not unto condemnation.

Feet-washing is the rite exemplified by the Savior to make clean and purify those that are washed, to make us every whit clean; that we may acceptably commemorate the Lord's death, in humility, serving one another. Not only the clergy, but every follower of Jesus Christ needs this cleansing preparatory to the supper and communion. Paul says, "There is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." Then the sisters as well as the brethren should take part, and share in the rite, and through faith enjoy the promised happiness.

The Reader asks whether feet washing is a command, and whether we, according to the scripture, are bound to observe it, and where he shall get his information from? Paul says, "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Now, Reader, believe the word of God and obey it; for the command is, "If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one anothers feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Ye also ought, ye also, ye likewise, too, ought; and ought, signifies fit, necessary. Should, implies duty. Then it is every Christian's duty to wash brothers feet, for it is necessary for our cleansing. Our Lord and Master has given the example that we should do as he had done unto them. "For the servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent, greater than he that sent him.

The Reader concludes, the disciples did not observe feet washing in the churches, as they did not write about it in their epistles; but we conclude, the disciples were obedient in all things commanded them by the Savior. For Jesus says, in his prayer to his Father for his disciples, and also for them which should believe on him, through them, &c., "For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them," &c; and says, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world, and for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also, might be sanctified through the truth." Now, we must conclude, the disciples carried out the injunction of the Savior, "Teaching them to observe all things, &c., to the letter.

Neither the disciples nor Paul have written what they preached or practiced in the churches, but in their epistles exhort them to steadfastness in what they have seen and heard of them, and not only in part, but all things.

The Reader says, Paul did not observe feet washing at Ephesus. Let us hear Paul: "Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind, &c., and how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Now, Reader, be honest with Paul and yourself. How did Paul serve the Lord with all humility, &c.? To serve, is to obey, to perform duty; "with all humility," not desiring to be the greatest among them, but their servant. "And kept back nothing that was profitable," but shewed and taught them. Now, Reader, can you assert that Paul did not teach feet-washing, and practice it too, at Ephesus, when he shewed and taught all the counsel of God?

SARAH RUPEL.

Thoughts for Those who Love the Progress of the Truth.

The following is taken from a book entitled "God in History," by Hollis Read. The author, after calling attention to the advantages possessed by England and the United States, in language, power, wealth, commerce, and in many other respects, closes the chapter in the following words:

"But I will pursue the subject no further at present. A few brief reflections urge themselves upon us.

1. The tremendous responsibility of England and America. The destiny of the world is, under God, suspended on the course of conduct which they pursue. If they act decidedly in favor of a sound morality and pure religion; if they hesitate not to use, in all proper ways, their immense advantages to fill the world with blessings, they may wield a moral power for its renovation such as no nation could at any former period. The resources of these two nations in wealth and territory, in power, in learning and truth, in useful arts and inventions, in industry and enterprise, in almost everything needed to secure influence abroad, are enormous. But why has God committed to their hands such prodigious resources? Doubtless that they may fulfill His designs in the renovation of the world. If they are faithless here, God will not hold them guiltless. The nation or kingdom that will not serve Him shall perish.

2. The responsibility of travelers, visitors and sojourners in foreign lands. They appear abroad as the representatives of Christianity. Nations less civilized, and debased by a false religion, estimate the value of Christianity very much as they see it exemplified in the every day life of those calling themselves Christians. How important, then, that Christian travelers and sojourners among such nations should not mis-represent our religion and its thousand attendant blessings. And on the other hand, no class of persons may be so extensively and permanently useful as they who have it in their power to be examples of Christian faith and practice among heathen nations, and who may introduce among them the better manners and customs, and the comforts and improvements in common life which attains among Christian nations.

3. We have here forcibly urged upon us the duty we owe to SAILORS. No class of man may on the one hand do more mischief abroad, or, on the other, more effectually carry out the purposes of Divine mercy towards our world, than they "who go down to the sea in ships; who do business in great waters." Their field is peculiarly the world. Let them go forth sanctified men, everywhere zealous for the honor of their GOD, and their influence will be immense beyond calculation.

4. With what pleasing interest and profound solemnity ought we to regard the present condition of the world! Never before has God provided such resources for its recovery. Never before has He brought it into a position so favorable to receive the Truth, and never imposed on His people so solemn obligations. What thrilling motives have we here for action! Are we the servants of Christ? Never were we more encouraged, or so loudly called on to live for our Divine Master. Are we permitted to co-operate with God? Never before were we urged on by such irresistible arguments. If God is making a short work on the earth—if He is consummating His plans with unprecedented and glorious rapidity—how ought we to double our diligence, that we may keep pace with His stately steppings."

Let the reader reflect on that searching question, "Are we the servants of Christ?" and remember that one of the most important duties enjoined by our Master was that of preaching the Gospel to the world. We find fault with others for a non-observance of His commands, but, brethren, we are much behind in this one. Let us redeem the time we have lost, and when like Paul, we have no more place where the Gospel has not been preached, let us go to another, so that that living stone may roll on.

Masonic Worship—Its Hymns.

BY JOHN TOMLINE WALSH.

If you wish to learn the heart-faith of any sect or party, study their prayers and hymns, and you will find those tenets which are "most surely believed" by them. Acting upon this truth, let us look into Masonic hynology, and see what they sing at funerals, and in their lodges, halls, and temples. I quote from CROSS' MASONIC TEXT BOOK, revised by Will. M. Cunningham, M. A., K. T., Sov. Gr. Ins. Gen. 33rd, which means, Master of Arts, Knight Templar, Sovereign Grand Inspector General, 33rd degree.

Now such a great and learned man as Mr. Cunningham must know what he writes and whereof he affirms, even in poetry.

The following is the "Most Excellent Master's Song,"—"sung with solemn ceremonies"—of human invention, of course:

"All hail to the morning,
That bids us rejoice;
The temple's completed,
Exalt high each voice.
The capstone is finished,
Our labor is o'er;
The sound of the gavel
Shall hail us no more.
"To the Power Almighty who ever has guided
The tribes of old Israel, exalting their fame;
To Him, who hath governed our hearts undivided,
Let's send forth our voices to praise his great name."

May we not pause to ask, What temple is this of which they sing as completed? It cannot be Solomon's, for that has long since been numbered among the things of the past. No, it must be what Masons regard as the antitype of Solomon's temple, which is the mystic temple of Masonary. They sing this as "completed." "The capstone is finished." Their "labor is over." They praise the "Power Almighty which guided the tribes of old Israel," and claim that the same Power has "governed" their "hearts undivided." And yet many among the mass of Freemasons, and a number of the uninitiated, say it is not a religious system! They are either hoodwinked or need more light.

Passing over several stanzas, we have the following:

"ALMIGHTY JEHOVAH!
Descend now and fill
This lodge with thy glory,
Our hearts with good will!
Preside at our meetings,
Assist us to find
True pleasure in teaching
Good-will to mankind."

In the above stanza they invoke Jehovah to descend and fill the lodge with his glory, and their hearts with good-will. Do they really believe—does any Christian who is a member of the lodge believe that it is filled with God's glory? Has he ever promised to fill a Masonic lodge with his glory?

They ask God to "preside at" their meeting. Does God in truth preside at Masonic meetings?

But let us hear them sing another stanza:

"Thy wisdom inspired the great institution,
Thy strength shall support it till nature expire:
And when the creation shall fall into ruin,
Its beauty shall rise through the midst of the fire."

Here it is claimed that the Masonic institution is "inspired" by the "wisdom" of God, and that his "strength" shall support it till nature expire; and when this vast creation shall fall into ruin, the "beauty" of this "great institution" shall rise to heaven through the midst of the fires of the last day!

If all this be true, what more does any Mason desire in the way of religion? If it is inspired by the wisdom of God; if his strength supports it; and if it survives the "wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds," and takes them all to heaven, they need nothing more. (See pp. 119–124.

Sing of the "glorious fabric" of Freemasonry, they chant:

"The steps within its ladder,
By which aloft we climb,
Are Hope and kindly Charity,
And Spirit Faith sublime.

Let not the reader be mistaken by these finely-sounding words, for they sing of Masonic faith, hope, and charity, which is a very different thing from that of which Paul writes. But, still, by this Masonic faith, hope, and charity are the three steps "by which aloft" they "climb."

Again; they sing:

"The starry heaven, its canopy
Curtained by angels wings:
Whose kind, protecting radiancy
A halo 'round us fling."

Protected by angels, what need they fear?

And even the entered apprentice, who is but a "hewer of wood and a drawer of water" in the institution—even he can sing:

Within our temple met again,
With hearts and purpose strong,
We'll raise our notes of grateful praise,
With union in our song."

In the next stanza they speak of having assembled "around our altar's sacred shrine," and of their music being borne on "mystic flames" "to the skies."

But we must hear them again:

"Come brothers of the mystic tie—
Our social work begun—
We'll raise an opening song on high,
To Him, the Holy One!"

They sing, "We round our altar stand," and invite the brethren to

"Come and kindle at our holy fire,
Fraternal thoughts, and kind."

If theirs be a "holy fire," where shall we find the "strange fire?"

"Behold! how pleasant and how good,
For brethren, such as we,
Of the accepted brotherhood,
To dwell in unity."

Only think of a mixed company of Christians, infidels, swearers, drunkards, libertines, and all the rest, standing around the Masonic alter, and uniting heart and hand, in one fraternal band, singing and worshipping as the above verses indicate! "Unequally yoked" The "ox and the ass plowing together!"

Before closing this article I must quote from the Fifth Ode, page 262, the following:

"Then, Masons, join to praise the Lord,
For blessing freely given;
And when we leave this earthly lodge,
May we ascend to heaven."

Yes, they all expect to go to the "Grand Lodge above!" They have no Grand Lodge below for Masons; but all, of every tribe, nation, and tongue, by three long strides up Jacob's (?) ladder, bound into heaven!

We now close this Masonic concert, and will hear them sing again.

Nothing But Leaves.

It is early morn. The dewdrops still hang from each leaf and blade of grass, while the rising sun bursts, with dazzling brightness, upon Judea's plain. The many towers of Jerusalem flash in the gorgeous sunlight. Within the city all is life and activity. The quiet hills and plains without are in striking contrast with the din and noise of the crowded metropolis. Our Lord, with his twelve disciples, is just starting from the little town of Bethany, where he has spent the night. During the day Jesus, with his disciples, is found in the great city, teaching the multitudes which eagerly throng around, and performing the many wonderful miracles which mark his divinity; but at night, tired and weary, he retires to quiet Bethany, that, unmolested, he may rest, and hold sweet communion with his Father. Thus, as morning dawns, we find Him, refreshed and strengthened, journeying towards Jerusalem. The Mount of Olives rises in all majesty in full view, while, far as the eye can reach, the plains of Judea lie basking in the morning sun. But to the disciples the beauty of this scene is lost; for, all intent upon the teachings of their Lord, the lessons of nature are unheeded. To them the words which fall from the lips of one so good, so holy, so divine, are sweeter than the voices of man or nature; aye, all else is forgotten, as they listen with breathless silence to his words of counsel and guidance, made more impressive by the holy light which beams from the countenance of the divine teacher. But, before the journey is accomplished, our Savior hungers. In the distance he discerns a fig tree, and "He came, if haply He may find anything thereon." He finds nothing but leaves. Not angry because he found nothing there, but, like the good husbandman, who casts out of the garden every tree which bears no fruit, he, by speaking, causes the tree to wither away. Here we have the lesson which the withered tree, with its rustling leaves, whispers in our ears. See we not His power to destroy, or make alive, by a single word? Was this lesson designed for his disciples alone? Were only they to be benefitted by such an exhibition of divine power? Are we not, during all our lives, seeking for fruit, and finding only leaves? We rush after pleasures, which, seen in the mellow light of our imagination, appear golden; fame, honor, wealth, may call with winning voices, but, if we heed such calls, shall we not find at last that our harvest is nothing but leaves? Is this the only lesson? Because the tree bore nothing but leaves it was useless, and therefore unworthy a place in the fruitful earth, and Christ destroyed it. We are placed in the garden of the great Husbandman. If we bear only leaves will not the Lord of the vineyard cast us out as worthless? By our fruits we shall be known.

"Ah! who shall thus the Master meet,
Bearing naught but withered leaves?
Ah! who shall at the Savior's feet
Before the awful judgment seat,
Lay down for golden sheaves,
Nothing but leaves."

How useless it would be for a man to run back and forth to a fire with an empty bucket. But we fear it is just what some Sunday-school teachers do, who come Sunday after Sunday to their class, without having made any careful preparation. Some "good" men and women do this, but they are not good in doing so. They do little good; and may be doing a great deal of harm, because they make the impression as if the world-saving truths of the gospel were as shallow and dull as their presentation of them.

Christian Baptism.

Brother A. S. Leer on page 573 gives the circumstances under which a pedo-rantist minister denied that John's baptism was Christian baptism, "from the fact that Christ never commanded it until he commissioned his apostles to go and teach all nations," &c. He then says, "Hence, if it was Christian baptism, I very much desire an answer by some brother, with some good, philosophical reasoning upon it."

We should always be careful not to misquote the words, or misstate the positions, of an adversary; thus avoid doing injustice to any one, including pedo rantist ministers. What has the fact—if such it were—that Christ did not command baptism until he gave the commission, to do with settling the question whether John's was Christian baptism? But as to the main question, it is in evidence that John and Jesus were making and baptizing disciples simultaneously, and that "Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John; though Jesus himself baptized not." Query: Who commanded the disciples to baptize here? James 4: 1, 2.

If the baptisms of John and Jesus were perfectly identical in all particulars, why, then, should "all men" flock into Jesus? That John did not baptize "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," appears pretty clear from Acts 19: 1—5, since John's disciples did not know that this distinction in the God-head exists. They had "not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." But, as to mode and subjects, we believe the two baptisms were perfectly the same. John the Baptist sprinkled—rantized—neither adults nor infants. John did not baptize into the faith of Christ, as already come, but as about to be made manifest in the promised Messiah. Christ's or Christian baptism must confess that the man Jesus IS the Christ. So we see that the baptism of John and that of the commission differ essentially in at least two points.

The circumstances related in Acts 19: 1—5, transpired at least twenty years after the death of John the Baptist, and about six hundred miles, by land, from Jerusalem; so we find that John's disciples continued to propagate his baptism, independently, and perhaps in opposition to the true Christian baptism. In view, then, of the above facts,—as we believe them to be,—we would be compelled to hesitate before we would positively affirm that John's was Christian baptism in the literal sense of that term.

Paul, or his amanuensis, calls it "John's" baptism long after the apostolic baptism of the commission was fully established; and I have yet to find the evidence that will authorize or warrent us to go farther and apply to it the term "Christian" in its full and best sense. John's preparatory baptism was fully manifested in the immersion of Jesus. So I believe, therefore I thus write, not very "Philosophically" I must confess.

What We Have Experienced in Feet-Washing.

Much has been written upon this important subject, and I feel that there is still room for more light. We who have been attending to all that the Lord has commanded us to do, should be free to make known our experience; should try the utmost to open the eyes of those who cannot see that it could bring peace or happiness to their poor, perishing souls. They think they feel happy, do not feel condemned, can feel that their prayers are heard, and that their conscience is clear before God, and in this faith they live and die, and go hence. Oh, what a grievous pity it is, that so many precious souls with the Bible and Testament in their possession, will still travel on the path of darkness, until they reach the very gate of heaven, before they discover their great mistake. It appears almost impossible that an unprejudiced mind could get so far without seeing the least spark of that light. Our Savior tells us, "if ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them," to which we that have experienced can all say, Amen. We have felt the happiest whilst we have been engaged in the holy ordinances, and most especially when we are engaged in feet-washing. I feel a peculiar love, and renewing of the spirit in the very act, and I believe that my brethren and sisters all feel the same love towards each other. This is then truly, a feast of love; and this is no hard cross to bear, having learned humility and feeling poor in spirit. But for those that are exalted, this cross is too intolerable for them.

Insurance Companies.

Much has been said and written, pro and con, in regard to insuring lives and property. The leading objection to insuring property, in companies outside of the church, in my opinion, consists in connecting ourselves, with worldly institutions, whose primary object is speculation and self-agrandizement; and the danger of becoming involved in tedious litigations, in order to obtain justice, and thus compromise some of the leading principles of our faith. Again, insuring property tends to engender pride, and extravagance in the church. In the earlier and humbler period of the church, no such thing as insuring property was thought of by the brethren, and it was always understood by the church, to be incompatible with the purer spirit of the gospel. So I have always understood it; and consequently have never insured, though much annoyed by importunate insurance agents, and located where there is more danger from accidents than many others. Now, I think, the spirit of the gospel requires us, as a Christian body, to mutually insure each other, in both life and property, against unforeseen, and unavoidable accidents; We are "to bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Therefore our souls bodies and estates should be common property in Christ Jesus. But, since the church has greatly multiplied and spread over a vast extent of territory, and possesses much substance in the aggregate, which is at all times liable to accident, and most always brings distress; and since we have measurably lost the mutual insurance spirit, prompted by the spirit of the gospel, from our greatness, and other causes, can't we revive and restore that spirit again, measurably at least, by getting up a mutual insurance Company in the church? I will suggest several plans, and propose that each District Council in the United States, investigate, and deliberate upon the matter, and send up the result of their united deliberations, to the General Council, for its confirmation or rejection.

First, then, let the general council authorize the formation of a mutual insurance company, in the brotherhood, to consist of a President, Vice President, and board of Directors, one or more of which shall reside in each sub council district throughout the brotherhood, and all be reasonably compensated for their services. The assets or capital to consist of the aggregate nett north of the members, covering their life, or property, by policies. No cash capital will then be needed, and no drafts made on any, except as accidental necessity requires, or annually to liquidate the salaries of the officers. Should the church report adversely upon this plan, as embracing too much territory, I would next suggest, by permission of the A. M. that each sub-council district, or as many as choose to engage in it, establish for itself such a company, upon these principles. I prefer the first proposition myself, because it is more national in its character, and as we claim to be "one body in Christ," I deprecate anything sectional, congregational or exclusive, that is of a general character. Since brethren will insure, give us a Brethren's Insurance Company. And if the rich can insure their property, let the poor insure their lives, as this will put them, measurably, on an equality with the rich brethren. And there is nothing more sacrilegious in the latter than in the former; as we do not defy the power of God, or his attributes thereby. But when men die, either through God's providence, or by accident, we will provide for their distressed, and often helpless and impoverished families. These are my conclusions from much thought upon the subject, but hastily gotten up. Perhaps abler and more thoughtful brethren have something better to offer; if so let us have it brethren.

Holy Living.

A holy life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles, not battles, nor one great heroic act or mighty martyrdom make up the true Christian life. The little, constant sunbeam, not the lightnightning; the waters of Siloam "that go softly in the meek mission of refreshment," not "the waters of the river, great and many, rushing down in torrent, noise and force," are, the true symbols of a holy life.

Editor's Diary.

TUESDAY, 17th.—After dinner brother and sister Imler took us to Altoona, where we preached in a new meeting-house, which had been built for a faction of the United Brethren Church; but, as the swarm went back again into the old hive, the house was not wanted, and so it remained on the hands of the contractor. He is anxious to sell it to the Brethren, and with that view gives the use of it free. If the house were smaller, and the brethren's purse larger, and those roof supporters were out of the way, we would recommend them to buy it. As it is they can do just exactly as seemeth good to them, without regard to our advice. By all means we should have a meeting-house in Altoona. Our meeting this evening was not very large, but the attention was very good. brother Oller, from Franklin county, was with us, and encouraged us by his presence.

Lodged at brother H. B. Burkholder's, who is glad to receive visits from the brethren. Also made the acquaintance of brethren Cogan and Chatham.

WEDNESDAY, 18th.—Took the morning train for Elder Grabill Myers', who lives about three miles from Altoona, on the Hollidaysburg branch railroad. Found the old brother and sister in good health, and met with a warm reception. The day was spent in pleasant conversation, principally upon useful topics. In the evening tried to preach at their school-house, to an appreciative audience.

THURSDAY, 19th.—Took the same train that had brought us for Duncansville, five miles farther. Arrived at the old Duncansville meeting-house at about noon, where a Lovefeast was appointed for the evening. At two o'clock a church meeting was called, to act upon some unfinished business. It was then announced that the congregation had agreed to hold an election for a minister and a deacon. A Board was appointed, consisting of the ministers present, who went into a room, and a choice was made for a minister, resulting in the election of brother Brice Sell. The result was announced, and the election for deacon proceeded with, which fell upon brother David Sell. It was also submitted to the members whether brother James A. Sell should be ordained as Elder, which was unanimously agreed to, and also approved of by the Board generally, which consisted of Elders J. W. Brumbaugh, Grabill Myers, John S. Holsinger, and Samuel M. Cox; and brethren Leonard Furry, Thos. B. Maddocks, John B. Replogle, and ourself. The election was held in good order, and with marked unanimity, but our former convictions were strengthened. After the election those chosen were ordained to their several offices in the usual manner. It was the most impressive scene we ever witnessed—three brothers, all under thirty years of age, taking upon themselves all the offices of the Church. Elders Myers, Brumbaugh and Holsinger performed the solemn ceremony. We hope the Lord will bestow strength to our brethren, that they may labor to his honor, and to the edification of the Church.

In the evening we enjoyed a pleasant Lovefeast and a solemn communion season, witnessed by an attentive audience.

Lodged at brother John Stifler's, and received the hospitalities of the family. This is the home of our young correspondent, sister E. R. Stifler, from whom our readers may hear more frequently.

FRIDAY, 20th.—After a pleasant interview with brother Stifler and family we assembled at the meeting-house for public worship, commencing at nine o'clock. Nothing unusual about the meeting, except that it was announced at the close that the funeral of the youngest child of brother Robert McFarland would take place next morning.

In the afternoon we took the train at Hollidaysburg for Martinsburg, where we landed at about 5 P. M. This was our first trip over the Morrison's Cove railroad, of which we may have something to say hereafter.

Made our way to Robert Riley's, our sister Elizabeth and mother having also accompanied us from Duncansville. Found all in reasonable health. Remained over night, and enjoyed a good rest.

SATURDAY, 21st.—We are now at our old home, upon the stamping ground of our boyhood days, and thoughts of long ago crowd thickly upon our mind. Visited our sister Hannah, widow of brother John D. Brumbaugh, whose death we noticed in our Diary when yet in Black Hawk county, Iowa. Ah! how sad it is here without brother John, who always manifested so much pleasure at our meeting. But, although we miss him painfully here, we would not wish him back again to resume his life of suffering.

Here, too, on the same yard, live our parents, and with them are sojourning sister Mary and her family. All are in middling health, except some of the children. Father is not at home, being out in Michigan upon church business. He is expected to return in a few days.

We are in reasonably good health, and improving. To-night we preach at the new meeting-house at Martinsburg. More anon.

Missionary Fund.

This world seems to be made up of lights and shadows, hopes and disappointments, bright prospects and gloomy forebodings or sad reverses. A few weeks ago we imagined we saw a glimmer of light in a dark place, when the proposition to raise a Missionary Fund was made by brother Thomas. When brethren and sisters commenced sending in their names, our hopes began to rise. Surely, we thought, all that had been wanting was an open way; and now, since the way has been opened, our hearts will be enlarged, our safes will be unlocked, our purses will be untied, and the Lord's treasury, so long neglected, will be filled. We hailed and welcomed it as the promising dawn of a glorious era, in which "the faith once delivered to the saints" should be inculcated and honored from Maine to Oregon and California, from Alaska to Florida, and, ultimately, throughout the world.

We admit that our hopes were extensive, considering the small beginning. But all great men were once infants, all great nations were once diminutive and weak, and all great enterprises sprang from single ideas. Why, then, might not this good seed, dropped into fertile soil, spring up and grow into an abundant harvest before the Lord? Our picture is too beautiful, too glorious, to allow us to stand mutely by, and suffer the curtain of darkness to be spread over it to hide it from the world. If the light must recede, if our prospects must fade, if our hopes must perish, we will first utter our protest, and make our plea in behalf of the good, the great, the superlatively worthy and noble cause.

When the Macedonian call was made, "Come over and help us," Paul and his fellow-laborers at once responded. But now the cry is heard from the forests of Maine, from the prairies of the western states and territories, and from the plantations of the South: from mountains, hills, and valleys, inquiring, hungry, thirsty souls are calling for the bread and water of life. Where is the ready response? Where? Echo answers, "Where?" but we are left to wonder on in uncertainty and doubt, while precious, blood-bought souls are perishing through our indifference and neglect.

"Is there no remedy? "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" Thus inquired the Weeping Prophet of old; and thus may God's weak servant inquire to-day with augmented emotions and anxiety. There was balm then; there was a physician there, and if they were not healed, it was through want of the proper application. Blessed be God! there is a balm now: the righteousness of Christ is abundantly efficacious to heal every sinner to whom it is imputed. There is a Physician here. Christ himself is the great Physician. He thoroughly understands the malady of sin; and he knows, too, how to heal the sin-sick soul. But his laboratory is in heaven, and he dispenses his healing balm to a sin-stricken world by the hands of his servants. We are his servants, if we do his bidding. But he has commanded us to "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Are we his servants? Are we obeying his command? Have we consecrated ourselves wholly to his service? Have we given up all for his sake? Have we his cause at heart? Is the salvation of sinners dear to us? Do we rightly value God's rich gifts? Do we properly use and improve the talents—the means of doing good—that God has given us? How stands our account? "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."

Are you conscientious about putting a little money into the Lord's treasury, when he has declared that "the gold and the silver," "the cattle upon a thousand hills," "the world and the fullness thereof," are his? Are you afraid that God will condemn you, if you use what he has loaned you to glorify his name? If so, are you certain that he will receive you as his sons and daughters, if you thwart his purposes, and use God's gifts to accomplish your own selfish ends? Are you quite certain of a mansion in heaven, if you fill your coffers with shining dust, or add house to house, or farm to farm, soon to be left in the hands of—perhaps a wise man, and perchance a fool? Eccl. 2: 18, 19.

We have now on the list fifteen names. Only fifteen names! Is it possible that among ten thousand readers of the COMPANION only fifteen are found who are willing to pay their mite toward raising a Missionary Fund? No it cannot be. We know that there are hundreds, if not thousands, who are willing to pay from one to ten dollars into the treasury. But those who feel the deepest interest in the work must lead off in it. They should not only send their own names but talk with their fellow-members, and get up lists of names and send them in. Is there not one in every congregation who will do so? We hope there is and with this hope we will await the result. Brethren and sisters, "Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

Brother C. H. Balsbaugh.

We have late and very sad intelligence from our much loved brother, and highly esteemed contributor, C. H. Balsbaugh. The letter bearing the tidings was indited by himself, but mostly written by an amanuensis. The concluding sentences were written by himself, but oh, how changed! How striking is the sentence, "In bed, and apparently near the end!" How doubly impressive when the crooked lines from a trembling hand, testify to the sorrowful truth! But it is cheering to observe, that the short epistle is the outbreathing of a pure heart, desirous of having a conscience void of offence toward God and man We may, at some future time, publish at least a part of the letter, as it is a burning lesson for those who would make merchandise of the gospel. May his sun sink in peace and rise again in glory. J. W. B.

Obituaries Continued.

In the Ashland church, Ashland county, Ohio, September 13th, our sister JEMIMA BLOCHER, wife of brother Jerry Blocher. Aged 41 years, 6 months, and 28 days. She leaves a husband and 7 children, besides many other relatives, among whom there is an only sister, who deeply feel their loss. Sister Jemima was an active member in the church and her presence will be greatly missed. There the writer witnessed the care a Christian mother has for her family. Just before she died she called her family to her bedside, and bade them a last farewell. Oh, how solemn, to see the children one by one extend their hands and say, "Farewell mother!" And to see her raise her head and kiss her little infant while her lips were fast growing cold in death. Thus we see another family bereft of a mother's gentle care, but we hope they will try to meet her where there is no separation. Funeral services by Elder D. M. Witmer and the writer, from Isaiah 38: 1.

D. N. WORKMAN.

In the Ashland church, Ashland county, Ohio, September the 7th, CORA A. DAVIDSON, infant daughter of friend James and Anna M. Davidson. Aged 1 year and 4 days. This family had just moved from Lancaster county, Pa., to the above named place a few days before they had to part with their beloved daughter; but we trust their loss is her great gain, and that it will cause them to remember that the child cannot return to them, but that they can go to the child. Funeral services by brother Henry Kilhefner and the writer, from 2nd Kings, 4: 26.

A Child in Court.

THE POWER OF TRUTH.

The following beautiful illustration of the simplicity and power of truth is from the pen of S. A. Hammond, formerly editor of the Albany State Register. He was an eye-witness of the scene in one of the higher courts.

A little girl, nine years of age, was offered as a witness against a prisoner, who was on trial for a felony committed in her father's house.

"Now, Emily," said the counsel for the prisoner, upon her being offered as a witness, "I desire to know if you understand the nature of an oath."

"I don't know what you mean," was the simple answer.

"There, your honor," said the counsel addressing the court, "is anything further necessary to demonstrate the validity of my objection? This witness should be rejected. She does not comprehend the nature of an oath."

"Let us see," said the judge. "Come here my daughter."

Assured by the kind manner and tone of the judge, the child stepped toward him, and looked confidently into his face, with a calm clear eye, and in a manner so artless and frank, that it went straight to the heart.

"Did you ever take an oath?" inquired the judge. The child stepped back with a look of horror, and the blood mantled in a blush all over her face and neck, as she answered:

"No sir."

She thought he intended to inquire, if she had ever blasphemed. "I don't mean that," said the judge, who saw her mistake; "I mean, were you ever a witness before?"

"No sir, I never was in court before!" was the answer.

He handed her an open Bible.

"Dou you know that book, my daughter?"

She looked at it, and answered:

"Yes, sir; it is the Bible."

"Do you read it?" he asked.

"Yes, sir; every evening."

"Can you tell us what the Bible is?" inquired the judge.

"Is it the word of the great God," she answered.

"Well place your hand upon this Bible and listen to what I say:" he repeated slowly and solemnly the oath usually administered to witnesses.

"Now, said the judge, "you have sworn as a witness; will you tell me what will become of you if you do not tell the truth?"

"I shall be shut up in State Prison," answered the child.

"Anything else?" asked the judge

"I shall never go to heaven," she replied.

"How do you know this?" asked the judge.

The child took the Bible, and turning rapidly to the chapter containing the commandments, pointed to the injunction, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

"I learned that before I could read."

"Has any one talked to you about your being a witness against this man?" inquired the judge.

"Yes, sir," she replied. "My mother heard they wanted me to be a witness, and last night she called me to tell her the ten commandments, and then we kneeled down together, and she prayed that I might understand how wicked it was to bear false witness against my neighbor, and that God would help me, a little child, to tell the truth as it was before him. And when I came up here with my father she kissed me, and told me to remember the ninth commandment, and that God would hear every word that I said."

"Do you believe this?" asked the judge, while a tear glistened in his eye, and his lips quivered with emotion.

"Yes sir," said the child, with a voice and manner that showed her conviction of truth was perfect.

"God bless you, my child," said the judge, "you have a good mother. This witness is competent," he continued. "Were I on trial for life, and innocent of the charge against me I would pray to God for such a witness as this. Let her be examined."

The Little Girl and her Copy.

A little girl went to a writing-school. When she saw her copy, with every line so perfect, "I can never write like that," she said.

She looked steadfastly at the straight round lines, so slim and graceful. Then she took up her pen and timidly put it on the paper. Her hand trembled; she stopped, studied the copy, and began again. "I can but try," said the little girl; "I will do as well as I can."

She wrote half a page. The letters were crooked. What more could we expect from a first effort? The next scholar stretched across her desk, and said, "What scraggy things you make!" Tears filled the little girl's eyes. She dreaded to have the teacher see her book. "He will be angry with me and scold," she said to herself.

But when the teacher came and looked, he smiled. "I see you are trying, my little girl," he said kindly, "and that is enough for me."

She took courage. And again and again she studied the beautiful copy. She wanted to know how every line went, how every letter was rounded and made. Then she took up her pen and began to write. She wrote carefully with the copy always before her. But oh? what slow work it was! Her letters staggled here, they crowded there, and some of them looked every way.

The little girl trembled at the step of the teacher. "I am afraid you will find fault with me," she said. "My letters are not fit to be on the same page with the copy.

"I do not find fault with you," said the teacher, "because I do not look so much at what you do. By really trying you make a little improvement every day; and a little improvement every day will enable you to reach excellence by and by."

"Thank you, sir," said the little girl; and thus encouraged, she took up her pen with a greater spirit of application than before.

And so it is with the children who are trying to become like Jesus. God has given us a heavenly copy. He has given us his dear Son "for an example, that we should follow his steps." He "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." "He is altogether lovely," and "full of grace and truth." And when you study his character, "I can never, never reach that," you say; "I can never be like Jesus."

God does not expect you to become like his dear Son in a minute, or a day, or a year; but what pleases him is that you should love him, and try to follow his example. It is that temper which helps you to grow, day by day, little by little into his kindness, which God desires to see. God loves you for trying, and will help you.—Observer.

From Black Swamp Church, Ohio.

Dear Editor:—Brethren and sisters, I feel like sending a short notice of the welfare and prosperity of our part of God's vineyard.

Our council was held Sept. 7th, in Wood county, Ohio, at brother Wm Garner's barn. Brother Noah Henricks is house-keeper. Brethren Whitmer and Horne, late from Perry county, Ohio, were also present. The business was transacted in love and harmony.

Next day before meeting time three persons, weary of sin, desired to unite with the church. The counsel was then taken in the usual order. The congregation then assembled and there was preaching on the subject to a reasonable congregation. Good attention was paid to the word preached. In good season we repaired to the bank of the Portage River where prayer was wont to be made, after which baptism was attended to by Brother Henricks.

As I love church news, I thought others would read with interest from our church. We are always glad to know that there are still some alive in Christ and laboring faithfully to promote and further the good cause; and to care for the tender lambs who have just entered the fold. They need the sincere milk of the word.

Lindsey, Ohio. S. FINK.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—This morning through the mercies of God I am once more permitted to write for the COMPANION, in order to let you know of my where-abouts. With this I close my labors in Kansas. I have been traveling among the scattered members of the following northwestern counties: Cloud, Republic, Washington, Jewell, and along the Nebraska line; Southward through Mitchel, Russell, Dickenson and Marion counties; eastward to Lyon, Franklin, Douglass, Anderson and Woodson counties where I now am writing at the house of brother Isaac Hershey. Here I received two letters from my son and grand-daughter, both urging me to be at home on the 19th of October. That is a little sooner than I had expected, but if the Lord is willing I expect to meet them at the specified time and place. When I left home near 11 months ago, my brethren and friends requested me to write to them, but this is the first Sunday that I did not labor since I left home; had two or three meetings every Sunday and preached every other night. I baptized 14 in Kansas, and five in Nebraska. I walked a greater part of my journey with my cane in hand, and when I came to a stream I waded through carrying my clothes. I sometimes traveled in this way 30 hours without any food. You may think this hard, but the Lord has promised to be with his children until the end of the world, and man does not live by bread alone.

Now brethren here is a wide field open. No need of asking aid for Oregon. Here you can get homes almost free, and build a house for less money than it will cost go to Oregon. At least this would be my judgment. May the blessings of God rest upon all, is the prayer of your well wisher and co-laborer.

Farewell.

M. FORNEY.

Brother Editors:—Judging others from myself, in relation to church news, we now give you the result, of our Council Meeting, held September 14th, in this our Yellow Creek branch, Bedford county, Pa. A little while ago, the church thought the harvest plenty, but the laborers few; and on the above day convened to call more laborers into the Lord's harvest. The following was the result: Joseph Replogle to the office of minister, and Levi R. Replogle to the office of deacon. The former, young in years, and young in the church. May all the saints be engaged in prayer to God in their behalf; and may God's grace, and Christian fortitude and encouragement follow him, in the most noble and responsible position that God has ever called man to fill. May he be instrumental in winning souls from the power of Satan, to God the Father, in whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning. God grant that success may crown the labors of all thy faithful children.

HOLL, PA., Sept. 24th.

Dear Brother and Sister in the Lord:—I promised brother H. R. Holsinger to write a notice of our love-feast, &c., for publication in the C. F. C., so I shall now try, in the fear of the Lord, to fulfill my promise. As has already been noticed, we, the brethren and sisters of the Duncansville congregation, appointed Thursday and Friday, September 19th and 20th, for holding our love feast. On Wednesday evening previous we had the pleasure of hearing brother H. R. H. address us at the school-house at Eldorado, from 1st John 3: 1 "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us," &c. He explained the great love the parents should have for their offspring, comparing this love to the all-abounding love the Great Father has for those of his people who daily love and serve Him. By nature the children resemble their parents; so God has instilled into us a resemblance of Him. Let us love this resemblance which we have of our heavenly Father. We can truly say that we were deeply impressed and well pleased with the sermon. Had also the pleasure of meeting sister H. and Lottie, and had, for the first time, a visit from the COMPANION family.

On Thursday, 2 o'clock P. M., the brethren and sisters met in church council, and disposed of church matters which could not be disposed of at our last church meeting. Following this, brother Brice Sell was called to the ministry, brother David Sell chosen deacon, and brother James Sell ordained. How that mother's heart must have leaped for joy, to behold her three sons and daughters taking this charge upon them. We trust they may prove faithful, especially the sisters, and greatly encourage their husbands of whom much is expected and required; and may they all, with us receive the crown of glory and a place at God's right hand. There were present of God's laborers brethren H. R. Holsinger, of Dale City: L. Furry, New Enterprise; John Holsinger, of Alum Bank; T. Maddocks, of Clover Creek; John Replogle, Yellow Creek; Samuel Cox of Warrior's Mark; G. Meyers, and those previously mentioned.

The subject of self-examination was treated upon by several of the brethren. Evening services. The 27th chapter of Matth. was read, treating upon the sufferings and death of Christ, by brother H. R. Holsinger, and spoken upon by several of the brethren. Part of the 13th chapter of John was read by brother John Holsinger, and explained, while the brethren and sisters were engaged in fully obeying the commandment of feet-washing, pronounced nonessential by many professing godliness. We wish they might all see as we do upon this all-important subject. These very important ordinances, viz., Lord's Supper, Feet-washing, Holy Communion and the kiss of charity were all celebrated by a goodly number of God's children. There was also with us many from other branches of the church. I trust we have all served our covenant with God, henceforth to live nearer the cross, and with a still brighter hope of heaven. We can not expect to all meet again around this table here below; for there were some with us at our last love-feast, not one year ago—but where are they now? Gone to reap the reward of their labors here. Little did we think that one dear brother who so touchingly addressed us at that time, should so soon be called to dwell in that world invisible to us. But we must all sooner or later pass through the same ordeal.

Friday 9th, A. M., the congregation again assembled for divine service. 1 John 3: 1—3 was taken for the text; L. Furry introducing, followed by brother S. Cox, T. Maddocks, Replogle, and H. R. Holsinger. Our feelings were deeply touched when time of separation was spoken of, for we truly had a rich feast, and how much we enjoyed the association of the dear brethren and sisters from a distance, as well as that of our own little branch. For those of our loved ones who pass from time to eternity, forcibly remind us of the question, Is it I that will be next? Let us all be prepared for that eventful change, when Christ shall call his children home to dwell in that glorious land in the garden of Eden. Farewell for the present.

E. R. STIFLER.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.
